PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 8, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee this morning with a sincere desire to know Thy will. We are brought face to face with issues that affect the welfare and happiness, the destiny, of many millions of Thy people. We desire to reflect in all our acts in this place the highest achievements of a Christian civilization. We ask Thy divine guidance and blessing upon our work this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the United States Public Health Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, in the sum of $25,000 (S. Doc. No. 193), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, calling attention to a supplemental estimate of $600 increase in the compensation of the senior Assistant Chief of the Division of Customs, which was submitted to the House of Representatives on the 26th ultimo, and requesting that on account of the activities of the Division of Customs being greatly increased during the present emergency that the supplemental estimate be included in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill (S. Doc. No. 194), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of the City Council of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for an appropriation for the early completion of the improvement of the Ohio River, and also for the enactment of legislation providing for the immediate construction by the Government of the Lake Erie and Ohio River Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. THOMPSON presented petitions of the executive council of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wichita, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Elk Falls, of the congregation of the Methodist Church of Meade, of the united congregations of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches of Sylvan Grove, of sundry citizens of Protection and Newton, and of W. B. Barton, of Caldwell, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture of foodstuffs into alcoholic drinks, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of the Ebell Society, of Los Angeles, Cal., remonstrating against the present zone system of rates on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. CURTIS presented a memorial of the Auxiliary of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of Winfield, Kans., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Chanute, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the running of railroad tracks directly opposite the Lucy Webb Hayes National Training School and the Sibley Memorial Hospital, in the city of Washington, D. C., which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Central Labor Union of Kansas City, Kans., relative to the use of unproductive land in the United States for the best interests of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Frank P. Blair Post, No. 54, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Galena; of R. B. Hayes Post, No. 176, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Pratt; and of W. T. Sherman Post, No. 113, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Concordia, all in the State of Kansas, praying for an increase in the pensions of veterans of the Civil War, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 409, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, of Parsons, Kans., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Medical Registration and Examination of the State of Kansas, of Topeka, Kans., and a petition of the Rice County Medical Society, of Sterling, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation creating advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Winchester, Kans., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENYON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Orange Township, Blackhawk County, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the cultivation of corn, wheat, and other foodstuffs on lands now used for the cultivation of tobacco, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Mount Vernon, Iowa, praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Weston, Mich., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Bay County Medical Society, of the Calhoun County Medical Society, of the Lenawee County Medical Society, and from sundry citizens of the counties of Gratiot, Presque Isle, and Clinton, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation creating an advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, about four or five weeks ago the Senate passed a bill (S. 2315) to extend the time within which final proof is required to be submitted upon any lawful pending desert-land entry made prior to July 1, 1915, such extension not to exceed three years from the date of allowance thereof.

On Monday last in the House of Representatives there was passed identically the same bill, but not the Senate bill. The House bill was sent to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I have compared the bills with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he deems it proper that the committee should be discharged from the consideration of the bill. I will then ask that the House bill be put upon its passage after it has been withdrawn from the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 175, to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes," be withdrawn from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me understand the Senator. Does the Senator say a Senate bill was reported and passed the Senate which is identical with the House bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is identical; word for word, comma for comma, period for period. I have compared it with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and also with the Representative who had charge of the bill in the House. The Senate bill passed the Senate about a month or six weeks ago, and the Member of the House desiring the same legislation, not knowing that the Senate had passed the bill, on last Monday found his bill in the House. When the House bill came here it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. So I see no reason why we should not pass the House bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The reason why the House did not pass the Senate bill was because its passage by the Senate was overlooked in the House?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was overlooked. It was referred to the same committee of which the Member of the House who had charge of the bill is a member. He introduced the bill there. There is a difference in the titles, but not in the language of the bills. I am willing to adopt his title to the bill. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 175.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for unanimous consent has not yet been granted. The Chair will put it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment. Do I understand that this bill has passed the House?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Senator is asking for the consideration of the House measure?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

I will state to the Senator, if he was not here when I made the statement, that the Senate passed Senate bill 2315 about five or six weeks ago when the calendar was called. It had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and was on the calendar and it passed the Senate. It was transmitted, of course, to the House of Representatives. The Representative there, desiring the same legislation, had previously introduced the identical bill word for word, except the title. The title is different, but the language of the bills themselves is identical. Not knowing that the Senate bill had passed the Senate, the House bill was passed last Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that, Mr. President. What I want to know is, has the bill from the House come to the Senate and been referred to the Public Lands Committee?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill. I do not see why it should ever have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but it was done. It is a bill relating to the relief of desert-land entrymen who, by reason of no fault of theirs, have not been able to get water on the land, and it gives them relief by an extension of three years and certain alternatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 175.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that this action is agreeable to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the committee is discharged from the further consideration of the bill. The Chair will state that the bill not being in the physical possession of the officers of the Senate, it can not be laid before the Senate at this particular moment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. I shall call it up at a later hour.

Mr. SHAFROTH subsequently said: Mr. President, as the Committee on Appropriations has been discharged from the further consideration of House bill 175 and it is now on the desk of the Secretary, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its consideration. I explained the bill to the Senate a while ago, and I presume no further explanation is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 175. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the last three paragraphs of section 5 of the act of March 4, 1915, "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915, and for prior years, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to any lawful pending desert-land entry made prior to March 4, 1915: Provided, That in cases where such entries have been assigned prior to the date of the act the assignees shall, if otherwise qualified, be entitled to the benefit hereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following joint resolutions, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. J. Res. 134. A joint resolution to reimburse soldiers and officers for uniforms and equipment lost on board the Tuscania February 5, 1918, and in other like cases (Rept. No. 305); and

S. J. Res. 136. A joint resolution providing for the registration for military service of the subjects or citizens residing in the United States of a foreign country with whose Government the United States has concluded or hereafter concludes a convention or agreement consenting to such aliens being drafted into the military forces of the United States under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishments of the United States," and all amendments thereto (Rept. No. 306).

PROHIBITION IN HAWAII.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3935) to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war, except as hereinafter provided, and I submit a report (No. 307) thereon. There are certain petitions accompanying the bill which I ask may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). The bill will be placed on the calendar, and the petitions will lie on the table at the request of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES (S. DOC. NO. 192).

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 209), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the report of the National Academy of Sciences for the year ending December 31, 1917, transmitted to the Senate on February 21, 1918, as provided for in the act approved March 3, 1863, be printed as a Senate document.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR NITRATE PLANT.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3994) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 303) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present and immediate consideration of this bill. It is a matter of considerable importance, although a small matter.

Last year, in June, 1917, the Senate and the House passed a law authorizing the condemnation of certain property for cantonments and other purposes. It was found that it was not broad enough to cover nitrate plants. The Government has engaged in building a nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals. They have gotten all the land for the nitrate plant. A large portion of it was given by the people and most of it was sold on very reasonable terms; but there are a few small outlying tracts where there are obdurate parties who want to ask what the Government thinks is an unreasonable price. Therefore it is desired to broaden the act that was passed giving the right to condemn property for cantonments and other military purposes so that it will include a nitrate plant, and that they may exercise the right of condemnation.

There is nothing in this bill that is not in the law except that it puts the nitrate plants in the same position as cantonments. It is necessary that these nitrate plants should be built immediately in order to get the powder supply that we need. They are in process of construction. The amount of land that is needed at this point is very small and it is absolutely necessary to get it. The only way it can be gotten is by condemnation.

The department has recommended the bill. I gave to the committee a report on the bill, a letter, from Secretary Baker that is on file. It met with the approval of the department and is urged by them.

Therefore, under those circumstances, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a unanimous report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That page 1, line 8, of an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding, after the word "camps," the following: "and for the construction and operation of plants for the production of nitrates and other compounds and the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war and for the development and transmission of power for the operation of such plants," so that the same, when amended, will read as follows:

"That hereafter the Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States, in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, temporary use thereof or other interest therein, or right pertaining thereto, needed for the site, location, construction, or prosecution of works for fortifications, coast defenses, military training camps, and for the construction and operation of plants for the production of nitrate and other compounds and the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war and for the development and transmission of power for the operations of such plants; such proceedings to be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the States wherein the proceedings may be instituted: Provided, That when the owner of such land, interest, or rights pertaining thereto shall fix a price for the same, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, shall be reasonable, he may purchase or enter into a contract for the use of the same at such price without further delay: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States donations of land and the interest and rights pertaining thereto required for the above-mentioned purposes. And provided further, That when such property is acquired in time of war, or the imminence thereof, upon the filing of the petition for the condemnation of any land, temporary use thereof or other interest therein or right pertaining thereto to be acquired for any of the purposes aforesaid, immediate possession thereof may be taken to the extent of the interest to be acquired and the lands may be occupied and used for military purposes, and the provision of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, providing that no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land is located has been given, shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended during the period of the existing emergency.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if the bill puts the authority to bring these condemnation suits into the hands of a private company, or is it required that Government officials shall bring the suit?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is granted to Government officials. There is no change in the law except to make the law, which has already been passed relating to cantonments, apply to the building of this nitrate plant. The first sentence of the bill shows the amendment to the general law. The balance of it is already the statute.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator if, in general terms, the bill means that wherever the Government sees fit to enter upon condemnation proceedings it may be done. It does not limit it to any one particular plant?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but, of course, it is only intended to be used now at one place. It does not limit it to any place. It is merely to help the Government to get property at a reasonable price; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if it refers to a specific piece of property, or is it a general power of condemnation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a general power. A general bill was passed giving general power to the Government to condemn for cantonments and other military purposes. It was not broad enough to cover the question of building a nitrate plant, and the bill simply adds to the general law the power to condemn and take property for a nitrate plant as well as for cantonments and other military purposes.

Mr. KENYON. There is no limit to the property which may be condemned for these nitrate plants?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is none in the law in reference to cantonments or other purposes. Of course the limit on the power to take anything is the appropriation. That is where the limitation comes in, but the Government in this case has the money, and there are a few tracts of outlying land. Most of this land has been acquired, but there are a few outlying pieces that are needed, and the object is merely to keep somebody from holding up the Government; that is all. The men who have these pieces of property are asking what the Government considers an unreasonable price.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES—CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit a report (S. Rept. 308) on Senate resolution 162, which I ask may first be read, and I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the report after it has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred Senate resolution 162, providing for an amendment to Rule XXVII by adding the following paragraph:

"2. Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House, and in case new matter is included, the same shall be subject to a point of order, and, upon such point of order being made by any Senator, if sustained by the presiding officer of the Senate, such new matter shall be ruled out and eliminated from the report: Provided, That the elimination of such new matter upon a point of order shall in no way affect the remainder of the conference report"— having considered the same, beg leave to report a substitute, as follows, and recommend its adoption:

"2. Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report, and if the point of order is sustained the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported by the committee as a substitute for Senate resolution 162. I think it appeals to every Senator, inasmuch as now we are beginning with the appropriation bills. If the Senate desires a rule of this kind, it ought to be adopted at once. I think the rule explains itself. It gives any Member of the Senate the right to rise to a question of order when new matter not considered by either House is put in a bill or matter has been stricken out.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to have the attention of the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire to ask this question. As I heard the report read, it provides that the conferees shall not be authorized or empowered to change any original text which has been agreed upon by both Houses.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the——

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me, I have served on conference committees where a section was under consideration, a part of which—it may be a clause—had been amended by one House or the other and the remainder of the section was left intact. I want to know if it were found in conference that it was necessary to change that part of the section which had been amended by one House, would it then be forbidden to conform the remainder of the section to the change?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not. I will say to the Senator that that provision is taken from Jefferson's Manual, while the first provision in the resolution is taken from Cleaves' Manual on Conferences and Conference Reports, which was submitted to the Senate by former Senator Allison many years ago. I have been told that the manual prepared by Mr. Cleaves, who was for many years the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, was adopted by the Senate, but I am not sure about that. However, both the propositions are sound, and they protect the Senate from the abuse with which we have so often been met. I feel sure that it will facilitate the work of the Senate and will prevent controversies that are constantly arising on these points. I hope the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that Cleaves' Manual on Conferences and Conference Reports was adopted as the result of the passage of a resolution by the Senate. This amendment to the rules is one which was offered by me, and the amendment reported by the committee is satisfactory. I hope there will be no objection to it, for if adopted it will stop legislation by conferees.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of this rule, but my recollection, from the reading of the report, is that the original resolution expressly provided that the point of order should be passed upon by the Presiding Officer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the rule as reported from the committee leaves out that express direction. Is there any special reason for that?

Mr. GALLINGER. The objection to confining the decision to the Presiding Officer is that an appeal may be taken, and the question may ultimately be decided by the Senate itself. Of course, it is the duty of the Presiding Officer to make a ruling upon a point of order, but an appeal may be taken, so that the point of order may not be absolutely settled until the appeal is acted upon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, I understand that; but have we not another rule under which the Presiding Officer could himself submit any point of order to the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think we really ought to require the Presiding Officer to pass upon a point of order which is made, subject of course to appeal to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I assume that that is what the Presiding Officer is in the Chair for, that when a point of order is made he will decide upon it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But we find very frequently that Presiding Officers in the chair do what they are not supposed to do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to inserting those words, but I think it would be supererogation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then the Senator from New Hampshire thinks that under the rule reported it would be the duty of the Presiding Officer to pass upon the point of order, subject to the right of appeal?

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I simply want that to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to say that the objectionable matter would be eliminated without affecting the balance of a conference report. As I understand the rule, it is just the reverse, and if the point of order is sustained the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. I had not intended to say that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, manifestly we can not strike any matter from a conference report. That is a power which belongs to the conference committee. All we can do under our custom is either to reject the report or in this case, if the point of order is sustained, to send the report back to the conference committee for their further consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire, but there were Senators in my neighborhood who understood the chairman of the committee to say that the effect of sustaining the point of order was simply to strike out the objectionable matter and to leave the balance of the matter for action by the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I had not intended to say that, though I may have done so inadvertently.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from North Carolina inadvertently made that observation; but that is not the intention of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought it was only proper to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the proposed rule does not assume that authority——

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But sends the entire measure back to the committee of conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Rules was, after line 4, to strike out:

2. Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House, and in case any new matter is included, the same shall be subject to a point of order, and upon such point of order being made by any Senator, if sustained by the presiding officer of the Senate, such new matter shall be ruled out and eliminated from the report, provided that the elimination of such new matter, upon a point of order, shall in no way affect the remainder of the conference report.

And insert:

2. Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is striken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report, and if the point of order is sustained, the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the standing rules of the Senate be, and they hereby are, amended as follows:

Amend Rule XXVII by adding the following paragraph:

"2. Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report, and, if the point of order is sustained, the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment which has been reported by the Committee on Rules.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JOHN M'W. FORD.

Mr. RANSDELL. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3700) for the relief of John McW. Ford, and I submit a report (No. 304) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John McW. Ford, of Shreveport, La., be, and hereby is, authorized to enter at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, lot No. 7, of section 14, township 18 north, range 14 west, Louisiana meridian, Caddo Parish, La., in virtue of his long settlement, bona fide title and possession, and valuable improvements thereon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Would it be in order to have an explanation of what this bill proposes?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Iowa that this bill relates to a small piece of land lying in the center of a plantation which Mr. Ford and the authors of his title have owned and been in actual possession of for more than 50 years. However, there seems to have been some trouble about a patent for it, and this bill simply authorizes the Commissioner of the General Land Office to sell this land to Mr. Ford at a price of not less than $1.25 an acre.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Louisiana a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Is this one of those tracts of land involved in certain other legislation about which there is very great controversy?

Mr. RANSDELL. No, sir. This land is part of a plantation near the city of Shreveport, La. Mr. Ford is the mayor of the city of Shreveport. This land is part of a plantation which he and his authors have owned for over 50 years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it is in order, I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 258, being the bill (S. 3778) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator wait until the regular order has been disposed of? I think we are proceeding under the head of "Reports of committees."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business has not yet been concluded. Reports of committees are in order. If there be no further reports of committees, bills and joint resolutions are in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 4032) to further provide for the national security and defense and for the purpose of assisting the prosecution of the war, and to provide for the assistance and appropriations by the Federal Government for the repair and maintenance of such improved highways of the several States as may, because of the extraordinary circumstances of war, be declared to be military roads; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 4033) extending the commutation privilege to enlarged homesteads; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 4034) to include members of the Russian Railroad Service Corps within the terms of the act of October 6, 1917, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). To what committee does the Senator from Minnesota desire the bill referred?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the bill has reference to the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, it ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance, as that committee dealt with the question originally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 4035) for the payment of certain claims for services rendered the United States in the construction of a building at Mare Island Navy Yard (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4053) granting an increase of pension to Hiram L. Hooton (with acompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. WATSON:
A bill (S. 4054) granting an increase of pension to Edward Foster; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:
A bill (S. 4055) to authorize the opening of a minor street from Georgia Avenue to Ninth Street NW., through squares 2875 and 2877, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not rise to introduce a bill, but simply to give a notice, which is that as soon as the Agricultural appropriation bill has been disposed of I shall ask the Senate to consider the Indian appropriation bill.
Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to know what notice the Senator has given; I did not understand him.
Mr. ASHURST. I wish to withdraw the notice I have just given, and to say that as soon as the urgent deficiency appropriation bill and the Agricultural appropriation bill have been disposed of I shall then ask the Senate to consider the Indian appropriation bill.
Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

REGISTRATION FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have, since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."
Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I understand that the morning business has not been concluded. I endeavored a few moments ago to call up a bill on the calendar and was so informed.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado make objection?
Mr. THOMAS. I think, Mr. President, in view of the fact that morning business has not been concluded, in consequence of which I was unable to make a similar request a few moments ago, that the joint resolution should not be taken up at this time.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to the request of the Senator from New Jersey, but I will be very much obliged to him if he will withhold his motion for just a moment.
Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Very well.
Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say, if the Senator will yield to me, that I want to get through with the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill at as early an hour as possible, and so I shall object to the consideration of any measure except the appropriation bill this morning. I think it will take only a short time to dispose of the appropriation bill.
Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order that morning business has not been concluded.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was a request for unanimous consent, which the Chair understands is always in order. There has been objection made, however, and that disposes of that question. Are there further bills or joint resolutions?

INTERNATIONAL MEMORIAL DAY.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I introduce the joint resolution which I send to the desk.
The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) to designate May 7 as an international memorial day in memory of those who have lost their lives in the present war was read the first time by its title.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I introduce the joint resolution after consultation with my colleague [Mr. JONES of Washington] and in response to a request of the club of fathers and mothers of men who have lost their lives in this war. At first reading my thought was that the United States up to the present moment has done so little in so far as it affects the actual progress of the war in proportion to the power and the wealth of this great country that it was scarcely time to turn aside to indulge in expressions of sentiment.
Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit the joint resolution to be read that we may learn its exact purport?
Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall be very glad to have the joint resolution read, and then I desire to say one further word in regard to it.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.
The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That May 7 be set apart by the people of the United States of America as a day of remembrance and appreciation of those who served and sacrificed in the war for world-wide democracy.
That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, instructed to invite the Governments allied with us in this war to join with the people of the United States in making May 7 international memorial day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, we have had such a wealth of speaking and writing on behalf of the Government of the United States as to what we propose to do with the disposition of the world when this war is over and such a dearth of accomplishment that would enable us to say with any effect anything at all as to the terms of peace that I hesitated to adopt the suggestion of this club; but upon reflection, Mr. President, and in appreciation and respect for the deep feeling of the mothers and fathers of men who have already given their lives in the beginning of this war, and of those who will die for their country in its further conduct, it occurred to me after all to be an appropriate suggestion, and that perhaps a due tribute of honor to the memory of these heroic dead may be an aid to the morale and to the spirit of the American people in doing something that is really worthy of the Nation in the conduct of the war.
Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in connection with the joint resolution that has been introduced by my colleague I simply want to reenforce what he has said and state that I think this is a very valuable suggestion.
It might occur to us that we should wait until the war is concluded; that some event may occur that would make a more appropriate date to commemorate the sacrifices of our people, as suggested in this letter. I doubt if that will be the case; but, at any rate, I think it is a resolution that ought to have the thoughtful and patriotic consideration by the committee to which it will be referred and by the Senate. I think the Senate will be interested in hearing read the suggestions made by those representing these fathers' and mothers' clubs who have suggested this resolution. It is short, and I ask that it be read. It is at the desk. The reasons given may not appeal to us all. In my judgment, we are in this war primarily to protect American rights, maintain American sovereignty, vindicate American honor, and insure the peace and safety of our Republic and other American Republics rather than to establish world democracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MARCH 1, 1918.

Senator WESLEY L. JONES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JONES: Members of the Club of Mothers of Men in the Service and the Soldiers and Sailors Fathers' Club, of Bellingham, believing it proper to hold in each community a memorial service each year for those who shall be a sacrifice to the cause of a world-wide democracy, and feeling that this service should be universal in the countries allied in this war, respectfully address you on this subject and ask your cooperation in presenting the matter to Congress.

It is our belief that a date should be agreed upon that will appeal to our citizens and to our allies as particularly appropriate. The fact that the assault by Germany upon the Lusitania, May 7, 1915, was the first real challenge of autocracy to the peace and security of the neutrals of the world, as well as a cowardly stroke at her enemies upon the ocean highways, appears to us to singularly fix a date in the history of the war that is coadaptable as a day of mourning; and since that one crime inspired the people of the world who cherish freedom to unite to overthrow despotic autocracies as the only surety for world peace it seems fitting that it be made a day for remembering and for appreciating the services of those who give themselves to this cause.

We feel it unnecessary to adopt a new memorial day for the soldiers and sailors of the Republic except for the fact that our allies should be interested in such a day. There would be nothing in common for all in the date set apart by our people for remembering the services of the dead of our own wars.

We therefore propose the following resolutions, or resolutions in harmony with the spirit thereof, and we trust you may find it agreeable to lay them before the Senate:

"Joint resolution.

"Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That May 7 be set apart by the people of the United States of America as a day of remembrance and appreciation of those who served and sacrificed in the war for world-wide democracy.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, instructed to invite the Governments allied with us in this war to join with the people of the United States in making May 7 international memorial day."

A similar communication is being addressed this day to Senator POINDEXTER and to Congressman HADLEY with a request that, if favorably disposed, Senator POINDEXTER join with you in presenting the matter to the Senate and that Congressman HADLEY introduce a similar resolution in the House.

Respectfully,
For the Fathers' Club,

FRANK F. SEFRIT, Chairman.
HENRY FORD.
E. L. CAVE.

For the Mothers' Club,

JENNIE M. BROWN.
MABEL HOWARD.
Mrs. JOSEPH WISE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will say that I have used in the joint resolution the language proposed by the fathers' and mothers' clubs of Bellingham. I should prefer myself some other statement of the purposes and objects of the war than that it is for world-wide democracy. I think we have been caused considerable embarrassment in the conduct of the war and our relations with belligerents and neutrals, and among our own people, by a declaration that was open to the interpretation that we had started out on a campaign to reform the governments of the world. My own opinion of the purposes and objects of this war is that it is to preserve the rights of American citizens, their lives upon the high seas, and self-determination for such form of government as we ourselves see fit to establish in our own country.

I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ACREAGE AND PRODUCTION OF TOMATOES.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 210), as follows:

Whereas a bulletin has been issued from the United States Food Administration in the following words and figures, to wit:

Canned Foods Bulletin No. 3.

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
DIVISION OF COORDINATION OF PURCHASE,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1918.

The following announcement is transmitted from the Army and Navy:

"In all industries the Army and Navy are operating under well-recognized principles in securing reasonable prices as applying to all war requirements.

"In connection with the tenders on tomatoes, the Army and Navy state that they are unwarranted in making any awards for canned tomatoes, catsup, or other tomato products, based on raw-material prices in excess of the following:

	Per ton.
"In Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, and New Jersey	$21
"In New York and Michigan	20
"In Virginia, West Virginia, and Tennessee	20
"In Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois	18
"In Missouri, Washington, Colorado, Utah, Kentucky, California, and New Mexico	15

"Further, they do not believe that the other elements of the cost of canning or packing should be permitted to result in an unreasonable price for the canned product."

In accordance with the above, all tenders already received based on a cost of raw material higher than the above have been rejected.

You are invited to submit a tender based upon prices of raw material not higher than the limits fixed by the Army and the Navy. Additional blanks for tendering your quota will be furnished on request. Tenders must be received here on or before March 15, 1918.

DIVISION OF COORDINATION OF PURCHASE,
UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION.

And

Whereas it is stated that the effect of the announcement transmitted from the Army and Navy has been to arouse the belief among the farmers of several States that the price to the growers of tomatoes has been fixed by authority of the Government at a price which to them would actually be less than the cost of production, and the effect of arousing this belief in the minds of producers even though inaccurate will be to materially decrease the production of the necessary food supplies during the current year; and

Whereas it is most important that a proper understanding of the matter shall be immediately reached: Therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture is directed to ascertain and report with what authority and for what purpose the announcement contained in said bulletin was made and what the effect of the publication thereof will be on the production during the current year of the food and foodstuffs referred to in said bulletin.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment while I explain this resolution.

The bulletin issued by the Food Administration speaks for itself; but there probably is not much information in the possession of Members of the Senate regarding the immensity to which this particular business has grown and what effect the issuance of that bulletin is having at the present moment. It is of very immediate importance, because practically within the next two weeks the acreage to be devoted to the raising of tomatoes will be determined by the farmers in almost all this immediate locality, where about 50 per cent of the total pack of tomatoes is grown. In New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland just about 50 per cent of the total pack is grown.

In order to illustrate the magnitude of the business, I will state that the total tonnage packed in the whole country is 1,311,341 tons. The total tonnage manufactured is 896,275 tons. Of the total amount manufactured, the States of Maryland, New Jersey, and Delaware pack 372,533 tons, or between 40 and 50 per cent. The States chiefly interested in this matter are Maryland—which is the largest packing State in the country, and I give them in order—193,332 tons; California, 178,012 tons; New Jersey, 107,255 tons; Virginia, 73,768 tons; and Delaware, 71,946 tons; making together 624,313 tons out of a total of less than 900,000 tons.

The Agricultural Department has made a report and issued circulars showing the acreage, the tonnage, the amount shipped, and the amount manufactured; and I ask that the schedules to which I refer, prepared officially, may be printed at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be the order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, as showing how impossible it will be to produce at these prices this foodstuff, which is in such general consumption all over the world, I have here a table, prepared I think by the Agricultural Department—I obtained it from the head of one of the bureaus in the Food Administration—showing the cost per ton of manufacturing in a large number of counties in Maryland, in two of the three counties in Delaware, and in a number of counties in New Jersey, and I shall add that to the tables to be printed.

I also have in my hand a statement showing the cost of production, prepared by the Agriculture and Home Economics Organization in Kent County, Del., which shows that on a production of 3 tons per acre the cost to the farmer is $77.90, whereas the price the farmer would receive under the price which is supposed to have been fixed is $63, leaving him a net loss of $14.90 for growing his crop. On a production of 5 tons the cost will be $100 per acre, leaving the farmer $5 profit where he expends $100 and works all the year. I also have a list of the members of the farm bureau compiling these figures; and any one knowing that community knows what a respectable body of men they are and how thoroughly every one is represented in that organization.

The disadvantage to the farmers generally of having this official statement go out is that everyone supposes that the power of price fixing in the Government is practically unlimited so far as foodstuffs are concerned. That, of course, is a misapprehension; and I am informed that the members of the Food Administration simply made this statement, transmitted to them from the Army and Navy, regarding the purchases of the Army and Navy; but the effect will be very detrimental in decreasing the acreage, and the false apprehension must be dissipated within the next 10 days or 2 weeks or this great production of more than half—nearly two-thirds—the whole pack for this year will be very greatly lessened. It is estimated the tomato acreage will decrease all the way from one-third to one-half. The result of that will be that, of course, we will be deprived of foodstuffs instead of having the amount increased.

The disadvantage of having a circular of this kind go out is that the Army and Navy and the Government purchases for the allies during this year will amount to 6,000,000 cases of tomatoes, which, at 20 cases to the ton, will make over 300,000 tons. The Army and Navy probably can get their tomatoes at about that price if they take the whole product of the Western States. Taking California, and classing Indiana for the purpose as a Western State—they are the two largest producers there—they can probably get their tomatoes at that price in those States, where the cost of raising them is not so great; but in this portion of the country, where two-thirds of this great crop is raised, the result would be to cause the men here who are sufficiently satisfied with their own judgment as to the effect on the market ultimately to raise and pack tomatoes which will ultimately be shipped from the East to the West to supply the local needs in the Western States, swept bare by Government purchases, and the prices will so be raised to everybody.

The whole thing is very largely the result of a misapprehension of the power of the Food Administration. It is misunderstood almost universally by the farmers in this section, who think that the Food Administration has actually fixed a price at which they can sell their tomatoes, which, of course, the Food Administration has not attempted to do, and which it could not do under any law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I hope the distinguished Senator will not make the remark he has just made in too positive a manner. I agree with him that there is no law giving the Food Administration the right to fix prices, but I do not agree with him that the Food Administration has not fixed prices. It has done it repeatedly, and it undertakes to assert that it has a legal right so to do. I am not familiar with just what it has been trying to do with tomatoes. I am interrupting the Senator, perhaps, too long.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; I am glad to yield to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I can illustrate what I have in mind by what has taken place with reference to some products.

The bill that we passed creating the Food Administration gave it just exactly the same power with reference to fixing the price of wheat as it did with reference to fixing the price of any other food product; no more and no less. There was a clause in the bill that provided that the Government would guarantee a minimum price of $2 a bushel for next year's crop; but the power, I repeat, to fix a price for wheat is no greater than the power to fix the price of tomatoes.

The Food Administration did have power given to them to license dealers. They proceeded to license the board of trade men, and they proceeded to license the millers. When they licensed the board of trade men, they instructed them that they must not pay more than certain prices for wheat, and they also specified the commissions that the board of trade men would be allowed to charge.

They then instructed the millers that they must buy from the board of trade men alone, except I believe wheat that was hauled in in wagons. So the effect was that the board of trade man had the price fixed he was to pay the farmer, then the price fixed at which he was to sell to the miller, and the miller was to purchase alone from the board of trade man except these small quantities that come in by wagon lots. That took away from the farmer any place in the world to sell his wheat except to the board of trade men, and he had to take the price they offered save and except he should undertake to ship wheat to foreign countries, an impracticable thing for an individual farmer to do.

That was met by the organization of the Wheat Export Co. and the creation of a single purchasing agency for the allies, and Mr. Hoover, according to the written statement and charge of Secretary McAdoo, became that agent. Consequently that source of market was cut off or controlled so that the price of wheat has been effectively fixed in every market of the United States.

Now, this licensing proposition has been extended and is being rapidly extended. I am coming to the Senator's tomatoes. I am glad somebody else's product is getting into this hopper. The licensing provision with reference to grocery stores has been so extended that to-day you can not go into a grocery store in the city of Washington and buy any quantity of wheat flour unless you are compelled at the same time you get your wheat flour to purchase certain other products—oatmeal or rice or rye flour or barley flour or bran shorts or middlings. Thus the licensing power is being employed.

Now, without having the actual evidence, I have not the slightest doubt that it is the purpose of the Food Administration to fix a price on tomatoes, that it is no case of misunderstanding, but it is a case of deliberate purpose and intent, and if the power has not been granted to fix prices it is the purpose of the Food Administration to exercise the power of licensing so as to force the fixation of prices.

Therefore I venture to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I think his remarks in part will be found to be inaccurate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, of course I am aware that the power to license may in a large measure be used for controlling the prices of a product. The licensing power, as I understand it, has been granted and has been used or will be used only for the purpose of preventing extortionate prices on the part of manufacturers.

My object in presenting these figures and calling them to the attention of the Senate was that I may hereafter be able to place the responsibility of this matter on any official of the Government who may be derelict in the performance of his duty, or who may be too efficient in performing his duty.

I want to say, however, I have the assurance there was no intention on the part of the Food Administration to attempt to fix prices to growers of this raw product for the factories. The effect, however, of the mere issuance of a circular with seeming authority will be that the product itself will not be grown and that the prices will go higher probably than they would have been if nothing had been said about it.

I may say now that the prices last year were very much higher; that they were three times as high as the prices given in this circular. For example, tomatoes grown in Delaware sold per basket for a dollar and upward. At a price of $21 a ton, spoken of in this circular, the price is 35 cents per basket. So you will see that about three times the price was obtained last year for what this year there seems to be a figure fixed at less than the cost of production. Of course the Food Administration did not intend to do that. This is all mixed up with contracts for the Army and Navy where they probably can not get what the Army and Navy need except by bringing the most of it here from California. The people of this country will need for their tables the very necessary foodstuff which is produced in the form of canned tomatoes and tomato paste and catsup, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. REED. What business has the Food Administration to undertake to fix the price of the product the Army is going to buy?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Food Administration, I understand, has not attempted to do that.

Mr. REED. Then why do they send out that circular? What business had they to do it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no idea why the circular was sent out. It is apparently information given by the Food Administration as to what the Army and Navy proposes to do with regard to contracts. The difficulty about it is the immense comparative amount purchased for the use of the Army and the Navy and for our allies. The effect, however, will not be, in my humble judgment, to reduce the price of canned tomatoes, but the pack in the eastern section of the country will be much reduced because the effect of the circular will be to prevent the growing of raw materials for the pack because farmers can not grow at the price named.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator made the interesting statement that the principal source of supply of tomatoes for the Army would come from California. If the farmers of New Jersey are discouraged by the fixation of price I should like to be informed by the Senator why, in his judgment, California is able to come into this distant market with a cheaper product, having to pay the cost of transportation?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I assume that there must have been some intelligence shown somewhere in fixing the price of tomatoes. Although possibly so far as the price fixed in this part of the country is concerned I may not be justified in that assumption. Now, at $15 per ton, the price indicated for certain Western States, the Army and Navy can purchase tomatoes for Government use at the price they have agreed upon.

Mr. PHELAN. Following this particular phase of the question, I desire, in good part, to inform the Senator from Delaware, as he is desiring doubtless to inform the farmers of his region, that recently the Government has entered into a contract I am informed for a very large supply of dried vegetables. The Senator has referred to the pack. He must mean vegetables packed in tin cans.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I referred to canned goods.

Mr. PHELAN. I understand now the department has ordered very large quantities of dried vegetables to obviate the necessity of using tin and reducing the cost of transportation. When the Senator speaks of ton weight, I should like to know whether he refers to canned goods or to possibly dried vegetables.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I refer to canned goods entirely. The table of the Department of Agriculture will show that.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to know, in helping the discussion of this question, whether the Senator is aware that the farmers of his region prepare dried vegetables?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I know that. From the time I have been a boy down, there have been driers on many of the farms. We used to have a tremendous amount of dried fruit. That has been so long ago that I do not like to remember how long it has been.

Mr. PHELAN. The figures, I understand, given by the Senator relate only to canned vegetables?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Entirely so, to canned tomatoes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply wish to say to the Senator that tomatoes at $15 a ton are $5 less than good hay sells for. They are a little bit cheaper than wood is by the cord. A man who does not know any more about the raising of vegetables than to fix the price of tomatoes at less than the price of hay does not even know enough to be Food Administrator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have no desire to criticize any branch of the Government in regard to anything that there is simply a tangle about. My hope and my belief is that the exploitation of this question will bring the various branches of the Government into coordination, and that somehow, somewhere, in a very short time they may get together and be able to disabuse the minds of the producers of food of the impression that they have created.

I again ask that the tables to which I have referred may be printed as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APPENDIX.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF CROP ESTIMATES,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1918.

ACREAGE AND PRODUCTION OF TOMATOES IN 1917.

From reports received in the Bureau of Crop Estimates, United States Department of Agriculture, it is estimated there were produced in 1917 in the States named below 1,311,341 tons of tomatoes on a harvested acreage of 343,186 acres.

The acreage and tonnage shipped includes that portion of the crop which is shipped to a more or less distant market, consumed in home markets, etc.

The acreage and tonnage manufactured includes that portion of the crop which is canned or consumed in the manufacture of pulp, soups, etc. This data is based upon returns received from 1,679 firms and individuals engaged in canning or otherwise manufacturing tomatoes in 1917 out of a total of 1,900 firms, as near as may be, or about 88 per cent of all firms so engaged. The acreage manufactured was secured by deducting the per cent of the acreage contracted for that was not planted, the per cent of the acreage that was abandoned, and the tonnage, expressed in terms of acres, that was not delivered on contracted acreage. To this was added the tonnage, expressed in terms of acres, which was purchased in the open market. The tonnage manufactured was secured by multiplying the acreage manufactured by the yield per acre as reported by the canneries. It is to be noted here that not all of the acreage grown for manufacture nor all of the tonnage bought outside of contracts is covered in the above report.

Maryland, New Jersey, and Delaware pack, 372,533, nearly 50 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I consider this a very timely resolution, and I am very glad, indeed, that the Senator from Delaware has seen proper to introduce it.

Whether the Food Administration has power to fix prices or not does not matter to a very great extent with regard to this resolution. I want to say that I represent in part a State that produces more tomatoes than any other State in the Union, and the talk about fixing the price of tomatoes has gone out into my State. The farmers of my State say they can not raise them for that price, and it has created a very bad effect upon their minds. The probabilities are that if this impression were allowed to continue it would decrease the amount of tomatoes raised in all States of the Union. Last year people paid far more than this year for them, and if the impression goes abroad that $21 is a price for raising tomatoes in my State, or in any of the States of the East, they will not get half the supply that they require. I hope that this matter will be so arranged, probably with the Food Administration, that they will disabuse the mind of the farmer quickly, because the time will shortly arrive when they will proceed to contract for acreage for tomatoes.

I think this is a very timely resolution, and I am very glad it has been introduced by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I only want to second the efforts of the Senator from Delaware in offering this resolution. As I understand the resolution, it empowers the Agricultural Committee to inquire of the Food Administration the reasons for fixing the price on tomatoes at practically less than the cost of production. My State produces a large amount of this product for canning purposes. We have two large food manufactories in the State. It is very important for the production of canned tomatoes, which are needed for the United States Army at this time, that the production should be kept up and that the farmers of the State should know where they are as far as prices are concerned. If this price stands, I am told that the production will fall from 20 to 30 per cent. I therefore hope that the resolution will pass.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Can the Senator from New Jersey give an estimate of what is the average cost of the production of tomatoes?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; I can not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I heartily concur in the resolution. I think it ought to go to the extent of an inquiry as to fixing maximum prices on all agricultural products. It was never the intention that a maximum price should be fixed in any of the legislation concerning agricultural products. It invariably makes a question as to what the farmer is to raise and whether or not he will be entitled to get a profit. The maximum price is something that can not be ascertained well in these days, when labor is going up constantly and other costs that the farmer is put to are increasing.

The object of the legislation with regard to the Food Administration, as I understand it, was to fix a minimum price and then let the question of supply and demand determine as to what the farmer would do in regard to planting which would insure him against any loss, and then let the question of supply and demand determine the market price of the product. That was the intention of the Food Administration bill, and consequently it was for that purpose that there was incorporated a minimum price—a guaranteed price.

Mr. President, if we do not do that it is going to cut off production not only in tomatoes but in nearly everything else that is grown, and you will find that instead of increasing the production a decrease will result, because this complaint does not exist only as to tomatoes but as to many other products, such as wheat and grains.

These are conditions, Mr. President, that we want to handle so as to obtain the largest production. Wheat at a high price is a great deal better than no wheat at all. Consequently, a high price for wheat is nothing in its effect on consumers as compared with the fact that the grain does not exist with which to feed the people. The farmer has been compelled to submit to unremunerative prices when supply exceeded demand, and it is not fair to him to deprive him of an increased price when conditions are favorable.

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, that I hope the inquiry will be made and that the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] made an inquiry a moment ago to know the average cost of the production of tomatoes. I have some figures with me, handed to me by one of the largest, most intelligent, and most progressive farmers of Sussex County, Del. That county is a very large tomato-growing county. In 1917 it cost this grower of tomatoes about $90 an acre to grow his tomatoes. His average yield, he tells me, was 3½ tons to the acre. That made the cost to him last year twenty-five dollars and seventy-odd cents a ton.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does that cost contain a charge for the value of the land, or was it just the cost of production after he owned the land?

Mr. WOLCOTT. This gives the cost of production, and it includes the tax that he has to pay per acre on his land; and that is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But it does not include the rental of the land?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No. I should say, however, that he tells me further that the cost of growing tomatoes in the year 1918 will be at least a third more than last year, and he gives me a relative statement of the cost of the things which he has to buy to grow an acre of tomatoes. As showing a comparison between 1917 and this year in the matter of cost to the farmer, he gives me this information, which is verified by numerous other farmers who have but recently talked to me: In 1917 he paid for his seed $2; the cost to him in 1918 is $6. In 1917 his phosphate, dependent of course upon the grade bought, cost from $25 to $30 a ton; in 1918 the cost of his phosphate, dependent upon the grade, is $36, $42, or $48 a ton. The stable manure that he used in 1917 cost him $3.20 a ton, and in 1918 he is paying $4.20 a ton. This stable manure is procured and shipped down from Philadelphia, there not being enough of it produced on the farm.

The labor in 1917 cost him from $1.25 to $1.50 a day, while in 1918 it costs him $2.50 and $3 a day. That, I know, is accurate, for I had occasion just recently to employ some laborers at Dover, Del., about 40 miles from where this man lives, and I had to pay $2.50 and $3 a day. His baskets in 1917 cost 9 cents apiece, while in 1918 the cost will be not less than 12 cents. I am advised that the price for a basket is, in fact, now 15 cents.

The cost of raising tomatoes, therefore, is at least a third more this year than it was last. So if it cost him last year $90 an acre to grow his tomatoes, it will cost him this year $120 an acre. If his average yield this year is the same as it was last year, it is going to cost him to raise tomatoes $34.43 a ton, and yet he is asked to take $21 a ton for the tomatoes.

Mr. President, I think this resolution should be passed, for it is vitally necessary, if that is a just figure, that something be done immediately, for it comes to me from all over Delaware—and the peninsula of Delaware and Maryland, with the State of New Jersey, grow, I think, about 85 per cent of the tomato crop in the country—from all over Delaware it comes to me that if the farmers must take for their tomatoes the price that is asked, they will not put them in the ground.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, can the Senator from Delaware indicate by what authority anyone is undertaking to fix a maximum price for the farmer on his tomatoes? I am not familiar with any legislation which has conferred an authority of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, if the Senator from Delaware will pardon me, I will say that all over my State, which is one of the largest tomato-producing States of the country, $21 per ton has been fixed as the price for tomatoes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Delaware will pardon me just one moment——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to say that that surely must be a mistake. I can not believe anyone has undertaken to fix a maximum price on a farm product. Our legislation simply looked toward preventing the middleman from manipulating the price of a product after it passed from the farm and selling it to the consumer at an extortionate price.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the Senator will pardon me, I think I can explain the situation. Mr. President, there has been no attempt on the part of the Food Administration to fix a price upon tomatoes. When I heard of the state of mind of the farmers down in my State concerning the tomato situation I called upon Mr. Hoover on last Monday morning and asked if it were true. I agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that there is no authority anywhere in the food-control law vested in any officer to fix the prices of food products in the hands of the producer. When that bill was here under discussion it was unanimously the opinion of Senators that it was an unwise policy to confer any authority to fix prices upon food products.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I think there was no authority to fix the price on sugar in the hands of the producer, but it has been fixed. It was stated that it was a voluntary engagement, or they eliminated the middleman, but there is no question that they manage in practice to fix the price on sugar.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Delaware is correct when he says that there is no authority in the law to fix prices for the producer. Technically speaking that is true, but it was asserted here upon the floor of the Senate over and over again by those who were opposed to the passage of the law in the form that it passed that the authority which was given would result in the fixing of prices to the producer.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has the Senator from Idaho concluded?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I yield to the Senator from Georgia, who apparently desires to make some comment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That statement, I think, had reference especially to wheat. We put the exchanges, the elevators, and the entire wheat market practically in the control of the Food Administration. Therefore, as to wheat, we determined that we must fix a minimum price in order to guard the farmer. Perhaps we did not do as much as we should have done; but I do not think it was considered that all food products were put in charge of the Food Administration so that it could control prices.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I think I am correct in the statement that those who favored the food-control bill, so far as I can now recall, were unanimously of the opinion that those who opposed it because it would result in the fixing of prices were wrong. Those who favored that bill thought there would be no attempt on the part of the Food Administrator to control prices of products in the hands of the farmer. I agree, however, that the Food Administration has, by reason of the licensing provision of the food-control act, which is designed to reach the middleman—the hoarder—perverted its power under that license provision to actually control prices.

Mr. President, Congress never intended to grant to any man the right to fix the price of the product in the hands of the man who produced it on the farm. Why, I am told down in Delaware they have gone not only so far as to undertake to control the price of wheat, but they have, by means of the licensing system, made it impossible for a farmer to sell a hen to a corner grocery store. That is the condition there. How do they do it? Mr. President, I have not looked into it; but my theory is that the man who has the license to sell food in the grocery store has been told by somebody that if he buys a hen from a farmer before the 30th of April, I believe it is, his license will be taken away. So the market for hens is cut off. I mention that to illustrate the extent to which this power has gone. But, Mr. President, we are getting far afield from this particular resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I am exceedingly glad that the tomato has appeared upon the scene. It may be the rat at the dike which being discovered will save the situation, because precisely that which the officials are doing with reference to tomatoes they are doing with other products which are of equal importance, and the investigation, therefore, should not be confined to tomatoes alone. The question should be, whether or not we are going to enter upon a price-fixing program, because that is precisely what is being done. It may not be technically the fixing of a price, but the manipulation of the machinery results in the fixing of a price to the producer. If you fix a price anywhere, it results in fixing the price all along the line.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BORAH. And there is no doubt, Mr. President, but that is the program which is initiated and the program which is to be carried out, unless we seriously enter upon the queston and reconsider the program in its entirety.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If that is the program, I for one am unalterably and uncompromisingly opposed to it. We have had in the coal situation a sample of trying to put prices down below where the producer of the commodity can expect to get along. If I am correctly informed the price was fixed at a figure where the more expensively operated mines could not produce at that price at all and had to quit. What we wanted was coal; we were not so much concerned about the price of it; we wanted the coal.

Applying the same principle to this case, what the Government wants and what the people want is not so much unreasonably cheap tomatoes, but they want tomatoes and they want wheat and they want corn; and any attempt on the part of somebody here in Washington to fix the price which the farmers are to receive for their products is born of an unwisdom, Mr. President, that I can hardly conceive of as existing in the minds of men vested with responsible authority.

I am told—I can not vouch for this upon my own information—but I am told that one farmer who was down here to protest against the price fixed upon tomatoes as a price impossible for him, was told, "If you can not grow tomatoes at that price go home and grow something else."

Mr. REED. Who told him that, and where was he told that?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That was not at the Food Administration; but some man, I think, connected with the Army or Navy is alleged to have said that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, if my colleague will permit me, the same statement was made to me, and I took the trouble to investigate it. I will say that it is entirely disavowed on the part of anybody connected with the Army and Navy, where I heard the statement had been made.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am very glad, Mr. President, that my colleague, then, can remove that remark from consideration, because it is a thing that tends to anger men. I did not, as I said in making the statement, give it upon my own responsibility; it was just told me.

But in justice, Mr. President, to the Food Administration, this should be said: If I am correctly advised by Mr. Hoover, the Food Administration has had nothing to do with the fixing of this price. Last Monday I called upon Mr. Hoover to learn if it was true, and he said it was not; that he conceived he had no authority to fix such a price; that the Food Administration had not done it, and did not contemplate doing it. I then told him that it was the impression throughout the whole tomato region that the Food Administration had fixed this price and that it would be advisable for him to say something that would remove that impression, because it was going to reduce the acreage. He said he would be glad to do so, and I thought I had arranged that he would give out a proper interview.

What happened, as he explained it to me, was this: The Army and the Navy are in the market for about 35 per cent of the tomato pack; they have been endeavoring to ascertain what would be a fair price for the Army and the Navy to pay for canned tomatoes; they have gone into the cost elements of the pack, and, after a long investigation, in the course of which they got data from the Food Administration and information from various agricultural county agents, made up a list of cost items, and from that cost list they put down as a fair price to the farmer $21 a ton. So they have notified the packers: "We will pay you this price"—I do not know exactly what it is—"for 35 per cent of the pack; and this price is based on $21 a ton for the raw product." So some one has given out the information that all the farmers can get is $21 a ton.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Is it not a fact that, whether or not they have the right to fix such a price, or whether or not they have fixed it, the impression has been created in the minds of the farmers, not only in my State but, I have no doubt, in the State of the Senator from Delaware, that $21 a ton is the price that is going to be paid?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Unquestionably.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The result of that impression, of course, is that the farmers will not undertake to raise tomatoes. It seems to me that it behooves the Food Administration to relieve the farmers of that impression; otherwise, as this is the time for contracting for the acreage, there will not be packed one-half the tomatoes that otherwise would be packed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Unquestionably.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Whether such statements are true or not, something should go out to relieve the minds of the farmers and to assure them that no such price has been fixed by the Food Administration.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Unquestionably; and I will say to the Senator that Mr. Hoover expressed to me a willingness to give an interview or to make an announcement in the press that the price had not been fixed; but inasmuch as the Army and Navy is a large purchaser of the pack—of 35 per cent of the pack—of course, to the extent of that large purchase the price is $21 a ton, if the Army and Navy does not increase its figures.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator's statement is that Mr. Hoover disclaims attempting to fix the price of tomatoes; that he takes the position that the Army and Navy have simply agreed on what they will pay; and that he has nothing to do with fixing the price?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is correct; yes, sir.

Mr. REED. Now, I want to know why he sent out this circular, then. What did the Food Administration have to do with the question? Why it should go out as Bulletin No. 3, "Canned Goods," under the heading "United States Food Administration, Division of Coordination of Purchases," and why it should be signed "Division of Coordination of Purchases, United States Food Administration," unless it was the intent of the Food Administration to fix the price?

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator does that bulletin publish the notice of $21 a ton for tomatoes?

Mr. REED. The bulletin is very short; it was introduced by the colleague of the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have not seen it.

Mr. REED. It is headed "United States Food Administration." I will ask the senior Senator from Delaware if he has the original in his possession?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have an original copy of the order that was sent out.

Mr. REED. It reads:

Canned Foods Bulletin No. 3.

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
DIVISION OF COORDINATION OF PURCHASE,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1918.

The following announcement is transmitted from the Army and Navy:

"In all industries the Army and Navy are operating under well-recognized principles in securing reasonable prices as applying to all war requirements.

"In connection with the tenders on tomatoes the Army and Navy state that they are unwarranted in making any awards for canned tomatoes, catsup, or other tomato products based on raw-material prices in excess of the following:

	Per ton.
"In Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, and New Jersey	$21
"In New York and Michigan	20
"In Virginia, West Virginia, and Tennessee	20
"In Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois	18
"In Missouri, Washington, Colorado, Utah, Kentucky California, and New Mexico	15

"Further, they do not believe that the other elements of the cost of canning or packing should be permitted to result in an unreasonable price for the canned product."

In accordance with the above all tenders already received based on a cost of raw material higher than the above have been rejected.

You are invited to submit a tender based upon prices of raw material not higher than the limits fixed by the Army and the Navy. Additional blanks for tendering your quota will be furnished on request. Tenders must be received here on or before March 15, 1918.

DIVISION OF COORDINATION OF PURCHASE,
UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION.

Now I want to ask the Senator if, upon reading that, he would not understand that there had been established some division for the coordination of purchases, and that the Army were purchasing now through this division of coordination, of which the Food Administration was the chief and the head, and that the Food Administration was sending out this price list?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. President; I would not necessarily understand that. I am not familiar with the details of the organization set up by the Food Administration; but, since looking at this circular, I would infer that the Food Administration had set up a division or bureau of some kind into which would come all information concerning the purchase of food on the part of any agency of the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For the Army or the Navy or the allies.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and, as it should be, the Army and the Navy, being in the market for this product, had let the coordinating division of the Food Administration know of it and had therefore transmitted its request, so to speak, or its announcement, to the Food Bureau, so that that information could be there lodged and coordinated with any other information coming from any other source, and the circular itself——

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that tenders might be invited on that basis.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. The circular itself shows, Mr. President, that the fixing of this price is not chargeable to the Food Administration, because the language is, "The following announcement is transmitted from the Army and Navy"; so that, I think, the circular does not at all tend to disprove Mr. Hoover's statement to me that the Food Administration had not fixed this price.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator tell us why the Food Administration, then, sent out a matter that concerned only the Army and the Navy?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can not tell the Senator, unless it was for the purpose of advertising the fact and getting bids in. But I am not concerned, Mr. President, so much about who is doing it. What I am concerned about is the fact that it is done.

Just as I stepped in this door I left a farmer who is spending some time in Washington now. He is not active on the farm, but he has relatives farming down in this tomato country. He told me he had a letter from his brother-in-law down in Sussex County, saying: "I understand we can only get $21 a ton for tomatoes. Find out if this is so. If it is so, I plant no tomatoes. I am not going to plant until I hear from you." I told him what the facts were, and I think perhaps there will be some acreage put out there, although he tells me he thinks not so much.

It is very necessary that something should be done to correct this thing, which is, I think, a wrong not only to the farmer but to the Army and Navy and to the country, because, if it goes through, the product is not going to be grown, and if it is not going to be grown there is going to be a wrong done to the Army and Navy.

I think my colleague renders a very admirable service in calling this matter to the attention of the Senate by his resolution, and I sincerely hope that it will pass.

Mr. REED addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Evidently I shall not be able to get a vote on this resolution to-day, as I had hoped, and may I ask——

Mr. REED. I will stop and let the Senator have a vote, if he wants it, right now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should be extremely glad if I could get a vote on the resolution to-day, but I would not ask the Senator to suspend his remarks. I was only going to ask the Presiding Officer that the resolution might go over, so that it will come up to-morrow as a resolution coming over from a previous day, and not be referred or go to the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if we reach the hour of 2 o'clock before the discussion is concluded, I believe that the unfinished business could be temporarily laid aside so that a vote can be had on this resolution, and I believe the Senate would be glad to vote on it to-day.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not want to ask the Senator to suspend his remarks.

Mr. REED. I am willing to suspend at this minute. I intend to address the Senate upon the matter I am speaking of, and I am speaking now without having fully prepared.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not suspend. I think this discussion ought to go on. The Agricultural Committee is now investigating this general agricultural subject, and it is a very good thing to have some debate on it. It is helpful to the committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. With the permission of the Senator who has the floor, I want to say that this is a matter which needs to be attended to immediately. This action must be taken within two weeks or the harm is done.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that the Agricultural Committee have been holding sessions for two weeks, and they have had before them witnesses from different parts of the country on the various phases of the agricultural situation and the stock situation. It is true that we have not taken up the matter of the catsup situation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Missouri is willing to let this resolution be voted upon, and then continue with his speech.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I so understand. I hope the resolution will be allowed to pass.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to make this suggestion to the Senator from Iowa. It is true that the Committee on Agriculture has had this subject broadly before it, but here is a concrete proposition with which we could deal speedily, probably in 24 hours. I think it especially desirable that the resolution of the Senator from Delaware should be adopted to-day, and I hope we will pass it.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will produce the witnesses before the committee, I am sure we will not need any resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it would be much better to have the resolution adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The point about it is to relieve the impression upon the minds of the farmers.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask that a vote be now had upon the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 9314.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. CURTIS. I raise the point of no quorum. Many Senators are absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sterling
Baird	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Stone
Beckham	Kellogg	Page	Sutherland
Colt	Kendrick	Pittman	Swanson
Culberson	Kenyon	Poindexter	Thomas
Curtis	Kirby	Pomerene	Thompson
Fletcher	Knox	Ransdell	Tillman
France	Lewis	Reed	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Saulsbury	Underwood
Gallinger	McCumber	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard	Warren
Hale	McNary	Smith, Ariz.	Watson
Harding	Martin	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Henderson	Myers	Smith, Md.	Williams
Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, S. C.	Wolcott
Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smoot

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. JAMES] by reason of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] on account of pressing official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] due to illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

FOOD AND FUEL ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is trouble in the tomato States. The Food Administration has sent out a circular so drawn as to leave the impression that the prices of Delaware, New Jersey, and Maryland tomatoes are to be fixed at $21 per ton, wherefore consternation reigns. There is also some mild evidence of incipient indignation, but the dominant note is bewilderment. [Laughter.] The Senators from those States, in open-mouth astonishment, are asking, "Is it possible that the Food Administration we helped to set up is about to lay unholy hands upon our sacred tomato patches?" They are wondering if the authority it was expected would be executed upon the wheat fields and cattle ranches of the Middle West is to ruthlessly invade the truck farms of Delaware, New Jersey, and Maryland, where hitherto has reposed in luxurious security the glorious tomato. [Laughter.]

Even now, with the unwelcome evidence crowding hard upon them, these Senators express a doubt that the Food Administration has really entered upon a general plan of fixing the prices farmers are to be permitted to receive for their products.

The doubts can not be long entertained. Mr. Hoover not only has entered upon such a plan, but now asserts his legal right to fix prices on farm products.

It is true that when the food-control bill was pending Mr. Hoover did not so claim, per contra, he vehemently asserted that "there was no price fixing in the bill," and especially that there was in it no authority to control the prices of the producer. I quote brief excerpts from his testimony delivered before the Agricultural Committee June 19, 1917, part 1, page 11:

> There are * * * a number of current illusions about the legislation proposed; the first is the illusion in some quarters that the bill is directed against the producer. It would not be necessary to traverse this statement to anyone that had read the bill. It especially excepts the producer from every one of its provisions, with the exception of one section, and that is the provision for a guaranty [of $2 per bushel for wheat]; and this section is designed to entirely benefit and secure the producer. The savings of the American consumer ought not and should not be made by a sacrifice on the part of the producer. They should be made by the exclusion of speculative profits from the handling of our foodstuffs.
> The second illusion is that there is price fixing by this bill. There is no provision for price fixing, and no such thing can be carried out under the bill.

Again, he says on page 48:

> I rather wish to object to the term "Government-fixed price." Our idea is not to do that at all, but to buy a surplus of wheat which may flow from the farmers in this country for the farmers' own protection. If there is no surplus, then we shall probably not be intervening at all.

At page 44 he reiterates:

> There is no provision [in the bill] for fixing prices.

On the sugar hearings Mr. Hoover's attention was directly called to a portion of this testimony. He admitted having made the statements, and yet asserted that the right to fix prices, which he called "stabilizing prices," was to be found in section 2 of the act, which reads as follows:

> SEC. 2. That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to enter into any voluntary arrangements or agreements, to create and use any agency or agencies, to accept the services of any persons without compensation, to cooperate with any agency or person, to utilize any department or agency of the Government, and to coordinate their activities so as to avoid any preventable loss or duplication of effort or funds.

His testimony will be found at page 649 of the sugar hearings, and should be read by all who are interested in examples of candor.

Unless there are Senators who can distinguish between "controlling" a price and "fixing" a price, the report filed by Mr. Hoover on January 19, 1918, may be regarded as conclusive evidence that he not only asserts the right to fix prices but that he is fixing prices. He states, at page 10:

> The first control instituted was that of wheat, the second sugar, the third a general control of all the more important commodities, with special reference to the control of the wholesale trade, and the fourth the control of bakers.

It will not be denied that the prices of cattle, hogs, and sheep have likewise been fixed and that the prices of other farm products are being rapidly fixed. I call attention to the fact that a mere suggestion of price control is in itself disturbing, if not ruinous. Indeed, this is the position taken by the Senators from Delaware, New Jersey, and Maryland.

Their tomatoes have been scarcely touched—indeed, they are not yet planted—and they utter a chorus of protests. They agree that whether Mr. Hoover has actually undertaken to fix a price for the coming crop of tomatoes or has only sent out a circular announcing that the Army will not pay more than $21 per ton, a decrease in the crop is certain to result, because if the farmer can not sell his tomatoes for a fair price he will not plant. It is also agreed that the consumer will be injured quite as much as the producer. Of course, both conclusions are undeniable.

The Senators justly resent the fixation of prices below the cost of production. They are also justly indignant that an attempt should be made to fix prices unless authority has been granted by the law of the land.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And even then, unless it is intelligently fixed with a due regard to the cost of production and a fair profit.

Mr. REED. The statement of the Senator from Georgia is so apt that I gladly adopt it as my own.

May I be pardoned if I digress a moment to remind you that when the food-control bill was pending I persistently warned the Senate and the country that it would be employed to fix the price of the farmers' products? I stood here days imploring you not to pass a bill that would result in discouraging the farmers of the great Middle West—the granary of the world. I told you then that discouragement to the farmer meant a curtailment of food products, and that a curtailment of food products ultimately meant famine prices for the consumer. I besought you especially not to turn the prosperity of the great agricultural portion of our population over to a man ignorant alike of farming, stock raising, and of American conditions. I told you that only those who intend to employ power are greedy to acquire it; that the ambition that lusts for power will abuse power. I warned you that the licensing authority would be employed for the purpose of controlling the markets of the country, and that whoever controlled the markets would thereby control prices of the producer as well as the merchant.

But Senators who to-day so vigorously protest would not then believe that an attempt would be made to arbitrarily fix the price of any farm product. They refused assent to the proposition that the licensing clause of the bill would be employed for any other purpose than to arrest the practice of "profiteers engaged in trade in the cities." Indeed, it may be safely stated such was the view of Congress.

Let the indignant protests to which we have just listened be my justification for opposition to the enactment of the food-control bill. Let them be my excuse for again asking you to review this unfortunate and arbitrary legislation and its even more unfortunate and tyrannical administration.

Mr. President, I speak out of no spirit of resentment. If I mention individuals it is only because they are exponents of certain policies which I regard as indefensible. These policies in my opinion have, to an alarming degree, reduced the war efficiency of the United States. Men in some instances innocent of knowledge of economic facts and laws, in others devoid of experience in practical affairs of life, have recklessly assumed despotic sway over the properties other men have created and exercise their usurped authority with the rash abandon of spendthrifts who suddenly inherit fortunes gathered by the toil and sacrifice of others. The result is certain to bring disaster. It is to avoid a national calamity I once more rise in protest.

Senators, with much feeling, declaim against the assault of the Food Administration upon their tomatoes. In discussing the tomato question let me, on their account, maintain an attitude of profound deference, if not of reverence. Albeit, in benighted Missouri the tomato is still placed in the category of farm by-products and ignominiously labeled "garden sass." Candor compels the admission that in the long flight of centuries it has risen from humble obscurity to a position of proud eminence among the agricultural products of Delaware, New Jersey, and Maryland. [Laughter.] None the less, with all due and proper respect to the tomato, I venture to remark that if the crop were entirely wiped out it would not greatly weaken our battle line in France. On the other hand, if the wheat crop is materially reduced, if our meat supplies are seriously diminished, the injury will be irreparable. It may mean our defeat and our disgrace.

If it be true, as Senators from the "tomato States" assert, that the fixation of too low a price for tomatoes will stop their production, then is it not also true that the fixation of too low a price for wheat will reduce the wheat crop, and the fixation of too low a price for hogs will reduce the hog crop? It is indisputable that such a result will most seriously impair our ability to win the war.

Mr. President, the time for day dreaming has passed. The time for blunders ought to be past. The time has arrived when blunderers ought to be forced to cease making wreckage of the industries of the land. Blunderers should be immediately reduced to private life.

The fundamental mistake made by all regulators is that they insist upon setting up their individual and usually uninformed opinions against the common judgment of mankind, for, mark you, it is the common judgment of mankind that fixes world prices, and if it is allowed to operate undisturbed, fixes them infallibly. When, therefore, any individual undertakes to fix an arbitrary price he opposes his individual will and opinion against the general judgment of humanity.

The mistake that is being made by these men who are undertaking to interfere with the laws of trade is that they seek to reduce the price of the thing, instead of undertaking to increase the amount of the thing.

The task of the world to-day is increased production. These gentlemen have devoted their energies to the question of decreasing prices. You can no more decrease prices and at the same time stimulate production than you can stimulate prices by increasing production. Small production means great prices. Great production means small prices. Wise men concede these laws and conform to them. Fools attempt their overthrow.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to some of the absurd results which have come from the administration of this law. Mark you, our problem is to increase food production to the end that we may supply ourselves and that we may create a surplus for our allies. Indeed, that was the chief purpose announced at the time the food-control bill was under consideration. This purpose is reflected in the preamble of the bill in the words: "To assure an adequate supply and equitable distribution, and to facilitate the movement of food, feeds," and so forth.

We are told that of all the foods wheat and meat are the two things most necessary. Let me argue the question from the standpoint of my tomato friends, who say that "the fixation of too small a price for tomatoes will result in the tomato crop being reduced." The proposition is so self-evident as to require no elucidation anywhere outside the Food Administration. [Laughter.]

Starting with the fact that the things we most need are wheat and meat, what do we find has occurred under the Food Administration? The price of wheat in the month of July, just before the Food Administration was set up, was approximately $2.51 for No. 1 northern. It is to-day $2.17 at certain favored markets, but this price is subject to numerous discounts. Probably not to exceed 25 per cent of the wheat produced will grade No. 1 northern or its equivalent. Without going into details, it is safe to say that the ordinary wheat of the farmer, after having suffered various cuts on account of grades, distance from market, and so forth, realizes to him approximately $1.85. The Food Administration is therefore in the ridiculous attitude of seeking to encourage the farmer to plant more wheat by reducing the price he will receive for his crop when raised.

But along with the low price of wheat runs another cause equally calculated to cut down wheat acreage. I refer to the fact that the unregulated price of other cereals has increased out of all proportion to the regulated prices of wheat, so that the price relations that have existed for 50 years are completely destroyed. With this the Food Administration is at least in part directly chargeable.

In the opinion of those vocal gentlemen who confound patriotism with subservience, what I am about to say may be rank heresy; none the less, I venture to remark that while a Food Administrator may interfere with an economic condition, he can not upset a law of nature. There is a wide gulf between assurance and omnipotence, a fact that may eventually find lodgment in the brains of those who confuse a statutory license to attempt a thing with the actual power of accomplishment.

Asking pardon for this parenthesis, I call attention to the relations which nature has established between the cereals and to the fact that prices have inevitably conformed to the natural relations.

A comparison of the average yield per acre of each of the leading farm products for the past half century, of course, shows the quantative relations which nature has established between them.. A comparison of the average price which each has commanded during the same period is the measure of their relative food values as ascertained by long experience. It will be also found that the average bushel production per acre multiplied by the average price of each of the leading cereals brings substantially the same return per acre in dollars and cents. Whatever variations there are can be accounted for by differences in labor costs and by climatic and soil conditions or by some advantage in cropping.

I present herewith a table showing average prices for the leading farm products from 1866 to 1916, a period of 50 years:

	Average farm value of yield per acre, 1866–1916.	Average yield per acre.	Average farm value, 1866–1916.	Average value August, 1917.	Average value March 8, 1918.
Cereal:		Bushels.	Per bushel.
Wheat	$11.24	12.96	$0.867	$2.788	$2.20
Corn	11.28	25.40	.444	1.921	1.85
Oats	9.54	28.22	.338	.596	.95
Barley	13.66	23.52	.581	1.303	2.40
Rye	9.43	14.37	.656	1.818	2.95
		Tons.	Per ton.
Hay[1]	16.06	1.04	11.55	[2]20.00	30.50

NOTE.—Figures for 1866–1916 taken from the Statistical Abstract of the United States, 1916.
Figures for August, 1917, taken from the Monthly Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, Volume VI, February, 1918, No. 2.
Figures for March 8, 1918, taken from quotations in daily papers at Chicago market.

Comparing the two leading articles we find the average yield per acre of corn to be substantially twice that of wheat, while the price of wheat is substantially double the price of corn. This relation of prices to the production was necessary to be maintained or nothing but corn would have been grown. The question at once arises, Why are people willing to pay twice as much for wheat as for corn? The answer is found in the fact that the food value of wheat is easily twice that of corn. Thus it is found that nature by fixing the relative production of these two great cereals, and also by fixing their relative food values, has established a relationship which can not be disturbed without doing violence to nature itself.

The amount of barley and rye produced in the world is small. The moment the crop becomes large the price drops. This is because the food value of these grains is so low that they can not maintain their place except for limited purposes.

When we entered the war all grains were being sold in the open markets of the world. An examination of a table giving the values for August, 1917, just prior to an interference by the Food Administration, shows that these grains maintained substantially the relative values of normal times. Wheat had gone to $2.78 and corn to $1.92, oats to 59 cents, barley to $1.03, and rye to $1.08. Under these conditions the farmer could have continued to have planted his fields to wheat with an assurance of receiving as much money from that crop as he would from any other. Indeed the inducement would have been very strong to plant a very great acreage to wheat. Suddenly the Food Administration interfered with the market conditions by fixing a price on wheat, which, as I have already shown, did not probably realize to the farmer more than $1.85 per bushel. At the same time the price of wheat was thus arbitrarily forced down. The prices of other cereals continued to mount, so that upon this day of grace, with wheat bringing the farmer approximately $1.85 per bushel, corn is commanding in the Chicago market $1.85; oats, 95 cents; barley, $2.40; and rye, $2.95—deductions should be made from last four items to arrive at farmers' prices. So thus we have this anomaly: That a grain, the food value of which is twice as great as that of either corn, rye, or barley, must be sold by the farmer for a price scarcely equal to that of the inferior grains, the prices of which have largely, if not entirely, been fixed by world conditions.

This, then, is the dilemma confronting the American farmer as the time for planting spring wheat approaches. If the present prices are maintained, and if the yield is the average for the past 50 years, a hundred acres of ground planted to corn will yield, at the average for 50 years of 25.40 bushels to the acre, 2,540 bushels, worth, at to-day's price of $1.85 per bushel, $4,699. The same ground planted to wheat will yield, at the average for 50 years of 12.96 bushels to the acre, 1,296 bushels, worth $2.20 per bushel, which is the top price at Chicago for the best wheat in the world, and which is fully from 20 cents to 30 cents above what the farmer actually receives, will bring $2,851.20. The farmer is confronted with the fact that by planting wheat instead of corn at present prices he will lose $1,649.

This is the Food Administration's artful method for encouraging the farmer to plant lots of wheat. What has been said of wheat and corn is equally true of all the other cereals. An average rye crop on the same ground will produce at present prices $4,239.15; an average yield of barley will produce at present prices $5,644.80; and if the land could be put to hay it would produce $3,172. The result of the Food Administration's intermeddling is to make wheat the most unremunerative crop. This is done at the very time when Mr. Hoover is telling us that the world is about to perish for the want of wheat.

A policy that seeks to increase the supply of wheat by making it the most unprofitable crop the farmer raises, can only be appreciated by an imported expert. There is not a man on earth, except the Food Administrator and advanced paranoiacs, who does not know that if you increase the price of oats, the price of rye, the price of barley, and the price of corn out of all proportion to the price of wheat you will practically force the farmer to devote his acreage to the more profitable grains.

Senators may theorize about the patriotic duty of the farmer until they are black in the face. They may stand stubbornly insisting that the farmer ought to conform to their way of thinking; but the actual fact remains that when he comes to plant his crop, like everybody else, the farmer must pay some attention to the question of prices. If he does not, he will soon find himself in the bankruptcy court. Farmers, as a class, are men of moderate means—millions are poor men. Even if they desired, they can not pour upon the altar of their country fortunes they do not possess. Why should they be asked to endure great losses while all the great corporations, largely from Government contracts, are reaping generous profits to which the farmer, as a taxpayer, must contribute?

Neither Mr. Hoover nor any other living man can compel the farmer to raise wheat at a loss. There is not enough power in the United States Army, there is not enough power in all the men who have been drafted and who will be drafted, to do that. There are not yet enough fools in Washington to attempt it. "If that be treason, make the most of it."

Unfortunately, the evils of reckless and ignorant interference with economic laws and property rights are not confined to wheat production. The live-stock business has been so damaged as to threaten our meat supplies. We can not win this war without wheat; neither can we win without meat.

The only meat crop in the world that can be doubled in one year's time is the hog crop. The hog crop can be more than doubled within that time. It can also be dissipated quicker than any other crop; because you can raise a pig to maturity in nine months, you can, if he is losing you money, rush him to the market before that time. A crop which can be quickly produced can be as quickly reduced. Under adverse conditions such a crop will be sold and its production stopped in a marvelously short space of time.

Hence, the hog crop, which is probably worth more in this war than beef and mutton combined, should be looked after with the extremist solicitude. What has the Food Administration been doing to encourage farmers to raise more hogs and cattle?

Experts declare that it takes approximately 13 bushels of corn to produce 100 pounds of pork. The average price of corn to-day is over $1.80. Thirteen bushels of corn, at $1.80, is $23.40. Hogs are worth $15 per hundred. The farmer who uses $23.40 worth of corn to produce $15 worth of pork loses $8.40 by the transaction, and he is out his labor, besides running the risk of cholera and other diseases.

Only an individual who could qualify for a life job as Food Administrator is foolish enough to feed corn worth $1.80 a bushel into hogs worth only $15 a hundred.

Entertaining as I do for the Food Administration that fervent affection, which is inseparable from unbounded admiration and profound respect, I nevertheless venture to suggest that if it survives long enough it will discover that the American farmer is possessed of a fair degree of common sense and independence. Some of us who know the farmer are confident that he is quite as intelligent as any swivel-chair patriot now to be found in the city of Washington. The American farmer, with 1,000 bushels of corn in his crib that is worth $1,800, is not going to feed that corn into hogs at $15 a hundred, because the increased weight of the hogs will only bring him approximately $1,150 and he will lose $650 by the transaction.

How does it happen that hogs are only bringing $15 per hundred? I invite the attention of the Senators from the "tomato States," whose vehement protests against the price of "garden sass" being fixed by Mr. Hoover this morning so stirred the listless soul of the Senate, to examine the pork question. They will discover that Mr. Hoover has licensed the packing houses, and that he has ordered them to fix the price of hogs at approximately $15 a hundred.

Mr. WARREN. At $15.50 a hundred, I think.

Mr. REED. Where?

Mr. WARREN. At Chicago.

Mr. REED. That is not the price to the farmer in western Kansas or in the State of the Senator, Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. That is the price of pork delivered at the packing houses in Chicago.

Mr. REED. That means a very much lower price to the farmer on the farm.

Mr. GRONNA. Will it disturb the Senator from Missouri if I should interrupt him just now?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we have had extended hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and that we have learned from reliable sources that millions of bushels of wheat are being fed to hogs and to other animals because wheat is now cheaper than any other grain. I think it most unfortunate that that should be done. I do not think a single bushel of wheat should be used for any other purpose than for human food, but the fact is that wheat is being fed to hogs and to other animals because it is now cheaper than corn, cheaper than oats, and cheaper than rye.

Mr. REED. Let the Senator from North Dakota compose himself. The corn, the rye, the barley, the oats, the bran, the shorts, and the middlings that the American citizen formerly fed to his hogs Mr. Hoover now feeds to the American people. Upon the other hand, the wheat the American citizen formerly ate is now, because of Mr. Hoover's regulations, eaten by the hogs. Observe that the plan is in accordance with a sort of crude natural justice. To-day the hog eats our food—to-morrow we will eat the hog. [Laughter.]

Thus are the balances of the gods kept in equipoise. Let the housewife, who is forced to buy the products of corn and oats when she wants only the products of wheat, cease repining. Out in Ohio and Oklahoma the hogs are eating the wheat. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, permit me to return to my pigs. Let us see what an arbitrary fixation of a price for hogs means to the farmer. Before I answer that I remind you that whether you like it or not, you have to rely on the farmer to produce the food that feeds the world. The rest of you may go starve, but the farmer will continue to eat. He will raise enough to keep himself and his family. I do not intimate that the farmer wants to take that position. On the other hand, he is long-suffering, of great kindness, and slow to anger, but he is beginning, as I shall later show, to get a little wrothy.

For years the farmer has fought the packing combination. I unhesitatingly say that whether technically a trust, there has been a concert of action between the great packers affecting prices. The ability of the large packers to arbitrarily fix prices has, however, been limited by fear of the law and by the competition of numerous small and independent companies. Especially has the packers' combination been held in check by the fear that the stock raisers would enforce the criminal statutes against trusts and combinations. But now comes the Food Administrator—under the sanctity of his position he assembles the packers—they council together and proceed to fix the price the farmer will be paid for his live stock. If the farmer is forced to sell to a combination for an unjust price it matters little whether the packers fixed the price in obedience to the decree of Mr. Hoover or in response to their own cupidity. The question in both cases is the same, namely, has the farmer been deprived of his free market and compelled to sell for an unfair price? It is immaterial whether the price is made by agreement among the packers alone or by agreement among the American packers and Mr. Hoover, whom Mr. McAdoo truthfully charges is the sole purchasing agent of European governments and buyers. The ruinous fact is that the price of hogs and cattle have been fixed so low that a stock raiser who feeds corn, bran, shorts, oats, cottonseed meal, or any other grain, or even hay, at present prices faces bankruptcy.

The result is that stock raisers and feeders are rushing immature and unfinished cattle and hogs to the market by the tens of thousands. This means a shortage next winter, as certain as winter comes. A Food Administrator, the night of whose ignorance is illumined by even a faint auroral dawn of economic intelligence, would be working ceaselessly to induce the farmers to increase their flocks and the herds to the limit of nature. Indeed, he would have begun his efforts months ago, and there would have been to-day romping in all the pigpens and on all the farms of the country a crop of pigs the like of which the world has never before seen. A wise Food Administrator would also have assured the farmers a price sufficient to make it profitable to bring their stock to maturity. Within nine months from this date millions of hogs, averaging 200 pounds, would have been overcrowding our markets, causing reduced prices to consumers. We would have had enough pork to insure us and our allies against any shortage. There would not have been so mary meatless days if there had not been so many brainless days. [Laughter.] If there had never been a brainless day, there would have been no interference with the American farmer's market, and he would have fed all the world except our enemies.

Convince the farmer that cattle and hogs are profitable, and he will increase his herds. Convince him that his market is ruined or that at any moment it may be made worse by the arbitrary decree of a Food Administrator working in connection, if not in conspiracy, with the packers and he will stop breeding. Let me show you how quickly and how logically the result may be produced. If a farmer has 10 sows on his place and pigs are commanding a good price, he can easily raise from 50 to 75 pigs in one summer. Create a condition so that he knows he will lose money if he raises pigs—to use his own expression, convince him that his pigs are "eating their heads off," and he will haul the 10 sows to the market and sell them, and the world will lose the 50 to 75 pigs. Extend the example I have just given to every farm in the United States and you have the difference between a meat famine and meat abundance. Likewise you have the contrast between the farmers' practical sense and the dreams of those impractical theorists who solve a productive shortage by stopping work and seek to encourage wheat planting and stock raising by fixing the price so low as to bankrupt all who engage in the business. The only man in the world who since the French Revolution has thought that could be done is now in the city of Washington. [Laughter.]

You people who live in towns, do you want cheap meat? Let me tell you how to get it. Give the farmer to understand that he will receive a good price for his hogs and cattle next year. Especially encourage him to raise hogs, and by next winter there will be so many pigs in the country that the price of meat will go down of itself.

I warn the Senate, I warn the country, I appeal to the President, I appeal to the Cabinet to stop the creation of conditions that discourage the agriculturist, that put an embargo upon production, and that are bound to create a shortage where we ought to have an abundance.

I hear somebody ask, "Are not the farmers getting enough?" I answer "No"; but I do not now stop to argue the question. I am seeking to impress the truth that a grave food shortage can only be escaped by an immediate reversal of present policies.

Let me follow my theme, "Food Administration Absurdities," a little further. How unutterably ludicrous are some of the performances. We had our meatless days. Now, what was a meatless day? A meatless day was one on which you could eat every kind of fish that wears skin or scales and every kind of fowl that grows feathers. The bills of fare of the country were filled up with fowl, especially chicken. The idea was to induce the people to eat more chicken, so that they would eat less meat. Suddenly, without warning, we were ordered to quit eating female chickens and to begin eating meat, the idea, of course, being to induce us to eat more meat in order to save chicken.

The change was instantaneous. Up to 12 o'clock noon of the day before yesterday a man caught eating a pork chop on Tuesday was a German spy, but chicken was the sanctified fowl of loyalty. A moment after 12 o'clock the colored lady detected with a fat hen under her arm was prima facie guilty of treasonable purposes, while pork chops, like manna from heaven, became the provender of the elect. To-day it is a crime to eat a female chicken. To-morrow the rooster may come under Mr. Hoover's beneficent protection and the pullets be ordered to the block. [Laughter.] It seems that the philosophy of the Food Administration is that to win the war we must reduce our meat and increase our chicken diet from September to January, and during the balance of the year increase our meat and reduce our chicken diet. [Laughter.] Certain iconoclasts may be inclined to insist that under the law of averages at the end of the year we will find ourselves exactly where we would have been in the absence of any food regulation. However that may be, the farmer is told, for his encouragement and delectation that he can not sell a hen; tender or tough. Anything of the female persuasion wearing feathers is immune from execution and unmarketable for the next 90 days. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the galleries.

Mr. REED. Let us strike an average and find out where we are coming out. Suppose we had not had meatless days or chickenless days, but just old-fashion days, sometimes eating meat and sometimes eating chicken, would not the amount of meat and of chicken have been substantially the same as we now find it?

But how does all this affect the farmer? I received a letter from an old farmer the other day. He said:

> Chickens are not a very big thing on my farm. They are a by-product, but "mother" expects out of the eggs and out of her chickens to get some spending money to buy her dresses, and things of that sort. She was thinking about trying to help produce more meat by setting a lot of hens this year. Now she is told that she can not market her chickens; that there is a fellow down in Washington named Hoover who has got control of the markets of the United States and that he has issued an order under which if she sells a hen she will be sent to jail. Mother is not going to raise any hens under such conditions.

Of course, as the old lady can not raise roosters unless she takes a chance also of hatching hens that is the end of her setting hens this summer. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman who promulgated the chickenless day order did not look far enough ahead. The logical effect of his order lay approximately an inch and a half beyond the end of his nose, and so outside his intellectual vision. Had he seen a little further, he would have known that if the farmers are told, "You may raise chickens, but whether you will be allowed to market them or not is to be determined by a dictator in Washington," the farmer is likely to lose interest in setting hens. Of course the Food Administrator will find this out in time and will reverse his order, just as he has already discovered that he made a mistake in stirring up the Senators from the "tomato States." He is going to withdraw the "tomato order." I can see signs of that, because the storm is already raging. Maryland is in revolt; Delaware is marching to the front; New Jersey's serried cohorts are forming line of battle. Each doughty warrior bears upon his shining pike an indignant and rebellious tomato. [Laughter.]

Their redoubtable Senators lead on and here to-day clamorously demand relief for the tomato farmer. Well and good, but would it not be well if these great Senators gave a little attention to something more important than tomatoes: to wheat that must feed the world; to hogs that must furnish the fats; to beef that must replenish the brawn and maintain the health of ourselves, our allies, and our armies. Suppose we get it into our heads, which sometimes we think are very long but which I sometimes fear are very thick, that the only way to stimulate production is to make it to the interest of the man who can produce to produce. Suppose we learn another principle. That business can not thrive upon uncertainties. That no one will hazard his fortunes and the fortunes of his friends upon a market that instantly changes in response to the whim or caprice of an individual who knows nothing about the business with which he impudently and unlawfully ventures to interfere. Let us have regard to another principle.

Let us get another fact into our minds, to wit, that this foolish thing we are now attempting is as old as man's folly. The weary treadmill of time is turning. Humanity in an endless stream seeks to climb its moving platform. Each individual vainly imagines his feet are walking an undiscovered road. But it is the same old treadmill, rolling round and round in unison with the revolving centuries; its ancient planks worn smooth by the innumerable feet of the shadowy hosts who have trodden its weary steep and disappeared in cycles of the past. And so, there is scarcely a new thing under the sun. Price regulation, I repeat, is as ancient as man's foolishness, as futile and useless a thing as a food administrator.

It takes a war to throw up curios. Did you ever after a great storm stand upon the banks of a swollen stream and observe how the unbridled waters had dug up strange things—things for long years buried in the grave of forgetfulness? Débris of dead races, skeletons of animals and men, sometimes the bones of prehistoric monsters that crept or swam or flew millions of years ago. And so, whenever the world undergoes a great disturbance like war, with its attendant intellectual storms, there is thrown to the surface of the stream of thought vagaries, fantastic theories, and unsound philosophies. The phenomena we now witness have occurred.

I hold in my hand Allison's History of Europe. I can but briefly sketch the chapter. It is here related, at page 413, of volume 1, that the French undertook the experiment of stamping paper secured upon property illegally confiscated and calling it money. The assignats speedily depreciated below their face value, and the people refused to accept them as money, whereupon the convention, in a hysterical attempt to prevent further depreciation, decreed a punishment of six years in irons against anyone who should exchange silver or gold for a greater nominal value of assignats, or should ask a larger price for any article of merchandise if the article be paid for in paper than if paid for in precious metals.

Commenting upon this attempt, the author declares:

It is needless to say that this forced attempt to sustain the value of the assignats was totally nugatory, and the consequences soon became fatal to many classes of persons.

Then follows the long list of troubles that occurred. The author continues:

This state of things, so opposite to what they had been led to expect as the result of a revolution, excited the most vehement discontent among the working classes; they ascribed it all, as is always the case, to the efforts of forestallers.

We denounce the "profiteer"—merely a new word for an old word, "forestaller." The poor, foolish, illiterate French of that day, whose highest ideal of justice was the knife of the guillotine, whose notion of reform was to abolish the Bible, to tear down the churches, to pull the cloths from the altars, to destroy the sacred vessels, and, instead of dethroning kings, to execute the poor wretches who occupied the thrones and who followed that atrocity by cutting off the heads of every man and woman who had any property—these poor, deluded people were after the forestallers and demanded with loud cries that they should be led to the scaffold.

Again I quote Allison:

It became then absolutely necessary to have recourse to a maximum—powerful as the committee of public safety was, a long continuance of the public discontents would have endangered its existence. Corn was, indeed, not wanting, but the farmers, dreading the tumult and violence of the markets, and unwilling to part with their produce at the nominal value of the assignats, refused to bring it to the towns.

How closely our present experience parallels that of the French Revolution. A few days ago Mr. Hoover declared that wheat was not reaching the great cities. He charged the failure to the inefficiency of the railroads. Mr. McAdoo, over his own signature, challenged the statement, asserting that there was plenty of cars, and challenged Mr. Hoover to point out the wheat that needed moving. After Mr. McAdoo's second letter, Mr. Hoover became as mum as an oyster, and I imagine had about the same interesting expression of countenance. [Laughter.]

In a day or two Mr. Hoover recovered sufficiently to issue a new declaration. He now asserted in substance that we were all about to starve because there was not sufficient wheat in the country to feed us or our allies; and yet the cold facts show that the wheat crop of 1917 exceeded the wheat crop of 1916 by 14,500,000. Likewise the records show that the exportations of wheat in 1916 were 15,000,000 bushels greater than in 1917. So that we have in the country 29,500,000 more bushels of wheat from last year's crop than was left over from the crop of 1916. Yet Mr. Hoover's complaint is that the wheat does not reach the market. The trouble is not hard to discern. Either the farmers have fed it to their stock or are holding it back. Just as in the French Revolution the French farmer refused to sell his crop for assignats of a nominal value, so our farmers refuse to sell their wheat for a forced and inadequate price.

I continue reading:

To such a pitch did this evil arise in the beginning of May, 1793, that the convention was forced to issue a decree compelling the farmers and grain merchants to declare what stock they had in their possession and to bring it to the public markets at a price fixed by each commune. Domiciliary visits were authorized, to inspect the stock of each holder of grain, and false returns punished by a forfeiture of the whole. In addition to this the distribution of bread by the bakers was provided for in the most minute manner; no one could obtain bread without producing a carte de sureté issued by the revolutionary committees; and on that carte was inscribed the number of his family and the quantity to be delivered to each member. Finally, to put an end to the scandalous scenes which generally took place at the bakers' doors, it was enacted that each bread shop should have a rope attached to it; each person, as he arrived, was obliged to take it in his hand, and remain quietly there till all before him were served. But in the struggles of discontent and famine, the cord was frequently broken; fierce conflicts ensued, and nothing but a prompt interposition of military force was able to restore tranquillity. To such minute and vexatious regulations are governments reduced when they once violate the freedom of human action; and to such a load of fetters do the people subject themselves when they abandon themselves to the insane passion for democratic power.

Insane passion for democratic power! Are we not indulging in an insane passion of arbitrary power?

An odious feature of the Reign of Terror was domiciliary visits. The press of Washington for days have told us that it is proposed now to inspect the houses of people to ascertain how much food they have on hand, lest they may be hoarding.

This is but domiciliary visitation—a right claimed by tyrants, but denounced by the fourth amendment to the Constitution in these words:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

We are also informed that our highly intelligent and efficient local fuel administrator has returned from the sunny glades of Florida, whither he hied himself during the cold winter months, and that he proposes to inspect our cellars and to limit the amount of coal we can have in this land of the free, the home of the brave, and the Capital of the greatest Nation on earth. Of course he has not yet set up his guillotine. Up to this time the only guillotine is public opinion, excited sometimes by the assertion of some foul-mouthed coward that all are slackers who refuse to truculently obey the mandates of petty usurpers and contemptible tyrants.

I read some more of Allison:

All the other articles of life besides corn speedily rose with the increased issue of the assignats, and the people persisted in ascribing to forestallers the natural consequence of a depreciated circulation.

Repeating the lesson of French history, we find ourselves today ascribing many conditions to profiteers that have resulted logically from world conditions. Twenty million men have been taken from the creative industries and employed in the destructive business of war. An inevitable shortage follows. The things man desires are scarcer. But the money with which to procure the things man desires has more than doubled, which means that the value of the circulating medium has been reduced at least 50 per cent.

I continue to read:

Frightful tumults arose; the boats which descended the Seine with groceries, fruits, and wood were seized and plundered; by the advice of Marat, they on one occasion rose and plundered all the confectioners' shops.

Observe the French revolutionists had both a food regulator and a food administrator combined in the single person of Jean Paul Marat. Candor compels me to concede that his methods were somewhat ruder than those now being employed.

I continue to read:

Terrified at the continued recurrence of these disorders, the capitalists declined investing their money in purchases of any sort; and the shares in foreign mercantile companies rose rapidly from the increased demand for them as the only investment affording a tolerable degree of security—another striking proof of the consequences of the disorders consequent on popular ambition, and their tendency to turn from the people the reservoirs by which their industry is maintained.

During the perils and chances of a revolution the tendency to gambling of every sort prodigiously increased. Men who had the sword of Damocles continually suspended over their heads sought to make the most of the numerous chances of making money.

To such a length did the dictators carry their principle of managing everything of their own authority that they compelled a return of the whole subsistence in every part of the country and endeavored to purchase it all and distribute it either to the armies or at a low price to the imperious citizens of the towns.

Have you recently heard a proposition like that, namely, that the Government should buy everything and distribute it? A few more foolish suggestions put into practice and we will have bread tickets. A few more Fuel Administration orders and we will be confronted by a real fuel famine.

Where are my tomato friends? Not one of them remains. [Laughter.] Yet but a short hour ago this historic Hall burned with the passionate fervor of an eloquence inspired by the fact that the finger of the Food Administrator had touched the tomato crop and blighted it. Yet I can not but recall with what glee they voted for the creation of a Food Administrator. How insistently they clamored that his powers should be made great. How confidently they predicted that the Food Administrator, like the king, could do and would do no wrong. I am aware that their intentions were good. Their intentions are yet, perhaps, highly honorable; and yet I fear if they can but get the Food Administrator to lift his heavy hand from their tomato patches they will be in favor of permitting him to retain all the power he at present exerts over the cattle upon the thousand hills of the West and over all the flocks and herds so necessary to feed the world.

I appeal to them to assist me in removing the baneful influence from these great products, just as they seek to remove it from the tomato crop of their own States. But I wonder if they will assist. I wonder whether, once they have their own products relieved from the regulatory processes of Mr. Hoover, they will follow the example of my very good friends from the South, who when the food bill was about to be enacted were ready to defeat it because cotton was included, but were willing to affect a compromise by which they threw the wheat farmer, the hog raiser, and the cattle herder to the wolves upon condition that their cotton should escape.

I do not say that harshly, for my friends from the cotton States are just as good as anybody else. Maybe I would have been equally selfish; but there is one appeal I can make to every one of the men from the cotton States. If I can convince them that these orders that are being applied now are reducing the efficiency of the United States in this war, I know I am going to have their support, whether their cotton is put into the next bill or not—the bill for more power that is on the way, romping over here from the House.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read a little bit more from Allison. It is a very good thing to go back to these old books. We have all read them. I am not presenting this as a new discovery. This is not The River of Doubt. I am just calling attention to it as an old and undoubted authority.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator tell us the author?

Mr. REED. This is Allison's History of Europe, Volume I. I am reading from page 427 of this edition. After describing how interference with the laws of business had produced a shortage everywhere, the author states:

> No one ventured to indulge in any luxury, or abandon himself to any gratification; metallic currency had almost disappeared, and the poor received their wages merely in paper currency, with which they were unable to purchase the necessaries of life. If they were shopkeepers, they were compelled to sell at a fictitious price; if they were purchasers, they were under the necessity of buying the most wretched articles, because the best were withdrawn by the effect of the forced sales enjoined by government. Only one kind of bread, of the blackest and coarsest kind, was to be had, and that could be obtained in no other way but by receiving tickets from the revolutionary committees, by waiting half the night, or for hours during the day, at the doors of the bakers with a rope in their hands. The names of the weights and measures, of the days and months, were changed; the laboring poor had only three Sundays in the month instead of four; the consolations of religion, the worship of the Deity, were at an end.
> All the efforts of the Committee of Public Safety after some time became insufficient to procure an adequate supply of subsistence. Commerce escaped the ruinous law of the maximum, and it escaped it in the most disastrous of all ways, by a total cessation. Want of the severest kind was experienced in every branch of human consumption. * * *

A little further on the author says:

> Never before, since the beginning of the world, had so great an experiment been made, and never had the disastrous consequences of giving the reins to popular ambition been so fully exemplified.

What had really happened was that this popular ambition had applied false laws to trade and commerce and exchange, just as the ambition of certain gentlemen now to read their names in newspapers and to send out tons of literature praising their own acts is more of a controlling force than a desire to serve our Republic.

THE COAL SHORTAGE.

Mr. President, lest I should forget it later on, I desire to advert most briefly to the disastrous consequences springing from the attempt to interfere with the fuel situation, because the lesson that I am trying to impress this afternoon, if I can impress any, is this, that uncertainty is the death of business; that no business in the world can thrive unless the proprietor of that business is reasonably assured of the conditions under which he can produce and can market. Every element of uncertainty you introduce is bound to bring the most disastrous consequences. It is because of this element of uncertainty, forced upon the coal business, that I invite your attention for a brief time to the developments in that industry.

I invite the attention of Senators to a brief résumé of facts. Prior to 1914 the potential coal production of our mines was so much greater than the consumption that coal was being mined at a very narrow margin. I will not say how that may be with reference to anthracite coal, but it is certainly true as to bituminous coal. In many places mine-run coal was being contracted at as low as $1.25 a ton, and slack coal or steam coal was being sold frequently for 75 cents a ton. Railroads and other great consumers had contracts at these extremely low prices, and the general public received its coal at the mouth of the mine at prices correspondingly moderate.

That condition of affairs continued to exist until the outbreak of the European war. At once there was an awakening of our industries, accompanied by a gradual increase in the quantity of coal consumed. There began also a slight increase in the prices of the coal. There was, however, no very marked trouble until the year 1916, wher it became apparent that there was actually a coal shortage, and coal prices began to run up to an astonishing figure.

That produced among the great consumers of the country a good deal of anxiety and they began to rush to the coal mines and ask for a contract. Along with these facts came alarming reports sent out from Washington. These early reports were to the effect that there was almost certain to be a coal famine during the year 1917. The great consumers were frightened and began bidding for coal. The panic spread. Soon we had in the coal markets a condition akin to a bank panic.

Coal that had sold from $1.75 to $2.50 per ton was advanced to $4 and $5.50, and even $6 a ton. I confidently believe that if not one single thing had been done the production of the mines would have been run up in a short time to a point where gentlemen who bought coal for $5.50 a ton would have regretted it and prices would have regulated themselves. I feel as sure of that as I can feel of anything that I do not absolutely know.

Let me submit to your candid consideration some of the reasons: First, it is admitted by every man who appeared before the committee that there is no shortage of coal in the ground. The fact is there is enough coal in the ground and discovered, within 3,000 feet of the surface, to last the world, at the present rate of consumption, 4,000 years, and there is new coal being found every day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is estimated that there is enough to last for 7,000 years.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS. That is still more encouraging.

Mr. REED. It is still more encouraging. I thank the Senator. I have the number of tons here, but I will not stop to read them. So the coal is there.

Second, it is admitted that there was no shortage of labor. There was, it is true, some labor disputes, but plenty of labor could be obtained, and the disputes were speedily composed when the wages of the men were raised.

Accordingly we have the condition of an unlimited supply of coal and an abundance of labor. So if everything had been allowed to take its course what would have happened? The great dealers of the country having contracted for their coal at the mines, the mine owners would have desired to get it out because of the great profit that would have been paid. As to the rest of the people, as long as the prices were high the mines would be encouraged to run to their maximum.

Between the mines and the people there was an organized machinery. It consisted of the wholesale and retail coal dealers, who had grown up with the business and who knew the wants of every part of the country. In the aggregate they constituted a great board of experts, familiar with every part of the United States, and knowing absolutely the wants of the people in every hamlet and village of the land. These experts knew the season when coal was needed, they knew how much was wanted, and they knew how to get the coal from the mines to their communities, and how to deliver it to the ultimate consumer. They not only had the knowledge, but the necessary equipment and machinery. These men knew how to get cars, how to get the coal shipped, the best seasons of the year to have the coal hauled to the market, the best means of getting the people to buy it in season and getting it into their cellars.

This machine was still in full operation in the spring of 1917. It operated in response to a great and constant force. The local dealer knew that he could not make money on the splendid prices then obtaining unless he acquired the coal and then sold it to his customers. The wholesale dealer knew that he could not make money on the splendid prices unless he sold his coal and delivered it to his customers, the retail men. The mine owner knew that he could not make money on the splendid prices unless he mined the coal and was ready to deliver it. The result was that back of the entire problem of coal production and distribution was the selfish interest of these men operating constantly day and night and urging them to the highest possible efficiency. If this condition had been permitted to remain undisturbed, the inevitable consequence would have been that each one of these coal dealers would have been after the railroads to haul their coal for them. The railroads being then in competition, if they had been let alone, would have sought to outdo their rivals in furnishing the cars necessary to get the coal to market. It is admitted now that there was unlimited coal; that there was practically unlimited labor; and it is admitted if there had been enough cars furnished and prices had been let alone coal would have been furnished to the country in abundance and there would have been no shortage.

Now, I come to the question of interference. I have referred to the existing coal production and distribution machine. It covered this whole country. It covered every line of the coal business. It covered the bunkering of ships. There were men who appeared before us who themselves all their lives and whose fathers before them had been engaged in the business of bunkering ships and doing nothing else.

What was done? Let me proceed and follow along in natural sequence, coming to the point of interference. When prices began to go sky-high the President, or at least somebody connected with the Council of Defense, did a very proper thing indeed.

The coal men were summoned. At their head was Mr. Peabody, one of the largest coal producers in the world. Mr. Peabody assembled in Washington approximately 500 coal dealers, as I recollect. They constituted over 90 per cent of all the bituminous coal producers of the United States. Mr. Lane and Judge Fort, of the Federal Trade Commission, met with these coal dealers and appealed to their patriotism. The coal dealers finally agreed that they would leave to Judge Fort, to Secretary Lane, and to Mr. Peabody the question of a maximum price that they would pledge themselves not to go beyond. These men, one of them representing the Trade Commission, the other holding a Cabinet position, and the other being a representative of the coal men, met and agreed in round numbers upon $3 for bituminous coal in the East and $2.75 for western bituminous.

Now, mark you, this was not the price of the coal but this was a price that they agreed they would not exceed. It was a voluntary maximum price. Secretary Lane and Judge Fort testify that they believe these prices would stimulate production and that competition would speedily work reduction. Mr. Peabody had for some 40 or 50 days been at work stimulating production. The prevailing high prices had also been at work, and the production was advanced from approximately 1,500,000 tons a day to over 1,900,000 tons a day.

If that rate had been maintained throughout the year there would have been supplied enough coal to have met every demand of the market, as now estimated by Dr. Garfield, less about 11,500,000 tons, which is a negligible quantity. Besides the coal production had been increasing day by day and it by no means follows that the maximum had been attained.

Let me pause here long enough to say that the production of our mines last year was only 65 per cent, and if they had been increased to 71 per cent there would have been no coal shortage. An increase from 65 per cent to 71 per cent would have furnished every pound of coal that we needed in the United States.

Mr. President, after the agreement between the producers and the Lane Commission had been effected, the coal situation was exceedingly promising. Prices had in a measure been stabilized. The producers and dealers knew with reasonable certainty the basis upon which contracts could be safely made. The mine owners could therefore put in additional machinery and enlarge their facilities for coal production. The railroads could also count with approximate certainty the number of cars that would be demanded.

With that condition existing, what happened? Unfortunately, Secretary Baker, who was chairman of the Council of National Defense, at once issued a letter in which he denounced this whole agreement as having been made without authority of law and as extortionate and oppressive. The result was that the coal business was again thrown into chaos.

Coincidently with the Baker letter it was publicly announced that the Government proposed to further fix prices. But what prices? The country was told there would be a price fixing of coal, but nobody knew what that price would be.

I am discussing this question now with reference to its effect upon production. The coal miner was now expected to increase the production of his mines; to make contracts for labor and contracts for material; to make contracts for new machinery; to expend tens of thousands of dollars or hundreds of thousands of dollars in developing his mine; but he was told in effect when you have gone to all that expense you do not know what you will be permitted to charge for your coal. You may be obliged to expend a half million dollars to put in new and improved machinery, and you must buy new and improved machinery at prices that are two and three or four or five times what they were a few months ago, but when all is done you will not know what we will permit you to charge for your coal. We propose to take your market away from you; we will fix some price; but the price which we fix is still in our inner consciousness; aye, it is not even there; we have not yet made up our minds what it will be. It will be something, but the God who looks into the future alone can tell what price we are going to fix.

For a period of practically 60 days, embracing the long summer months, when railroads ought to have been hauling coal, when every mine ought to have been running at its maximum, when coal ought to have been passing over the streets of Washington and Chicago, New York and Kansas City, and every other one of the great cities of this country and to every hamlet and village, going into the cellars of the people, the mines had reduced their capacity below the maximum which they had attained before the Government interfered. The evidence shows that many mines would have shut down if it had not been for the fact that they had made the high-priced contracts of which I have spoken. Those high-priced contracts saved this country from a frightful calamity. If they had not existed mines would have been either shut down or so reduced their capacity that there is no doubt people in the cities of America would have been frozen to death. But the contracts did keep the mines running at a fair rate of speed.

I call attention to some other circumstances which show how foolish it is for the uninformed to trifle with great economic principles. As early as the month of May the Federal Trade Commission began to issue its manifestoes. It told the people not to pay the prevailing prices. It asserted, "There is plenty of coal." It said, "There are plenty of cars." It insisted "There is no occasion for alarm." It advised the people of this country, in circular after circular, not to buy coal; not to lay in their supply of coal. Of course, that meant that the demand upon the coal dealer immediately slackened down. Of course, that meant that the cars did not come loaded, as they should have come. Of course, that meant that the coal dealer was afraid to buy.

He could not buy at prices that were to be paid at the mines with any safety, for if he bought and stored up in his yard and the price was afterwards reduced he might be bankrupted in a minute. Bankrupted by the mandate of the Federal Trade Commission or of some man appointed to exclaim "Thus saith the Lord; the price shall go up or the price shall go down!"

Mr. President, that is not all they did. As I say, and it is admitted, the question of transportation was a crucial thing. Let it be said now for the edification of those who may not have had occasion to study the question that coal mines do not run unless they have cars at the mouth of the mine. Therefore whoever stops the getting of cars to the mine stops the mines and stops the production of coal.

Now, what happened? There were issued by this Government of our four or five general priority orders.

In these priority orders, as they were construed, coal for ordinary consumption came away down in the list. Everything that was to go for the Government was to be given a priority. First and last, according to various estimates, from 50 to 85 per cent of all the things that were being shipped had a priority tag attached to it.

Mr. STONE. If my colleague please, will he state just what the term "priority" means and how it was enforced? What was the process?

Mr. REED. The process of enforcing the priority order, as I understand it, speaking roughly, was this: Four or five railroad presidents were brought to Washington. They were told that they were to manage the railroads and the shipment of goods in accordance with directions which they received, and Judge Lovett issued these priority orders. I can read you Judge Lovett's order. I call attention to certain language appearing in this order. It clearly demonstrates that the contention I have frequently made that it is not the President who executes the numerous powers we are thrusting upon him, but some agent, informed or uninformed, who assumes to speak for the President.

Listen to priority order numbered 5:

> Whereas by the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend the act to regulate commerce, as amended, and for other purposes," approved August 10, 1917, it is provided that during the continuance of the war in which the United States is now engaged the President of the United States is authorized, if he finds it necessary for the national defense and security, to direct that such traffic or such shipments of commodities as, in his judgment, may be essential to the national defense and security, shall have preference or priority in transportation by any common carrier by railroad, water, or otherwise; and
> Whereas by virtue of the power conferred upon him by said act, the President has designated the undersigned as the person through whom the orders and directions authorized by said act shall be given; and
> Whereas it has been made to appear, and the President, through the undersigned, finds, that under present conditions and volume of shipment sufficient bituminous coal will not be transported, etc., to Lake Superior and Lake ports before the close of navigation to supply the requirements of the territory contiguous thereto—

Then follows the order that sent the coal to the Northwest. All the other orders are similar in their language. Order No. 5 specifies that goods shall be shipped in the following order:

> Steam railroad fuel.
> Live stock.
> Shipments of military supplies.

And that was made to include practically everything that the Government wanted to handle. It embraced a vast body of supplies that were being shipped, whether shipments by the United States or not. Finally away down in No. 5 on the list the last thing was "Coal for curent use but not for storage."

Yet, everybody outside of the Fuel Administration knew that if we did not get a large amount of coal stored up in the country during the summer months we could not haul it through a winter blizzard and would be absolutely bound to be in want. Why, the children of the street know that much. The squirrels out here in the woods know that they must lay up during the summer months for the winter demands, and if the squirrels are as wise as they are reputed to be I am afraid some of them will abandon their cool and shady habitats for a downtown department district.

The railroads were forced first to move the cars having priority tags attached. The railroads and the railroad yards were already filled with goods in transit. Because of the priority orders, the railroad companies were required to pick out the cars having priority orders and to move them, and leave the other cars standing upon the sidetracks. Of course, this lost the country the use of these cars, and threw the railroad business into chaos.

Every car that they left standing on the sidetrack meant that much less coal would be mined that day in some mine of the United States.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri allow me to interrupt him to state that I shipped a carload of furniture from Oklahoma on the 5th of last January and only about five or six days ago I was informed that it had been delivered to the Alton Road at Alton, Ill.?

Mr. REED. Yes; and during all that time the car was out of commission.

Mr. THOMAS. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri to contribute this fact to his argument? In the Rocky Mountain section of the United States the repudiation by Secretary Baker of the so-called Lane agreement resulted in the refusal of consignees who had already agreed to purchase coal, either in great bulk or in carload lots, to receive it, they expecting that as a result of the letter the price fixed would be much less than that agreed upon by the Lane Commission, in consequence of which the consignor was compelled to pay the demurrage and the car congestions upon the sidetracks all over the country were consequently increased.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I desire to say that I am listening with great interest to this debate, and I observe that these are wonderful tributes to Government ownership and control of railways.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator from New Hampshire ought to mention his "daughter" once in a while—not to "harp" upon her, but just to mention her. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Missouri have any objection to my interruption?

Mr. REED. Not at all. I thank the Senator for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought it was entirely in order.

Mr. REED. It was.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I think it was very appropriate.

Mr. REED. I think there is some force in the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he is aware of the fact that many of the railroads of the country last spring, when the car shortage began to be felt, and ever since, have used large numbers of cars for the storage of fuel coal very much in excess of their need? One of the roads between the city of Huntington, W. Va., and Cincinnati, Ohio, had 3,000 cars of coal stored, ostensibly for fuel; and many other thousands of cars were on other tracks very much in excess of their fuel needs, thus taking those cars out of the coal business and preventing their use by coal shippers and consumers.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I of course have not investigated that particular instance, and it may be possible that railroads have done the very thing which the Senator states; but I suspect that if we went into the question thoroughly we should find that that coal was being held because of some priority order; at least I can say that Dr. Garfield did not make any such charge in his testimony. Lest I shall be accused of heresy in making these charges in regard to priority orders, let me speak to you with the words of one whose authority can not be challenged by those who sustain the Fuel Administration. This is what Dr. Garfield had to say of the priority orders:

> The actual result of priority order No. 5, as originally put out, has been to hurt rather than to help the movement of coal. * * * There are thousands and thousands of loaded cars [of coal] to-day—> standing on the tracks; there are always many, but the number has been vastly increased in the last few months. * * *

This testimony was delivered in January—

> Coal constitutes perhaps one-half in number of cars used. Coal has therefore clogged the roads. It has been impossible to move the coal, and hence in producing more coal we have produced more difficulty for the railroads.

Mr. Snead, the agent of Dr. Garfield—and I may say he is the expert of the Fuel Administration, if Dr. Garfield has an expert—in speaking of all the priority orders said to the committee, after we had sat there many days laboriously trying to work out this problem:

> I think if we could get rid of all the priorities and start over again, we would be better off. * * * There is no character of freight of more importance to the people than coal. That is our position. We have not been able to have the railroads treat it that way. The decision rests in the priority board—

Not in the railroads.

Again:

> We have priority on all Government supplies, whether they go to the plant manufacturing urgent Government munitions or whether munitions are from the plant to the seaboard. These priorities complicate the situation and affect the ability of the railroads to move freight, and it interferes with the movement of coal, as well as with everything else, so that we have too many priorities. * * * We have suggested repeatedly that coal, which is so absolutely essential and of which we are short, be given preference in movement first, to clean up congestion.

Speaking of these priority orders, he said that if this investigation did nothing else but get rid of priority orders it was a good thing for the country. I could read you the testimony of a large number of witnesses, but this is enough. Unfortunately, however, while the Fuel Administration condemn priority orders, they have issued and are issuing priority orders. They issued priority orders then; they have been issuing priority orders ever since; and they are issuing them to-day.

The trouble with the Fuel Administration on the priority question was that it took the same view of priority orders that some people do of children. Everybody else's children are nuisances, but their children are all right all the time. A priority order was issued by Judge Lovett to move coal to the Northwest.

In effect this order provided that all coal billed to the Northwest should have priority. The result was that the coal of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio was rushed to the lake ports, to be there put upon boats and ships for northwestern points.

I see sitting in front of me the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I congratulate him upon the acumen and shrewdness of his people. I concluded when I heard this testimony that the gentlemen from Minnesota were the Yankees of the Northwest. They realized in Minnesota and in the Dakotas and in parts of Wisconsin that there might be coal trouble; they came to Washington early, and they got a priority order issued by Judge Lovett, under which coal was to be sent to them. They convinced Judge Lovett that the way to get that coal up there was in the boats; that the Lakes would freeze up after a while; and that he must get it up at once. And so, without any limitation whatever, they began to start coal to the Northwest.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suppose the Senator from Missouri is aware of the fact that the coal for northern Wisconsin, northern Minnesota, and North Dakota is never shipped by rail? It could not be shipped by rail. All of the coal going to that section must be shipped by the Lakes. The coal was not being shipped in boats which were carrying ore; the boats were returning empty, and the people of the Northwest naturally became somewhat alarmed, as the coal was being hoarded in big manufactories nearer the coal mines. So they did come down here, but they did not get any more coal than they needed; in fact, they did not get as much as they needed; and if they had not gotten the coal by ships in the summer time, they would not have gotten it at all.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. In just one second I will do so. I know now who it was got up the argument that imposed upon the credulity of Judge Lovett. I do not know who delivered it, but I know whose brain originated it. [Laughter.]

Now I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I merely want to say that we never obtained a revocation of that order, so far as the coal fields of east Tennessee and eastern Kentucky were concerned, which supply the section in which I live, until the 30th day of November. I do not mean to say that all that coal went to Minnesota, but I do mean that that order was a hindrance to every shipment of coal until the 30th of November.

I want to add further that in seeking to calculate what became of the coal that started from the mines of that section toward the Northwest I was unable to locate any large part of it in the section to which it was supposed to have been going.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri pardon me for an interruption?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course, a great deal of coal was shipped under these priority orders to Lake Superior ports which did not go to the Lake Superior ports delivering coal to northern Minnesota and northern Wisconsin. A great deal of it went to Canada. Until the Government stopped the export of coal to Canada, a great deal of coal went to other places, but no coal could go to that section of country in the Northwest that did not go by boat. Those orders expired at the close of navigation.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Minnesota, for once in his life, is utterly, from beginning to end, mistaken as to his facts. I never knew him to be so badly off on facts before, although his conclusions are frequently hard to accept. The fact of the matter is that in this blessed year of grace millions of tons of coal did go to the Northwest by rail. It is not the customary way, but it so went. What was done up there was to get all the coal they were entitled to by boat, and then they got some millions of tons by rail.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, millions of tons of coal did not go to northern Minnesota.

Mr. REED. Not to northern Minnesota; but I am talking about the entire State.

Mr. KELLOGG. Coal has always gone to southern Minnesota from the Illinois district by rail, and it went there this winter only in the usual way.

Mr. REED. The Senator is getting this down to very narrow geographical limits; he is emphasizing the Northwest.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator from Missouri does not understand the geography of the Northwest, of course the Senator from Minnesota is not to blame.

Mr. REED. I understand the geography of the Northwest, not so well as the Senator who lives there, but I understand the coal question a good deal better than the Senator, for I have investigated it, and he has not, and I have the sworn testimony of witnesses to rely on, and he has not. This is what I say, that northern Minnesota ordinarily—and I so stated in my previous remarks—gets its coal by water; but representatives from that section came down to Washington and convinced the Fuel Administration that they were about to freeze to death, and the Fuel Administration stopped the shipment of coal to practically every other place all over the East and diverted it all to the Northwest. I pause long enough to say that there was sent to the Northwest and to Canada together over 6,000,000 tons more coal in 1917 than in any year in the world's history since Adam was a boy. The sworn testimony sustains my statement.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Let me remind the Senator that coal, dock coal, as it is called, was sent in such large quantities from the East into the Northwestern States, northern Minnesota, and so on, that they actually took that coal and forced it into the territory covered usually by Illinois coal, and made the people pay over $2 a ton more for it.

Mr. REED. Yes. As the Senator from Minnesota has invited me into this field for mowing June grass with a dull scythe I will stop in it long enough to read from the testimony of Mr. Peabody:

> The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you a question on another proposition. You spoke about dock coals having been shipped to the Northwest last summer. Can you tell me whether there was more or less shipped last summer than the year before?
> Mr. PEABODY. I can tell you up to the 15th of November, when my records stopped. Illinois shipped 2,519,000 tons into the territory tributary to the docks in 1917, as against 869,000 tons last year, during the whole period of the year. I estimate that in October and November there were 1,200,000 tons additional sent over there, so that the Illinois figures for coal going into the territory that I call the dock territory are 3,719,000 tons as against 868,000 tons last year, almost 3,000,000 tons in excess.
> The CHAIRMAN. That went from the Illinois field?
> Mr. PEABODY. That went from the Illinois fields.
> The CHAIRMAN. Into what you call the dock territory?
> Mr. PEABODY. Into St. Paul and Minneapolis; Minnesota, except St. Paul and Minneapolis; North Dakota and Sioux Falls; South Dakota, except Sioux Falls; and Milwaukee.

There are other witnesses, among them a former official of the railroads, now engaged in the Fuel Administration and an expert on the movement of cars, who checked up these coal figures by the cars that had been shipped. But I am spending too much time on this proposition.

Mr. President, it is in evidence by Mr. Dugan, the public-service commissioner of Ohio, that on January 9, 1917, there were upon the docks at Duluth 4,000,000 tons of coal that he swore could not be moved until the spring of 1918, and at that time and while that coal was being sent to the Northwest there was not coal enough in Ohio for the farmers to run their thrashing machines. That fact is testified to by a number of the officials of the State of Ohio. While that condition obtained they were crowding the cars up to the Lake ports so fast that the boats could not receive the coal, and there was nothing to do but to allow the cars to stand on the sidings. They got them into what they call "bottle necks," into places that were so congested that they could not get them through.

One witness testified that on October 23 there were 24,994 cars of coal on tracks in Ohio, and that over 11,000 of those cars were consigned to the Northwest. Another witness testified that in the Sandusky yards alone, at Sandusky, Ohio, there were from August 1 to August 6, on one railroad, 7,791 cars of coal bound for the Northwest, "forced to the Northwest," as he stated it. Another witness testified that there were as many as 25,000 cars a day consigned to the Lake ports, and this continued during the cold weather; it continued up to the time when the boats were frozen in at the docks. They were loading coal into ice-bound boats while the people of Ohio were freezing for want of coal. It was in testimony also that the national fuel administrator of Ohio, upon his return from the South, told the people who came to him for relief "that this was war time and they must be prepared to sacrifice," and, "if necessary they must burn their furniture and their fences." There was other testimony that I would hesitate to repeat, but it was delivered by officials of the State of Ohio.

Mr. President, understand I am now dealing with the question of car shortage. They had compelled this coal to be hauled from West Virginia, and even from the mines of Ohio, but principally from West Virginia and Pennsylvania, in these vast quantities to the Northwest and to Canada, Canada getting over 3,000,000 tons more this year than she ever obtained before. That meant a haul of this coal away from the mines about 1,000 miles, and that took cars and engines and tracks, and every car that was being sent in that direction meant the consumption of the precious thing—transportation; it meant the stoppage of the coal mines. The thing is so plain that I hesitate to dwell upon it, and yet the country has not understood it.

Mr. President, everybody knows that if we are to win this war we must keep the boats crossing the Atlantic. Everybody has known that we were desperately short of boats. Pershing well expressed it when he said, "We must bridge the Atlantic"; and, God knows, I fear that we may not bridge it soon enough. Just in proportion as boats were scarce it was necessary that they should be actively employed. A boat tied to a dock is for the time being not a boat unless it is being loaded or unloaded. A boat that loses 10 days at the dock is a boat out of commission and out of use.

Now, who had before we had a Fuel Administrator been getting bunker coal to these ships? There had been a set of men doing it for many years, but the Federal Trade Commission established a fixed price for coal, and the Government established priority orders, but you can read these priority orders from beginning to end, and you can not find a single order that proposed to get a single ton of bunker coal to those ships. The demand was known through all these months; the fact that the ships would be there to bunker was known through all these months, and yet, under the orders that were issued, coal men who had been bunkering the ships were practically put out of business, it was made practically impossible for them to handle that coal. Having created that condition and having issued priority orders the coal administration did what? They sent 6,000,000 more tons of coal to the Northwest and to Canada than had ever been sent there in any other year of history, and yet it only required but little over 4,000,000 tons of coal to bunker every ship that sailed from the ports of the East during the entire winter. They sent to the Northwest nearly 6,000,000 tons of coal in excess of what had ever gone there before, and nearly 2,000,000 more tons of coal than would have been required to bunker all the ships sailing from eastern American ports. So this wise body of men interfered with the machinery of commerce that has been growing up for years, and having paralyzed it failed to set up in its place any adequate machinery whatever.

Mr. STONE. Why was that sort of thing done?

Mr. REED. I may answer my distinguished colleague by summing it all up in the one word "ignorance." There is absolutely no relation between the ability to discover an obscure Greek root and the bunkering of ships with coal; there is absolutely no more relation between those two things than there is between the stopping of a sawmill in South Carolina and the bunkering of a ship in New York. I have never climbed to such intellectual heights as to be able to fathom this particular kind of logic and to understand these mysteries of trade and commerce. All that I can say, in answer to my colleague, is that evidently the bunkering of ships was totally forgotten.

Nor can it be claimed that they were met by any unusual demand from New York for bunker coal, because bunker coal for the year 1916 ran over 6,000,000 tons, while in 1917 it ran only to a little over 4,000,000 tons; in other words, submarine warfare, or the exigencies of commerce, had driven so many boats from the ocean that the demand for bunker coal was only about two-thirds what they might have anticipated.

If they had stopped sending coal to the Northwest for three days' time they could have put enough coal down in New York City so that every ship might have been bunkered, and in the other Atlantic ports every ship likewise could have been bunkered. Why were these things done? Because no man that God has ever made is wise enough to step out of a classroom or a counting house or from a farm or any other business totally unrelated to the coal business and in a few days' time grasp this great and intricate problem that reaches every home in the land and that touches all of the myriad industries in which our people are engaged. It can not be done. It would take years to produce machinery; it would take the wisdom of omniscience to conceive it; it would take the power of omnipotence to accomplish it.

Mr. President, lest I should forget it later on, let us observe the remedy. They evidently had forgotten about bunkering ships. The ship was a waif, an orphan, that had been dropped upon the doorstep, nobody was thinking about it. Then suddenly we were told that all the factories east of the Mississippi River were to be closed down in order to get a few tons of coal to New York. I had read in the papers of a threatened strike in Austria. It was said that 2,000,000 people might lay down their tools and quit their workshops. I said to myself: "If that shall happen and it shall continue only for a short time, then indeed may our hopes mount, for our enemy is about to commit suicide."

About the time that I arrived at that delectable conclusion I picked up the morning paper and read that a Government official—not a strike organizer, not a Bolsheviki, not an enemy of the Republic, not the leader of a mob, but a Government official—had ordered a general lockout in the mills of the whole eastern half of the United States! The hammers fell from the hands of the mechanics; the artillery, if I may use that term, of the riveting machines, the pulsation of mighty engines, all stopped. Men walked the streets. The vast creative machine of America was paralyzed. We inquired why, and were told that it was to save fuel.

But we inquired: "Why shut down the factory that has fuel? Why not let it run?" The answer was: "It is not fair to the factory that has not fuel to let a factory run that has fuel." We inquired: "What do you intend to do with factories that run by water power and use no fuel?" The answer was: "We have not the authority to compel them to stop, but we expect to use our moral power to persuade them to stop." We inquired why, and they said it was not fair for a mill that was run by water power—by the force of gravity that God Almighty made and that man had harnessed—to run if somebody else had a factory and he did not have coal.

Then we asked, "What are you going to do with the sawmills—the sawmills that burn their own sawdust, that make their own fuel, and, more than that, make fuel that is shipped to other parts of the country, that supply the towns and villages about them? What about these mills?" They said, "They must stop." We asked, "Why?" They replied, "Because it is not fair for a sawmill in South Carolina or Florida to run if a woolen mill or a flour mill in Maine or Massachusetts or Ohio or some other State is out of coal."

Then we inquired if this question was to be settled according to the rivalries and race for business that happen to exist between various manufacturers; whether the country was to be sacrificed in order that factory A might not get some slight advantage over factory B because factory A, like the wise virgins, had oil in its lamps and factory B, either like the foolish virgins, had forgotten to get the oil or else was not able to get it. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] used that illustration once. I credit him with it, although I decline to admit he originated the parable. [Laughter.]

Then we said, "But what are you going to do with the coal that is in these factories that you stop? Are you going to take it from the factories that make nonessentials and give it to the factories that make essentials?" They said, "No; we are going to stop them all." We asked, "Well, are you going to take the coal from the factories that you refuse to allow to use coal and give it to the people to keep them from freezing?" They said, "No; we are going to let it stay where it is and let the people freeze. We are just going to close down the factories." "But why are you going to close down the factories?" "We are going to close down the factories in order that the railroads may catch up."

"But you would not put any burden on the railroads if you let the factories run, would you, and you did not let them load their goods? If you let them make shoes by the thousands of pairs and pile them on their shelves and in their warehouses, so that we would have them when we do need them, but did not let them ship them, that would not burden your cars, would it? If you let the sawmill run and let it make lumber that needs to be seasoned, and pile it up so that it can be shipped when we get more transportation, that will not put any burden upon the railroads, will it? There is plenty of room down there in the pine woods to stack up their lumber. That will not do any harm, will it?" But the answer was, "They must stop." And so we proceeded with the argument, but you could make no more impression upon the mind of the gentleman who had issued the order to close business than one would naturally expect to make upon a mind capable of conceiving such an order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should cite a striking illustration along the line the Senator is discussing?

Mr. REED. Not at all. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Amoskeag Corporation, of Manchester, N. H., employing about 18,000 operatives, operating their establishment mostly by water power, but having to use coal in the shape of culm, having their equipment made especially for the purpose of burning that kind of coal, and no other establishment in the State being able to use it, were ordered to cease their operations for a certain number of days, denying the 18,000 operatives the opportunity of earning very large wages. That order was put in operation, and no appeal that was made to the authorities could induce them to allow that great establishment to continue its operations. I want to emphasize the fact that they were using culm, that could not be used by any other factory in the State; and they had that on hand and wanted to continue their operations, but were denied that right.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, in the case of the great furniture factories of Grand Rapids, the greatest in the world, it took more coal for them to remain idle than it did for them to run.

Mr. REED. Why did it take more? I wish the Senator would state that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Because they used their refuse to keep their furnaces going, and when they did not make the refuse it was necessary that they should use coal to keep their plants at the proper temperature and preserve their fire protection.

Mr. REED. I knew the reason, but I wanted the Senator to state it for the RECORD. That was the point. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator heard me say once—if he did not, I should like to put it in the RECORD right here—that on one "heatless Monday" 37 furniture factories closed down, and there were saved in our community 6 tons of coal, which cost the people of that community about $23,000.

Mr. REED. I should like to add that probably there was 6 tons of coal more than usual burned in some other part of the town that day because the men were not at work.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. REED. And if you did not have a good prohibition country up there I would suggest that probably there were other kinds of fuel employed. [Laughter.]

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Do I understand the Senator to say that it was the policy of the Government to stop manufacturing as well as to save fuel?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir. That clearly appears in the testimony of Mr. Garfield.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I be permitted to add that I received a communication from the Vermont Marble Co. saying that they had one room in which they employed 840 men. They were permitted by the order to maintain heat enough to prevent their water pipes from freezing. They made a careful experiment and found that in order to heat that building sufficiently to make the men comfortable it required only 1½ tons of coal daily in addition to that which they were permitted to run. I received a communication from the department saying that it was their purpose not simply to save coal but temporarily to suspend manufacturing, which, of course, sustains what the Senator has said.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the Senator will not omit to mention that after the order went into effect our Intelligence Bureau published a list of the institutions which were permitted to run, thus inviting the attention of alien enemies to the points where they might effectively strike during that period.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if we keep on with this "experience meeting"—and it has been very entertaining—I suspect that every man here can contribute many instances. Let it be understood now that the theory of the Fuel Administration, as plainly set forth in Mr. Garfield's testimony, was that they proposed to stop manufacturing in order that transportation could catch up with manufacturing.

Now, in my boyhood days I often heard the anecdote told to illustrate how great a fool a born fool could be. As the story ran, the fool of the farm was sent to the mill with wheat in a sack. Not knowing enough to divide the wheat on different sides of the horse, and thus balance the sack, he put the wheat in one end and a stone in the other. He has always stood as the supreme type of stupidity, because he did not know enough to throw away the stone and divide the wheat.

It seems to me that a good parallel for that anecdote is the story of a great man who, finding that the factories of the country were producing faster than the railroads could just then haul, ordered the factories to stop, instead of ordering the railways to speed up.

I challenge any man to point to a similarly unjustifiable and wholly foolish act ever committed in all the tides of time by any government or any government agent.

Let me give my contribution in the way of experience:

There is an association of lumbermen that first and last embraces nearly all the great pine-lumber mills of the United States. I received a telegram from their attorney. I can not quote it exactly, but it read in substance as follows:

Forty per cent of our mills have contracts for furnishing lumber for the Government ships, but under the fuel order, as construed, they can only cut the lumber for the ships and can not cut anything else. We can not get the heart out of the trees without cutting off the outside, and the heart is what the Government needs.

[Laughter.]

Sixty per cent of our mills do not have contracts direct, but, in fact, 10 per cent of what they produce goes to the ships. We can not run these mills. All of our mills need to manufacture for the purpose of drying their lumber. All of our mills run without use of coal and nearly all of them supply the neighboring country with fuel in the shape of the blocks and refuse parts of the timber. Is there not a possibility of doing something?

I did not go to the professor. I went to a practical man, who has done practical things. I telephoned Mr. Hurley, and I read him the telegram, and I said to him, "It does seem to me that something ought to be done, in view of the fact that we need every particle of energy constantly employed in order to meet the emergency now confronting the world and in view of the fact that lumber is one of the great essentials." I shall not quote what Mr. Hurley said, further than this. He said, in part, "If you will wait a few minutes I will telephone you back." In a few minutes he telephoned, "I have conferred with the proper people, and they have agreed, first, that the 40 per cent of the mills that have contracts can cut the whole 100 per cent of lumber in order to get out the lumber for the ships." They can actually cut the outside off the trees. He did not use that expression; that is mine. "Second, they have agreed that the mills that do not have contracts but produce lumber that is used in the ships can continue to run."

That, of course, released the whole 100 per cent. He further said, "It is understood that any mill that wants to season its lumber can continue to run"; and that, surely, included every sawmill in the world at large. And so, inside of 25 minutes by the watch, when I got to a practical man I obtained a rescission as to all those mills, and the next day I suppose not less than 20,000 axes were ringing in the forests, and the saws of a vast number of mills were tearing their way through the great logs, boards were being turned out and piled up, and industry had resumed its wonted course.

That is only one of many illustrations. But now, Mr. President, I come to what I regard as the capsheaf of this most marvelous piece of management.

As an afterthought, we were told that the principal reason for this order was to the end that the coal might be gotten out to bunker the ships. We stopped the sawmill in South Carolina to get coal into New York Harbor, to there bunker a ship. We stopped the water mill in Maine to get coal into the bunkers of a ship at Newport News. Now, in order to understand the philosophy of that you have got to be a plumb natural-born idiot. [Laughter.] Pardon the expression; other language is inadequate. And then came the excuse!

I am sorry to say that Dr. Garfield published that excuse. A hard case sometimes makes hard excuses. He said, in good, set terms: "As a result of the fuelless days, 480 ships have been released from American harbors between January 17 and January 29.

I went and got the figures, and I got the figures right. I got them from the Shipping Board. Within the period of time he named there had been a net reduction in the number of ships in all American ports of just 56—just 56. There had sailed from all American ports only 519 ships. There had sailed from all American ports, leaving out three southern ports, just 480 ships. Dr. Garfield had credited his fuelless days with every ship that had left American ports during that period of time. Ships had been coming and going for a hundred years; and although the ships had been coming and going before he issued his order, almost but not quite as fast as they did afterwards, the American public were told by every newspaper of the land that carried Dr. Garfield's report that 480 great ships, carrying our munitions, carrying our soldiers, and carrying our goods, had been released by this fuelless-day order!

I am sorry that statement was made. I am sorry that kind of information was given out. It was not the truth. We can not win this war on anything but facts—cold, hard, steely facts. All the verbal camouflage that ever fell from the lips of man has never stopped a 16-inch shell, captured a trench, turned aside the shining point of a bayonet, put food in a stomach or clothing upon a back. Let me say, in an aside, that you can have witnesses appear before the Military Affairs Committee and solemnly swear that shoddy is as good as wool, but you can not make shoddy as good as wool by swearing to it until you are black in the face; and Gen. Pershing, I understand, has sent over his gentle reminder that he is tired of putting that sort of stuff on the backs of American soldiers, and he is right. Only a man that can understand how stopping a sawmill in the South will move bunkering coal into a ship in New York Harbor is able to understand how shoddy wool that has been worn and cut and ground is as good as wool fresh off a sheep's back.

Mr. President, I do not want to say anything harsh, but I appeal for efficiency, and do so from my heart.

I look across the sea at our antagonist. Germany for years and years was preparing for this war. It had every horse numbered and ready to be moved to the proper point. It had the wagons numbered. It had the men numbered and drilled. It had their uniforms ready for them. Citizens of this country who saw the early days of the German mobilization told me that they witnessed this scene—groups of men coming along the highways, farmers riding horses and leading those that had been already requisitioned; other groups of men plodding afoot, some of them coming in wagons. They wore the clothing of the farm or factory; they came with the grime of the mine. They then stepped into a room—the farmer, the mechanic, or the miner—and in less than 10 minutes by the watch a soldier stepped out of the door wearing his uniform, with his steel helmet glittering in the sun, his knapsack strapped to his shoulder, his rifle in hand. He saluted his officer and fell into line at right dress. In a few moments the sharp command came and company after company moved to the field of war. Germany had every resource of the country tabulated. When German officials undertook to interfere with that machinery they knew every cogwheel, they understood every spindle. All had been counted, every detail had been mastered, and they interfered only in such matters as were necessary and left freedom of action outside of that.

That is the antagonist we meet, and how do we meet it? We have a great business organization in this country, a great productive machinery. It began out on the farm, where 45,000,000 people make their living. These farmers knew how to till their fields, their wives knew how to make their butter and how to care for their household duties. The farmers knew how to watch the market. They knew what to plant; they knew when to plant. They needed mighty little advice, and the less they get, generally speaking, the better it is for the farmer.

We had a railroad system to haul the goods to market. We had towns in which there were men engaged in the mercantile business. We had great factories, we had mighty mines, and men who had devoted their entire lives to these business avocations. Speaking broadly, they were all experts. Every man in the United States knew a little better what he ought to do than anybody else knew for him.

You, sir, found your niche in life; and, whether you have done well or done ill, you have done better than would have been possible if some man 3,000 miles away, who did not know the color of your eyes or hair, had undertaken to tell you what you ought to do. What is true of you is true of everybody else. Men have found their niches in this life; not all, of course. There is always some waste; there is always some surplusage; there is always some dross; but, speaking broadly, this great machinery of production answered to the economic law that each man will find his niche in life; that each will do that which will bring forth the best that is in him. In the aggregate that means the highest productivity of all. Such being the fact, the man who interferes with the orderly course of life reduces the efficiency of the country, and does so in proportion to his interference.

Now, lest I be misunderstood, I want to make this point: There is a thing you might say is interference which I say is not interference. When we pass a law that a man shall not charge more than a certain rate of interest, a law against usury, we do not interfere with business; we simply interfere with a thing which, in its last analysis, is little less than robbery. That kind of a law really promotes honest business. When we pass a law against combinations in restraint of trade we do not destroy trade; we, in fact, aid trade, for we release the trade and commerce of the country from the piratical institutions that destroy the trade and commerce.

So wherever you propose to employ the law to stop some great act of injustice I applaud. When you propose to interfere with the ordinary rules of supply and demand, when you propose to interfere with the farmer, go into the household, and interfere with the domestic affairs of the people, you make trouble.

Mr. President, I repeat to you, this is the message I carry to you to-day, and it comes with all the earnestness of my heart. I hope it will find lodgment and kindly reception in your opinion. You can not do business in this country unless you remove uncertainty; I mean artificial uncertainty. In the name of common sense I appeal to you to rescind the foolish order which declares that men can not contract their coal. What mine owner will not produce coal better if he is allowed to contract his output. You want coal distributed, do you? Then in the name of reason repeal the foolish order which proposes to put the wholesale coal dealer out of business. You want the mine to run, do you? Then in the name of goodness tell the mine owner at least what price you will not interfere with during the next 12 months. Let him know what he is going to do. The 1st of April will be here in about three weeks, and on the 1st of April practically every great coal contract ends. Unless before that time the mine owners are told what they can do there will be a slackening up. These mines ought not to slacken up for a single hour, not for a single moment.

Mr. President, you must do another thing. We are at the planting season. Already the farmers are turning over the soil. Away up north the planting has not yet come where the spring-wheat district is, but it will be here in a very few weeks, if not in a few days. Are they to sow spring wheat in that country or are they to wait to plant oats or are they to wait longer and plant corn? These farmers are entitled to know; they are entitled to be told if they will be allowed to sell their wheat in the open market. They are entitled to be told that usurpation of power will cease; that Congress has given no man on earth the right to take away their market; that whoever has done so has usurped power, trampled upon the rights of American citizens, is guilty of oppression in office, and is an enemy of liberty.

Ah, Senators, you will have a shortage sure enough if you do not take your hands off the people who produce and let them run their own business.

I warn you with all the strength of my voice and with all the fervor of my soul if you do not stop meddling with the farmers of the country you will reduce the national efficiency. You are reducing it. You are reducing it lamentably, and you are doing it without any reason whatever.

Mr. President, I believe American patriotism is of such metal that rather than lose this war it would go barefooted through winter snows, it would stand hungry in the trenches, it would suffer and die, and with its last gasp it would declare for carrying on the war until it can be honorably ended and America's rights vindicated. But we try the patience of these brave people. Why should a man who knows nothing of their business be permitted to interfere with their affairs?

I would rather have back of this war the enthusiastic, hearty support of all elements of the American people than any other force whatsoever upon this earth. The time may come, I warn you, when you will need to draw upon that great reservoir of patience. Let us not draw on it unnecessarily. Let us put no burdens upon it that are of such a nature that they are borne as men bear chains that rust and eat into their flesh. Let us not do that.

The time, I say, may come when we will need all this patience, for I do not see in the situation anything that gives promise of an early end of this war upon terms satisfactory to us. It seems to me that the great question is, Can our allies hold the line until we can get there in force? That will require at least 18 months of time. We must wait until we can produce mighty fleets and until we can create greater armament—until more and more soldiers can be trained. And as you take our boys from the bosoms of their mothers, as you rend them from the household where they were born, at least leave in the bleeding hearts of the people the feeling that the Government is imposing no burden it can escape, heaping upon them no weight that it can lift.

My countrymen, for so I desire to address you, I appeal with all the sincerity of my soul that these foolish things shall be stopped, that security shall be given to the people of this country and to its business, that the farmer shall be restored to his rights.

I leave off as I began, by saying that this is not a question of tomatoes, it is a question involving success in this great war.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is appropriate, in connection with the speech to which we have just listened, to call attention to an order, a copy of which I have just received, from the United States Fuel Administration as affecting the mines in the States of Colorado, Utah, Montana, and Wyoming. It is to become effective upon the 11th day of March and greatly reduces the prices fixed for coal last November, under which a very considerable increase of production has been noted.

The mines of my State, Mr. President, during the past year increased their production, nothwithstanding the interference to which the Senator from Missouri has referred, something more than 2,000,000 tons, and the mine owners planned to more than double that increase during the present year.

The order just issued I will ask to have published in the RECORD without reading.

UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: We telegraphed last night the following new schedule of prices for Colorado, Montana, Wyoming, and Utah, effective at 7 a. m., March 11, 1918:

Colorado.

Bituminous domestic coal:
Run of mine	$2.25
Prepared sizes	3.50
Slack or screenings	1.25
Bituminous steam coal, Trinidad district:
Run of mine	2.35
Prepared sizes	3.25
Slack or screenings	1.65
Lignite coal:
Run of mine	2.25
Prepared sizes	3.25
Slack or screenings	1.00

The above prices are subject to the following summer reductions:

	Cents.
Bituminous domestic coal:
April 1	70
May 1	50
June 1	35
Aug. 1	15
Bituminous steam coal, Trinidad district:
April 1	40
May 1	30
June 1	20
July 1	10

Utah, Montana, Wyoming.

Run of mine	$2.65
Prepared sizes	3.30
Slack or screenings	1.50

I hope that this new schedule of prices will appeal to you as just to both the consumers and the operators. It has been the result, as I think you will agree, of no small amount of study on our part, and of what at best has been a very difficult situation with which to deal.

Very truly, yours,

UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATION.

It announces on the 11th day of March a schedule of reductions, ranging from $1.20 down to 70 cents, upon all classes of coal except one, which is increased but 5 cents.

The order also announces that the above prices are subject to summer reductions begining with April.

We live, Mr. President (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair), in a State the greater part of which is more than a mile above sea level, and April is quite as inclement and cold as the months of December and January.

Mr. President, the statements required by the food and fuel conservation act from the owners of the various mines to the Trade Commission for the months of August, September, October, and November, 1917, show, under prevailing prices, a net profit of 10.4 cents per ton, together with a considerable list of mines sustaining a loss much in excess of this average.

They also show that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., the great coal concern in my State, a company which perhaps produces more than 30 per cent of the entire output, sold coal under this schedule of prices at a loss of 10 cents per ton, relying for its profits upon its war contracts requiring the manufacture of steel products.

Mr. President, this order, in my judgment, and I have given the subject considerable consideration, will close from 30 to 40 per cent of the coal mines in my State. I do not believe it will be possible for the production to reach a maximum of 60 per cent of what it was last year if this order is permitted to go into effect.

I am sure when the so-called summer schedule, beginning with April, is to take effect many of these mines will either close or the Government must take possession of and run them on its own account. That will ultimate in the monopolization of the coal output by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., which is engaged in other and vaster enterprises than the production of coal. The effect of this order will be to destroy the independents and place the Colorado Coal & Iron monopoly in the State more firmly in the saddle than ever.

I hope that my forebodings regarding the operation of this order will not be verified by events. I shall be delighted if, notwithstanding the gloomy outlook for the coal operators of my State under this order, which, if my information is correct, the engineers connected with the Fuel Commission did not advise or recommend—I say I shall be delighted if the prospect now confronting these producers shall prove by experience to be less gloomy than it seems, but I can see no other result.

Mr. President, when I read this letter—and I received it about half past 2 o'clock—I compared it with some of the provisions of the act under which it assumes to have been promulgated. The act is one "to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel." If there is anything in this last order—and God alone knows, if anybody does, how long it will be in force before another change is made—which encourages the production, conserves the supply, or controls the distribution of fuel, I am unable to find it.

Mr. President, I am as stanch a supporter of the administration as any Member of the Senate; I shall stand by it during the war whatever the consequences. I know that it is doing the best it can; I attribute to it and to those who act for it the loftiest motives and the highest patriotism; but I verily believe that if these constant interferences with production, and particularly with the production of coal, which is the basis and foundation of all our material industries, which is as essential to life as food, is to be subjected to these continual interferences, the winter of 1918–19 will be far more severe upon the people than that through which we are now passing. We must have coal; the only way to obtain it is to encourage its production, and its production can not be encouraged by drastic orders like this.

GIFT OF RED CROSS AMBULANCE BY SENATE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to withhold his motion for a moment in order that I may present a letter, which I think is deserving of perpetuation in the RECORD.

Mr. OVERMAN. I withhold the motion.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I have here a letter from the American Red Cross Society acknowledging the receipt of the ambulance presented by the employees of the United States Senate. I should like to have the letter go into the RECORD as a memorial to their generous and patriotic contribution to the cause.

Mr. WILLIAMS subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Arkansas presented an acknowledgment from the American Red Cross of an ambulance presented by the employees of the Senate. I think this is a matter of sentiment and patriotism. He asked that the letter be printed in the RECORD. I ask that it be read aloud to the Senate before it goes into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The letter was read by the Secretary, as follows:

Paris, February 16, 1918.

THE EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: It gives me great pleasure to inform you that the ambulance presented by the employees of the United States Senate to the American Red Cross has arrived. It is regrettable that your gift remained in transit for so great a length of time, but I realize you can understand the tremendous task that transportation was suddenly called upon to perform. However, your gift is most welcome, though I am sorry to say it will no doubt be in constant use for many months to come. The splendid thought and desire to help in every way our wonderful men is most magnificent. The American people certainly have risen to a point of patriotism and generosity that surpasses in every way the most optimistic ideals, and I wish most sincerely to thank you in the name of the American Red Cross and the American Army for your splendid gift.

Yours, very truly,

SECTION OF DONATIONS,

PROTECTION OF WAR MATERIAL AND TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. NELSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 8, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God and Father of us all, above all, through all, and in us all, Thou knowest the terrible condition in which the world has been plunged, in an unparalleled war, for its cruelty, hate, and revenge.

Heal, we beseech Thee, the broken hearts, comfort the sorrowing, strengthen the weak, encourage every legitimate effort to bring peace again to the world; that the wrecked homes may be restored and hope again reign in the hearts of mankind; that the prayer of prayers may be answered and Thy will be done in earth as in heaven, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to speak for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, in the time granted me I desire to have the Clerk read a telegram sent by order of the Prohibition national convention and directed to the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to have a telegram read. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand on what subject the telegram was.

Mr. RANDALL. The telegram was sent by order of the Prohibition national convention, and naturally it is on the subject of prohibition.

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., March 6, 1918.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Care Hon. CHARLES H. RANDALL,
Washington, D. C.:

The Prohibition Party in national convention assembled would first of all declare our loyal Americanism and pledge our loyalty to our President and every branch of the Government in every effort to protect American rights and to make the world safe for democracy; but at the same time democracy should be made safe for the world. To do this the Government must set its face against every evil in the present conflict with Germany. The greatest ally of the Kaiser in our land is the liquor traffic. We demand the immediate killing of this traitor by the enactment of war prohibition for the Nation. We assure you that the declaration that organized labor would band itself against the Government if prohibition were enacted is a libel upon our toilers, and we brand as traitors those so-called labor leaders who by this threat would take the Government by the throat. We declare it not merely pitiful but disloyal to worse than destroy, in making drink, enough foodstuffs to feed the armies at the front. We protest against permitting this to be done, while calling upon our children to do without bread and meat and sweets. Do the right and give us nation-wide prohibition at once, and call upon our allies to do the same for their lands.

By order of Prohibition national convention.

T. MARCELLUS MARSHALL,
B. E. P. PRUGH,
W. M. GODWIN.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for leave to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have just listened to the telegram read at the request of the Member from California. I, too, get telegrams of the same tenor from individuals. Congress enacted a law prohibiting the making of alcoholic drinks for beverage purposes, and the same law authorized the President to prohibit or regulate the making of beer, and the President did prohibit the making of beer containing more than 2½ per cent of alcohol and can now prohibit the making of beer that contains any alcohol.

We are sending to our allies barley, corn, and oats, and these are used by our allies for the making of beer.

I voted, voicing the sentiment of my constituents, to submit a constitutional amendment for national prohibition. I just want to make that statement.

We are in this greatest of all wars in the history of the human race for democracy. Our boys are in the trenches. We are feeding and financing our allies. Our allies are making beer from our grain exported to them. Shall we embargo our exports of grain?

As legislators, we must look over the whole situation at home and abroad. Is it wise to embargo grain supplies to our allies because they make a portion of it into beer? If so, we go without markets for a part of our product. If the President prohibits the production of beer 2½ per cent alcohol, we lose a home market for a large per cent of our corn, barley, and oats, and a large per cent of internal-revenue tax upon the same.

I know there are good people who believe it wise to so prohibit, and there are some people who look to that end without regard to other matters and some who look at the universe through a gimlet hole, and the universe is according to the range of their vision. [Applause.]

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE SUNDAY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. NORTON) to preside as Speaker pro tempore next Sunday.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HICKS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of manning the merchant ships with naval crews.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' INSURANCE.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up at this time and pass Senate joint resolution 133.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks to take from the Speaker's desk and consider at this time Senate joint resolution 133. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, let it be reported.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair has ordered done.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

Resolved, etc., That insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, shall be granted by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance on application made by the person to be insured or, subject to such regulations as the bureau may prescribe, by any other person.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from Texas ought to make some explanation of this resolution.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon when I tried to get this up I explained the reason for it. The reason for the introduction of this resolution at this time is that there are a good many men in the service now whose position is such that it is impossible for them either to apply for insurance or indorse an application for insurance.

Mr. COX. Who are they?

Mr. RAYBURN. For instance, we have a good many men in prison in Germany and they can not do it. We have them scattered in different services over the world and——

Mr. COX. Are they in the Army or some branch of the military service?

Mr. RAYBURN. Those fellows captured are in the Army.

Mr. COX. That is true. As I caught the reading of the resolution—I may be wrong—it seemed broad enough to permit the wives of soldiers or fathers and mothers of soldiers to take out insurance for those soldiers.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is what it is intended for.

Mr. COX. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Suppose a soldier who is now in the service had already taken out insurance. Would this provision permit his wife to take out additional insurance?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; this is for people who have not made any application for insurance at all.

Mr. COX. How is that?

Mr. RAYBURN. This is for people who have not made application for insurance at all.

Mr. COX. It would be those people now who are in the military service in some way?

Mr. RAYBURN. And the time for which they can apply for this insurance will expire on the 12th of April.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose the soldier had applied for $5,000 insurance, would this enable his wife or some other member of the family to apply for an additional $5,000?

Mr. RAYBURN. It would not. This is to cover cases where they have not applied. It would not cover a case where there has been an application filed. This says that it must be applied for by the soldier himself or by another person. I am going to offer an amendment, however, if we are able to get the bill up, which will provide to strike out the words "by any other person," because I think that is a little too broad, and insert in lieu thereof "by any person who under the law can be named as a beneficiary under the policy."

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was informed the other day by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance that under the present regulations, where the soldier has made an application for, say, $5,000 of insurance, and has obtained it, any member of his family who might be a beneficiary could make an application for an additional $5,000, but the application for the additional amount would have to be approved by him and sent back before it was issued. Does this resolution cover that situation?

Mr. RAYBURN. No. This resolution simply covers persons who have made no application whatever. The regulations now are that the soldier if he makes the application himself, or if somebody else makes it, must indorse the application, and some of these fellows are in a position where they can neither make the application themselves nor indorse an application. And it is supposed to cover cases of that kind.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where the application is made by some other than the soldier himself, does that contemplate that the premium shall be deducted from his pay as a soldier?

Mr. RAYBURN. They are not going to question where that premium is paid. It can be paid by him or by somebody else.

Mr. BARKLEY. But where it is applied for by somebody else, it would not be deducted from his pay unless he consented to it?

Mr. RAYBURN. No, sir.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The question I wanted to ask is the one brought out by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I understand that under this law where the soldier applies for insurance and it is granted, then the premium is taken out of the soldier's pay. Now, in case the soldier does not care to take out the insurance and somebody else takes out the insurance under this resolution, after the policy is issued, would it be possible then for the War-Risk Insurance Bureau to take from the soldier's pay the premium for insurance which perhaps he does not care for?

Mr. RAYBURN. That, of course, would be subject to regulation, and I do not think, however, that the bureau would make a regulation that a fellow should pay out money for something he had not applied for.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, this law ought not to be broadened in this way by unanimous consent. I think it ought to be discussed fully; so I object.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for just a moment?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is most important, if we are going to pass this resolution, that it be passed pretty soon. This time absolutely expires on April 12, and that is after we have given a 60-day extension on it. After April 12 it will not do any good to pass a law like this for the fellows in the service now, more than 2,000,000 of them, but it might do good to the fellow that goes in the service hereafter.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not wish to delay it, but it does not seem to me right that such a broadening of the original law should be permitted without a full discussion. If it was right it should have been put into the original law.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will say to the gentleman it was the intention of the framers of the original law, but the Attorney General in a ruling asked for by the bureau on that very point held they could not take out the insurance unless the soldier applied for it or indorsed the application.

Mr. GILLETT. It seems to me that was right. It does not seem to me anybody ought to be allowed to take it out. I recognize the exception that the gentleman stated yesterday, of a man being a prisoner so that he could not apply himself, and if the gentleman would limit it to that I would be glad to consent, but I do not see any other reason for it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would be willing, of course, to limit it to such a limitation on it as would cover the case. But there are other cases that have been specifically called to my attention, of men who are in a position, besides the men who are in prison, to not get this insurance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

FURLOUGHS TO ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 9100, a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to grant furloughs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9100) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowances to enlisted men of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of War the interests of the service or the national security and defense render it necessary or desirable, the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to grant furloughs to enlisted men of the Army of the United States with or without pay and allowances or with partial pay and allowances, and for such periods as he may designate, to permit said enlisted men to engage in civil occupations and pursuits.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Add at the end of the bill the following proviso, after the word "pursuits" in line 10, page 1:

Provided, That such furloughs shall be granted only upon the voluntary application of such enlisted men under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF WAR.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 9352, increasing the number of the Assistant Secretaries of War by two.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890 (26 Stats., p. 17), be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"There shall be in the Department of War an Assistant Secretary, a Second Assistant Secretary, and a Third Assistant Secretary, each of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of $4,500 a year, payable monthly, and shall perform such duties in the Department of War as shall be prescribed by the Secretary or as may be required by law."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SHOUSE rose.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of another bill.

The SPEAKER. I think the gentleman is too greedy. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

PENSIONS.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I want to call up a pension bill, H. R. 10477.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10477) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of James H. Woods, late of Company I, One hundred and twentieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas C. Thodey, late of Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lilla J. Darling, helpless and dependent child of Nelson Darling, late unassigned, Twenty-second Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John Wilson, late of Company I, Twenty-third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Annie Garner, helpless and dependent child of William H. Garner, late of Company C, One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George H. Bostwick, late of Company I, Seventy-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jeremiah Wilson, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment, and Company C, First Regiment, West Virginia Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William S. Snodgrass, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Cyrus C. Marston, late of Company B, Brackett's Battalion Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HILLIARD). The gentleman from Kansas offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Committee amendment: Page 4, line 9, strike out lines 9, 10, 11, and 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Stillman P. Daily, late of unassigned drafted man, nineteenth congressional district, Pennsylvania, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 1, after the word "late," strike out the word "of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of David E. Tussing, late of Company A, One hundred and sixty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 19, line 12, after the word "and," strike out the words "sixty-seventh" and insert the words "seventy-sixth."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Eli Pealer, late of Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if the Committee on Invalid Pensions has given any consideration to a general pension bill to make the pension of all veterans of the Union Army who served 90 days or more some specific amount, say $50?

Mr. SHOUSE. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has agreed upon a bill which will increase all pensions 30 per cent, with a minimum of $25 and a maximum of $50 a month. That bill has been reported favorably by the committee.

Mr. DYER. Will it be taken up at an early date?

Mr. SHOUSE. At the earliest possible date.

Mr. DYER. I think that is something that ought to be done, giving justice in a larger measure to these old soldiers than these special pension bills.

I want to ask the gentleman about two or three widows here who are named at the bottom of page 20. What is the occasion for a pension for Ellen M. Davenport? We have a law now which gives to widows of Civil War veterans $25 a month.

Mr. SHOUSE. This widow was married June 4, 1907. The existing law does not allow a pension in case of a marriage following June, 1905. There are cases of widows who have married more than once after the death of a soldier husband.

Mr. DYER. Where the widows have married more than once, does the Committee on Invalid Pensions give consideration to those cases?

Mr. SHOUSE. Yes; it does.

Mr. DYER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHOUSE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FURLOUGHS FOR CIVIL AND INDUSTRIAL OCCUPATIONS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for present consideration of H. R. 9100, authorizing the Secretary of War to grant furloughs for civil and industrial occupations.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 9100) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowances to enlisted men of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object. I did object before, but representations have been made to me of the great importance of this matter, particularly to the farming and agricultural communities, and the great need for assistance to get the crops planted; and while I do not think an important matter like this should be brought in without some notice, I have no objection to it, and hope no objection will be raised to it.

Mr. DENT. I am glad the gentleman withdraws his objection. Unless this bill is passed now, it will be of no use to pass it, so far as the farmers are concerned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether this bill is intended to apply only during the present war, or whether for all time?

Mr. DENT. During the continuance of the present war. It says so expressly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is that language?

Mr. DENT. In the first line after the enacting clause of the Senate bill it is provided—

That, whenever during the continuance of the present war.

I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that this bill has passed the Senate, but the House bill and the Senate bill got crossed in some way. If I am given consent for the consideration of this bill, I shall ask to substitute the Senate bill, which has that language in it, together with the House proviso.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman then be kind enough to have the Senate bill read for information, so that we can know exactly what are its provisions?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Still reserving the right to object, let us see what the terms of the Senate bill are which the gentleman intends to substitute if consent is granted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 3471) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowances to enlisted men of the Army of the United States, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, whenever during the continuance of the present war in the opinion of the Secretary of War the interests of the service or the national security and defense render it necessary or desirable, the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to grant furloughs to enlisted men of the Army of the United States with or without pay and allowances or with partial pay and allowances, and, for such periods as he may designate, to permit said enlisted men to engage in civil occupations and pursuits.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Is it the intention of this bill to grant unlimited furloughs to enlisted men, so that they may be exempted from Army service entirely?

Mr. DENT. No; they are not exempted from Army service entirely. They are only exempted during the period that they are actually performing some service that will aid or assist in the maintenance of the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. It can be reasonably claimed that the son of a farmer is needed all the year on a farm, and that might be the basis of his claim for a continuous furlough.

Mr. DENT. Of course, the Secretary of War has the power to grant the furlough for any length of time that he wants to; but we are obliged to leave some discretion somewhere, and that is the only place I can see where it can be left.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the intention of the Secretary of War to grant unlimited furloughs, so as to exempt the sons of farmers, granting them an exemption for all time for military service?

Mr. DENT. No; it is not intended to do that.

Mr. KAHN. One of the main reasons of the department for presenting this bill is this: The Secretary can now grant furloughs to the soldier, but while he is on furlough he gets his pay and allowances. This bill gives the Secretary of War the right to furlough him without pay and allowances.

Mr. TOWNER. Either with or without.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. He will get his pay from the farmer while he is working.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is it not also a fact that if he were furloughed under the present law he could not engage in any other occupation?

Mr. KAHN. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is intended merely to grant limited furloughs, I have no objection to the purposes of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. This authorizes the granting of furloughs to enlisted men of the Army. Whom does that include? Does that include drafted men?

Mr. DENT. Drafted men and volunteers. Everybody in the Army except officers.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will say that it is well understood by the Secretary of War, and I think perhaps that in these cases I may say most of the furloughs will be only for a limited time. It is a fact that most of the men who will be benefited by the furloughs are those in the cantonments, not far from their own homes in many instances, who can be furloughed when needed, and probably for a limited time; but it is not expected that any extended furloughs will be granted under the terms of this act, and they will be granted, of course, principally for farming purposes.

Mr. FESS. I notice in the Senate bill there is no provision for furlough upon application.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that if there is no objection to the consideration of this bill, it is my intention to substitute the Senate bill and request that the House proviso to the Senate bill be adopted.

Mr. FESS. That will cover it.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. HICKS. This provides for the issuance of furloughs under regulations by the War Department?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Does that go back to the local board?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. HICKS. How will the soldier apply?

Mr. DENT. To his superior officer.

Mr. HICKS. And it will go from there right to the War Department?

Mr. DENT. Yes; the local boards will have nothing to do with it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. As I understand, the purpose of the bill is to relieve the labor congestion on the farm?

Mr. DENT. Yes; and also in the industries.

Mr. HAUGEN. But more particularly to relieve labor congestion on the farm?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is the question of skill to be taken into consideration?

Mr. DENT. No; skilled or unskilled labor has nothing to do with it.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to ask the chairman if he has thought what effect it would have on the insurance of the men. Would a man be considered as in the military service when furloughed?

Mr. DENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DENISON. If he is injured, would he be considered as injured in the military service?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman means whether he would come within the terms of the insurance?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I hardly think so; but I am not familiar with the insurance bill. It did not originate in the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DENISON. But I suppose the committee and the chairman have thought of that question.

Mr. DENT. Well, I have given the gentleman my opinion—I do not think he would come under the provision of the insurance while on a furlough.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. BLACKMON. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: The bill requires the soldier to make application himself. Suppose the soldier is never able to get his application presented to the Secretary of War? In an application for a dismissal or a relief from the Army he can only present it himself, and a Member of Congress can not present it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls for the regular order. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. BLACKMON. I am reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask to substitute for the House bill Senate bill 3471.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill Senate bill 3471. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill is as follows:

An act (S. 3471) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowances to enlisted men of the Army of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That, whenever during the continuance of the present war in the opinion of the Secretary of War the interests of the service or the national security and defense render it necessary or desirable, the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to grant furloughs to enlisted men of the Army of the United States with or without pay and allowances or with partial pay and allowances, and for such periods as he may designate, to permit said enlisted men to engage in civil occupations and pursuits.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the proviso to the House bill be adopted as a proviso to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the proviso to the House bill be adopted as a proviso to the Senate bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask to have the proviso reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That such furloughs shall be granted only upon the voluntary application of such enlisted men under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. I understand the gentleman from Alabama has made a motion to adopt the proviso of the House bill. I want to ask a question with reference to it. Does the gentleman know what is contemplated to promulgate in the way of regulations before a furlough can be granted?

Mr. DENT. I can not answer the question in detail, but I understand, from statements made before the committee by the Secretary of War, that regulations will be so promulgated that each soldier will have his opportunity to know what his rights on the subject are and will be given his day in court and a fair hearing.

Mr. WALSH. He will have to submit his request for a furlough through the usual military channel. If the commanding officer should decline to approve it, it would never reach the Secretary of War. If he should happen to be a particularly valuable man in his company as well as a valuable man on the farm, it might not reach the Secretary of War.

Mr. DENT. I will state that my colleague from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] was raising that question a moment ago when the regular order was demanded. Personally, I would not object to an amendment to the bill as suggested by him, that the parent or guardian could make the application, but it would delay the passage of the bill and perhaps make the bill objectionable to the War Department. I think it ought to go through the regular channel. It is true that there will be occasions where some autocratic officer may refuse to do justice to his men, but you can not help that to save your life. The only way we can get around that is to request the War Department that when cases of that kind are called to the attention of the Secretary of War, Chief of Staff, or The Adjutant General the matter shall be handled directly. I will state that so far as my influence goes with the Secretary of War and the War Deparment, I shall undertake to see that each man is fairly treated.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentlemtn yield?

Mr. WALSH. I had not finished my question.

Mr. DENT. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts further, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Virginia will pardon me for a moment. Would not the distinguished chairman of the Military Committee suggest a way whereby these men who are needed for the particular purpose that is sought to be accomplished by this bill can be assured that when they apply for furloughs for this purpose that their application will reach the Secretary of War's office, whether approved or disapproved by the commanding officer?

Mr. DENT. I can only repeat what I stated a moment ago—that that can be done and must be done, necessarily, by regulation—and I hope and believe that regulations will be adopted to carry out that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. That is the purpose of this proviso?

Mr. DENT. That is the purpose of this proviso.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] said that to adopt the amendment referred to, that is the amendment of his colleague, Mr. BLACKMON, would delay the passage of this bill. Why would that action delay the passage of the bill? The bill will be returned to the Senate, should the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] be adopted.

Mr. DENT. Because I do not think the Senate would adopt it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is quite another matter. But if we adopt this proviso, the bill of necessity will be returned to the Senate.

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So that we will not delay consideration of this resolution a moment by adding the amendment suggested, an amendment which the gentleman from Alabama says he favors.

Mr. DENT. I said that I had no personal objection to it. I will state to the gentleman, but I believe that if that question is raised on the floor of the House, it will get up an argument over this bill, and the bill will likely fail, and I think that we ought to trust somebody down in the War Department to adopt regulations that will carry out the true spirit of the matter.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I recall perfectly well that when the amendment providing for conscription, was under consideration, the House was advised of the procedure that would prevail with respect to bringing applications for exemption before the War Department. Yet it is within the experience of every Member of this House, that it is almost impossible for the papers of individual applications submitted at the several camps to reach the War Department for the purposes of review. Why not provide by some explicit provision of law, that these papers shall be transmitted to the War Department, whatever may be the action of the subordinate military authorities? That is a proposition so palpably right that I can see no reason why it should not be enacted into law.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Alabama will permit, if the gentleman from Virginia will bear in mind one feature of this matter, perhaps he will find part of the explanation that he seeks. I think this proviso is written into the law not so much to provide a means whereby a soldier may make application for a furlough as it is to prevent his being furloughed against his will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I never heard of a case of a soldier being furloughed against his will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. A man already in the military service may not want to go out and work in civil employment at the behest of some guardian, father, or other interested person. He has already established his status according to his own desires, and if you allow outside influences to carry it to the War Department or anyone else to carry it up there, a demand for his furlough without his own consent, the soldier may find himself furloughed against his will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will say that I have never heard of such a case, and a gentleman of large military experience has just stated to me, that there are no such cases.

Mr. DENT. I have had experience with just such cases.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is the one exception that proves the rule.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have had one of those cases.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The department will not be burdened with many such cases. It is certainly something greatly out of the ordinary situation, indeed a most unusual and extraordinary experience, for a young man in the service and anxious to fight, to be furloughed against his consent and taken out of the Army.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota and Mr. SLAYDEN rose.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama has yielded to me or has tried to yield to me

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama had an hour. How much time does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Texas will take his time by asking a question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not want to consent to that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question, if the gentleman will yield for that purpose. As I understand the proviso it contemplates the sending of these applications to Washington. Before whom or what will these applications go in Washington for consideration and decision?

Mr. DENT. Through the regular military channels.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. To what individual here?

Mr. DENT. Through The Adjutant General to the Chief of Staff and up to the Secretary of War.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The Secretary of War, of course, can not do anything of the kind, he can not take up these individual cases and decide them. Who is the man that is going to do it?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman knows that I can not tell. I certainly would not be able to name what individual or individuals would be designated by the Secretary of War or the Chief of Staff to handle these matters.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That leads me to this inquiry. Will not that result in this situation: Every father throughout the country, or every mother who wants her boy away from the military service, will be beseeching every Member of Congress to rush down to some person, some commission, or some committee or the Secretary of War to have one of these furloughs granted. Should not the decision of these matters rest out in the field immediately where the man is? I am seriously opposed to that proviso.

Mr. DENT. I would state to the gentleman that I raised that very question with the Secretary of War when he first submitted this bill to me, and he told me that it was to be his purpose in ordinary cases—in 90 per cent of the cases, in fact—to allow the division commander, the man on the ground who knew about the situation, to pass on the case, except in those cases where it was shown that an injustice was done. Of course, that is the only way it can be handled.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is the gentleman going to insist on a vote on this without any further discussion of the bill?

Mr. DENT. Of course, I am not going to insist upon it without any further discussion, but I thought we had had enough discussion of the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to have five minutes in which to discuss it.

Mr. DENT. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 45 minutes remaining.

Mr. DENT. How much time does the gentleman from Texas want?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was preparing an amendment to offer when the bill is read.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am going to propose an amendment to provide that the application of an enlisted man for a furlough shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Not yet.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman want any time?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Alabama to grant me a moment or two to ask a question.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman want to know whether I have objection to that amendment?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Personally I have not, but the more amendments we tack on the bill that much more you affect the chances of its getting through.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I realize that objection, but let me get through with my question, as I understand the gentleman has yielded to me. I want to see a precedent established in this matter that would be followed in other legislation touching the Navy. Now, I know personally of a case, I know of two cases right now, where unless this privilege is conceded to the soldier, who happens to be the only laboring man and, in fact, the only man in the family who can do farm work, ground will be uncultivated this year upon which food crops are ordinarily produced. One of these men is in the Navy and is on the Great Lakes. I do not know where the other is.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. In a moment. I should like to see this amendment agreed to as a precedent. Now, the gentleman from Alabama knows as well as I do that if the application of a soldier, of an enlisted man, for a furlough for the purpose that is contemplated in this bill, should happen to be disapproved by the captain of his company or the colonel of his regiment, under the language that the bill now carries it would never reach the Secretary of War.

Mr. DENT. Unless regulations, as I stated, were adopted to require that to be done.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We can require it to be done.

Mr. DENT. And I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. SLAYDEN. And we ought to require it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. Do I understand the gentleman's amendment provides that all of the applications are to be sent here? The gentleman means those refused, does he not? What is the necessity of sending those granted to the Secretary of War?

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. STEVENSON. Those that are approved and the furlough granted——

Mr. SLAYDEN. The bill says they must go to the Secretary of War; he is the authority to pass on it.

Mr. STEVENSON. He passes on it by a subordinate officer.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is another matter.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman mean to say that if the officer grants the furlough, then is there any necessity of sending it up here?

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the Secretary of War can delegate that power and probably will. Of course, if the application should be approved there will be no necessity for sending it on to the Secretary of War. I will correct my amendment to that extent. It was hastily drawn in the last five minutes.

No one wants to cripple the Army. But it is certain that where farms are stripped of all labor the growing of food crops, an essential for successful military enterprises, will be much reduced.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question or a suggestion?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that if there are to be appeals constantly as indicated that we will get into a great tangle and confusion with probably two or three hundred clerks to be added in the War Department.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Thousand.

Mr. CANNON. Two or three thousand, my friend says. Now, the only necessity for this legislation, as it seems to me, is that the time may come when mechanics are needed in the munition factories or elsewhere or in the shipyards, or farmers temporarily or permanently to raise or harvest the crops, as the case may be. Therefore I apprehend if there should be a condition of that kind, perhaps even under existing law, I ask for information, the Secretary of War or the President of the United States might so state and direct that the names should be furnished to him of the skilled people and that they might be temporarily granted a furlough during the stress all along the line.

Mr. DENT. Except they would have to pay them now and under this resolution there would be no pay.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the only question about it is whether they get that pay, or transportation, or both, and it might be fixed by regulation. I could conceive that you might take in farmers during the crop season and the harvest season and that you might ask that the farmers in whole or part pay their way, and so on, so that if we leave it subject to regulation it seems to me that there can be no real danger, especially if the want was so great that from the standpoint of winning the war it was necessary to have men of various callings doing piecework temporarily or otherwise during the continuance of the war.

Mr. DENT. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I understand the gentleman does not desire to yield for speeches, but will yield for a question.

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. FERRIS. If an applicant applies for a furlough now, however great the emergency, the Provost Marshal's office of the War Department can do only two things, either discharge him entirely or keep him. Is that true?

Mr. DENT. Oh, no; they grant a furlough now, but we have to pay a man while on furlough. I think the Secretary of War could now grant a furlough to a man in the Army on the condition that he should do work on a farm during the period of his furlough, and if he violated that condition put him back in the Army, so that really the only change in this law is the matter of furlough without pay.

Mr. FERRIS. I hesitate to make the statement I am going to make, but I took up a very pathetic case this morning with the Provost Marshal's office, and they advised me that until this bill passed only one of two things could well be done, either discharge the soldier or retain him. And if that is the situation either in law or regulation this should be put through promptly. The draft law was put through under great stress and pressure, and doubtless there were some oversights in it. It was impossible to legislate into the minds of the several local boards an equal view of the law or of the regulations. And it resulted in many cases in taking men into the Army and leaving three or four hundred acres of wheat behind, with the wife in delicate condition, and a family dependent upon them. There is no way to get them out until such a law as this is passed. It is so essential in the farming sections that this be done to prevent, in many cases, hardships that can be avoided. I feel this will help out. I am glad the department is helping to arrange it. I am glad the committee is urging it. I hope the regulations will be carefully framed, so it will be effective and beget early results. If there is much delay about it, it will not be effective for this year's crop. The growing and harvesting of crops is so essential we must make no mistakes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] three minutes, and then I am going to move the previous question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What is the gentleman's reason for cutting it off in this kind of way?

Mr. DENT. I think the House has generally discussed it, and is thoroughly familiar with it. However, I will withdraw the statement to the effect that I would move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has just stated the only circumstance that would in any degree justify taking men from the Military Establishment and putting them on the farm or at work in factories. That position has been indorsed by the chairman of the committee. It may be possible that legislation of this character may be desirable to accomplish that purpose. The form proposed for this legislation makes it possible to corrupt our entire Military Establishment.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Wait a moment. I have only three minutes.

The result of this would be, if the amendment is adopted, that political pressure will come from all over the United States in the effort to have released men from active military work—a pressure for interference that will punish the membership of this House and of the Senate beyond measure. You will be opening a barrel of hornets to afflict us all. There is peril in any weakening of our military grasp. The selective draft is working splendidly. Men once in must be kept in as completely as our military needs may require. When men go into the Military Establishment they must be under military control, kept there for military purposes, and be not allowed to go out for any other reason. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Virginia opens up the door for every father, and mother, and wife, and sister, and child in the United States to besiege military officers and this Congress to make slackers, if you please. It does that very thing. Many will not hesitate to make slackers of their relatives in order that they may escape military burdens. In this military game we must play no favorites. Everybody in and everybody out of the military service must be given to know that military consideration will control the assignment of every soldier to duty. Every morning's mail we pick up now is filled with requests for a transfer of soldiers from the Infantry or Artillery to some place where they think there is no danger. This would put a premium upon that, and will advertise to the people of the country that that can be done. Now, if it is the disposition of the House to pass this bill at all, for goodness sake do not couple with it the requirement that all of these applications shall come to Washington, before a man or a commission before which you and I and everybody else will be solicited to present the cases of these deserving individuals. A purely military consideration should control, so the decision in these cases should rest with the military authorities. That is all I have to say. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I will use the three minutes, but I simply wish to say that in the consideration of this bill by the Committee on Military Affairs we had some very grave apprehensions of the danger connected with it, and we have tried to guard it in the best way we could find to guard it, in our judgment. The Secretary of War wants this legislation for certain purposes, which he explained to us, and to be used not to let all of the men out of the Army but to give him control of certain men whom he believed by furloughing to certain occupations can do better than by keeping them in the service. Now, if the proposition was, as one gentleman fears, to disrupt the Army, and it was going to let large numbers out, this bill ought to be defeated. We have undertaken to build up a great Army in this country, and we now have one. We do not want to pass any legislation that will make it possible to destroy that Army by giving anybody the power to furlough out regiments or companies of men by the hundreds, and to guard against that we put in the provision that a soldier could not be furloughed except on his own application. There is a good reason for that, in my judgment. I am one of those who believe that the man who puts on the uniform of our country and fights our battles should not be asked or required to take a furlough in order to go home and go on to the farm or into the shop in the summer time for the purpose of producing food or materials with which to feed and clothe those of us who are not in the Army. I want these men to be soldiers. That is what they are in the Army for; and I want them to have furloughs occasionally. When they go home I want them to have the privilege of enjoying two or three weeks with their friends in that kind of recreation that a soldier ought to have. And to expect these boys to go out of the Army and back to the plow and into the fields to do the work that the men at home ought to do, I do not believe in, except when with the soldier's consent. And therefore we put in the provision that the soldier must ask for the furlough before he will be furloughed out into civilian life, with or without pay.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. In the letter from the Secretary of War to the chairman of the committee the whole thing is explained in these words—it is really an emergency measure in time of harvest. He says:

> The main purpose for which it is intended to use this authority is to furlough soldiers in the National Army during harvest and planting time to enable them to assist in the agricultural production of the country.

It is only a question of emergency with the Secretary of War. If your section of the country and my section of the country are in dire need of these men they could be furloughed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit an amendment to the amendment to the joint resolution, the substance of which has been intimated heretofore. This amendment provides that the application for this furlough may be made by other persons as well as by the soldier; that it may be by his parents, or guardian. If this joint resolution is to accomplish any results of benefit, then it should be so framed, that the facts of a meritorious situation may be brought to the attention of the Secretary of War by the application of other persons than the soldier. It should not be limited to the soldier. The environments and conditions of a camp are such that they restrain young men from making applications entirely proper to be made. The superior officers often treat these applications in such a contemptuous fashion, that a young man is unwilling to expose himself to this treatment. No such limitations will surround the parents, or guardians in such cases. If this resolution is to accomplish anything, if it is to be something more than sounding brass, and tinkling cymbal, if the Secretary of War is to give furloughs in meritorious and deserving cases, then provision should be made by which such cases will inevitably be brought to his attention.

We were told time and time again that the purpose of the draft act was to provide a selective system for taking men into the Army, under which agriculture, and other essential industries would not suffer. And yet this body knows perfectly well, from statements made on the floor by numerous Members that time and time again they have been to the War Department with cases of the very greatest merit, cases in which it was incontrovertibly shown by the evidence before the district and local boards, that the individual in question ought to have been exempted either on the ground of his vital relation to some industry, or of dependents upon his labor, only to be told that nothing could be done. I have taken up cases with officials in the Provost Marshal General's office and upon the facts stated, been told that these cases were meritorious, and entitled to relief, but that this relief could not be secured at the department upon appeal, that it should have been afforded by the boards. In many of these cases the parties concerned were ignorant of their rights, or were advised that the time had passed for action upon their applications. That has been the experience of many Members of this body.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Does not the gentleman think it would embarrass the War Department to allow the parent or guardian to do it?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; I do not. The conditions at the camps are such that the individual soldier, by reason of the sentiment prevailing there, would decline to make the application, although he might be urgently needed at home. I would like to see this resolution put in such a shape that a real remedy for many cases of hardship will be afforded, and meritorious cases will be brought before the Secretary of War, or the tribunal that he will create to hear these applications. This House should provide by appropriate amendment that those cases when acted on adversely at the camps shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War, so that upon the evidence transmitted justice may be done in each case upon the merits of the same. Unless this is going to be done, unless the meritorious cases of individuals without influence, or means, will be brought in some positive and affirmative way before the Secretary of War, for final action, then this bill will be worthless. It merely holds out a hope of relief that in the result will never be realized. There has been no adequate time given in which to discuss a matter of such importance as this. If the House would take up this resolution under circumstances admitting of a full presentation of the facts, it would soon reach the conclusion that conditions, on the homes, and the farms are such that a measure of real relief is needed, such a measure as this resolution would be, if appropriate and necessary amendments were adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on adding the proviso to the Senate bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to the proviso which I sent to the desk.

Mr. DENT. I did not yield the floor for anything except debate.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman's amendment is up——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I did not want to take advantage of the situation. I did not get permission from the gentleman to offer an amendment. I sent the amendment to the desk. When the Speaker said there was an amendment pending, I thought he referred to my amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, has my time expired?

The SPEAKER. No. The Speaker was simply trying to cut it off.

Mr. DENT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will cut it off by moving the previous question on the resolution and all amendments thereto to final passage, with the right to anybody to offer amendments.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have an amendment which I made applicable to the House bill. It can follow the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SLAYDEN to amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Add at the end of the proviso the following:

"And provided further, That the application by the soldier for furlough not approved by the officer to whom power to pass on the same is given shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War for approval or disapproval."

The SPEAKER. Is that the Slayden amendment?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Now the Clerk will report the Saunders amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS to the amendment offered by Mr. DENT: After the words "enlisted men," in the proviso, insert the words "or of a parent or guardian of an enlisted man."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is a motion to strike out the last word in order?

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] moved the previous question. The question is on the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken first on the Saunders amendment, inasmuch as that simply perfects the text of the proviso.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the Saunders amendment read again, please.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the Saunders amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia to the amendment offered by Mr. DENT: After the words "enlisted men" in the proviso insert the words "or of a parent or guardian of an enlisted man," so that as amended the proviso will read:

"Provided, That such furloughs will be granted only on the voluntary application of such enlisted men or the parent or guardian of an enlisted man under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Saunders amendment to the proviso.

The question was taken, and the Saunders amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Slayden amendment to the proviso.

The question was taken, and the Slayden amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on adding the proviso to the Senate bill.

The question was taken, and the proviso was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The House bill (No. 9100) of similar tenor will, without objection, lie on the table.

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the same being the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, the following Members were given leave to extend remarks on the bill (S. 3471) just passed: Mr. SCHALL, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. BURNETT, Mr. HAMLIN, Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. SLEMP, Mr. SLOAN, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, and Mr. FOCHT.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Collecting the income tax: For expenses of assessing and collecting the income tax as provided in Title I of an act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, and subsequent acts, including the employment of agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, and messengers in the District of Columbia, and the several collection districts, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $3,000,000: Provided, That not more than $215,000 of the foregoing sum may be used for the employment, in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, of necessary clerical and other personal services, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. There seems to be about three different organizations in the Bureau of Internal Revenue to collect three different kinds of taxes. I would like to inquire if there are really three different organizations or forces, and if so, if there is any duplication of work?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say that there is no separate organizations in the sense to which the gentleman apparently refers. These appropriations have been carried in this way owing to the passage of different acts for the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HAMLIN. I suspected that that might be true.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Roper, who was before the committee, said that he had only come into office in December, and in response to a question stated that there was no reason why these sums could not be lumped together, but that it had been impossible for him to give consideration to it owing to the short time that he had been in office.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand that there are different salaries——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think that the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Tennessee ought to recognize the fact that this is the House of Representatives, and not a Democratic caucus.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would not for a moment, Mr. Chairman, overlook the interest that the gentleman from Illinois has in all these matters, and I commend him for it, and I did not mean that the gentleman from Illinois should not hear what I was saying.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought that the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Tennessee were having a private colloquy.

Mr. HAMLIN. The point I wanted to get at is this: There seems to be three different kinds of services in the Internal-Revenue Bureau. The income tax, the ordinary tax, and another class of taxes. I was asking the chairman of the committee if there was any duplication of work, and he says there is not. What I want to inquire further about is this: In the collection of the income tax, for instance, certain salaries are paid to those agents. In the collection of the ordinary tax in the internal revenue there are different salaries paid for practically the same class of work. The impression I had was that sometimes the same agent is used to do both kinds of work.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman want to know why that is?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am asking the question.

Mr. MADDEN. I can answer the gentleman. The reason for that is that when we passed the law organizing the force to collect the income tax the organization of that special force was outside of the civil service, and, of course, that was political patronage, and therefore entitled to a little greater compensation than men who had to go on the pay roll as the result of an examination and prove their qualifications.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is not the answer that I would have given the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. It is true just the same.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not regard the explanation of the gentleman from Illinois either as very lucid or satisfactory.

Mr. MADDEN. It is lucid. It may not be satisfactory, but it is true.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not sure that that is the correct answer.

Mr. MADDEN. Will not the gentleman do me the credit to believe that I would tell the truth on such a subject?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; so far as the exigencies of the occasion would permit. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state that when the different acts were passed providing for increased work on the part of the Internal Revenue Bureau, the commissioner submitted estimates to Congress in each case for such force as he considered would be necessary in order to carry out the will of Congress. He estimated not only the amount of money to be needed, but the number of employees, and they have been carried in the bill in that way.

Mr. HAMLIN. But there is no duplication of work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No duplication of work. It is just as the gentleman said a moment ago; a man may be employed under one of these appropriations and he may be charged not only with the duty of carrying out the particular duties for which he was appointed in the first instance, but he may have other duties in connection with the collection of internal revenue.

Mr. HAMLIN. It may be economy for him to look after another branch of the service while he is in the field?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I can appreciate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, in that same connection, is it not true, speaking seriously——

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman does not mean to intimate that I was not serious.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is not the trouble this—and it goes to other parts of this bill—is it not true that the large salaries are paid where we furnish the department or bureaus with a lump-sum appropriation? Is not that the trouble, and is not that a vice we are somewhat responsible for, not only in this bureau but other departments of the Government, by making lump-sum appropriations? Does not that demonstrate the unwisdom of giving any bureau or department a lump sum of money out of which they can pay salaries? Is it not true that they pay larger salaries than where salaries are fixed by law?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think in the main the salaries paid out of a lump sum are higher than those fixed by Congress.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think and does not agree with me that, in so far as we can do it, we ought to quit appropriating money in lump sums for the payment of salaries?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do; and I will say that the committee has been making earnest efforts to change that practice as far as it can do so, consistent with the best interest of the service.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I was much interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], but not wholly accepted by the gentleman from Missouri as being entirely accurate. I would like to have the gentleman state wherein it is inaccurate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I could give the gentleman a concrete case where it does not seem that his statement is entirely accurate or else it is not appreciated by those in the employ of the Government. I know a young man who is now in the Internal-Revenue Service who was appointed, not under the civil service, but he has recently taken the civil-service examination and is anxious to get into the other branch that is under the civil service.

Mr. MADDEN. So that he could have permanent tenure?

Mr. HAMLIN. That was not it so much as it gives him an opportunity for promotion. There are advantages under the civil service in that service, and I think it is a good thing.

Mr. SLOAN. I expect the gentleman's exception is the exception that proves the rule.

Mr. HAMLIN. No; I do not concede that; but what I wanted to emphasize is my opposition to appropriations by lump sums for the purpose of paying salaries. I think that money is used extravagantly frequently and ought not to be thus handled.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I want to make an observation and then get the opinion of the chairman of the committee on the matter of the payment of the income tax and the excess-profits tax, which would go more, of course, to the Committee on Ways and Means than to this committee, but in order to have a statement that I might make somewhat authoritatively, although not entirely so, I would like to have the opinion of the chairman of this committee. The requirement of the law to pay the income tax at certain periods seems to put a great many people in considerable distress, at least in anticipation of their inability to pay in lump sums. I have a communication from the Columbus Chamber of Commerce which says:

> In the absence of such an extension most of our large businesses will be required either to pay the money out of working capital and reduced profits or to borrow the money from the banks. Moreover, men and business institutions who must be relied upon to absorb the great bulk of liberty bonds will not be in a position to purchase them and at the same time accumulate money for their taxes. Either one or the other must give way. Local bankers estimate that the total payments due from the Columbus district will aggregate at least one-half of the total deposits of the banks of Columbus, and it would seem the same situation exists elsewhere. If, on the other hand, payments may be made in installments, extending over the latter half of the year, by a natural process the Government will have time to redistribute this money in the local channels of trade without serious disturbance to business.

I have another from the Chamber of Commerce of Akron, Ohio. I do not know whether there is a propaganda on behalf of business men to induce a ruling of the Treasury to extend this payment in installments if the Treasury has the power without change of law, but I am getting so many letters asking the question that without definite information I am considerably embarrassed. These letters, whether the result of propaganda or not is not important, come from chambers of commerce from various parts of the State, and very many from individual business men in Springfield, Ohio, and many other places within my own part of the State. I addressed a letter yesterday to Mr. KITCHIN, after speaking to him about it, on the possibility and feasibility of making the proposed change, and have, up to date, not received a reply. I should like to have the privilege of extending that reply in the RECORD when it does come. What I wanted the chairman to state, if he could, is whether it is within the province of the Treasury without further law to extend the payment in installments rather than in lump sums.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman stated, that is a question that could be answered with a great deal more satisfaction and certainty by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, which has jurisdiction of the subject matter. I do not hesitate to say to the gentleman, however, that from some investiagtions I have made I am under the impression that the Treasury Department now has the authority to make some regulations along that line, and I say that for this reason. I had a letter similar to those the gentleman has been receiving, from a very prominent firm in my own city, suggesting that it would be a great convenience to the business people of the entire country if some plan could be devised whereby the income tax could be paid quarterly instead of at one time, as is now required. I took the matter up with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and he stated to me, as I now recall, that the matter had been the subject of a conference between him and the Treasury officials. Personally, he felt that there was a good deal of force and logic in the contention made, but it was not adopted as a result of this conference, primarily because at this particular time the Government is in great need of funds, and on that account it was no thought wise to adopt any such provision or regulation. That was the reason given to me by the department for not adopting the suggestion, and it is for that reason that I have expressed the opinion that the Treasury Department would possibly have the power to put such a regulation into existence if it wanted to within the limitations of the act, which makes provision as to the limit of time when the tax must be finally paid. I have no other reason for making that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. In reading over the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee on the war-finance proposition I noted a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury when a member referred to this matter that liberty bonds and short-time certificates might be received for the payment of taxes, and I take it from what he stated that as the liberty bonds are issued at various times persons by purchasing the bonds at various times could utilize those later on and in that way it would not all come in bulk. That is, by periodic purchases of these Government securities the taxpayer could avoid the complete outlay in one payment. I took it from that statement that in all probability the Secretary of the Treasury was not inclined favorably to distributing it in installments. However, purchasers of such securities had no such purpose when they took them, which was purely on patriotic grounds.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course the Secretary of the Treasury is bound by the provisions of the law. As I remember, the law provides these taxes shall be paid on or before a certain date, and if not paid at that time then a penalty attaches, but I take it that within those limitations the Treasury Department could provide for partial payments, and that is what I meant to say a few moments ago.

Mr. FESS. If that arrangement could be made, it would be a great relief; otherwise from the statement of these men there is going to be considerable absorption of the ready money of the country that will be required in payment of these taxes at one particular time. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing some letters on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by including some letters. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. The following are but a few of the many letters of similar import which come to me from day to day:

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

Hon. SIMEON D. FESS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FESS: I am inclosing herewith a copy of a letter which I addressed to Hon. W. G. McAdoo to-day, and if there is anything that you might do to bring about the desired situation I wish you would give the matter your attention.

We have a number of manufacturers right here in Springfield that will be face to face with ruin if they are compelled to pay this tax on June 15. I think you know enough about manufacturing to realize that increased profits can only come from increased equipment, and since a number of manufacturers have anticipated their profits by installing the necessary equipment they are now in the unfortunate position of having a lot of equipment on their hands and no money to pay this tax.

I am calling this matter to the attention of Messrs. KITCHIN, HARDING, SIMMONS, and POMERENE so that they will be familiar with the situation when you take it up with them.

Thanking you in advance for anything that you can do for us in this matter, I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

GEO. CUGLEY,
President the Buckeye Incubator Co.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO, March 2, 1918.

Hon. S. D. FESS,
Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FESS: Your letter under date of February 27 to our Mr. Cugley is received during his absence and has been referred to the writer.

We certainly appreciate your expression of interest and cooperation in the matter of adjusting the payment of war taxes so that manufacturers will not be obliged to pay this in one lump sum. I am quite sure that the feeling of this company is in hearty accord with other manufacturers, as it can be very readily appreciated that this war tax should be distributed in payments instead of being collected in one lump sum, as war taxes are to cover 12 months' period, and by handling it on a payment basis it would be eliminating the hardship which it would otherwise work on manufacturers.

We will surely appreciate the good work that you can do in this connection, and beg to remain,

Yours, very sincerely,

THE BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO.,
ARTHUR R. HILL,
General Sales Manager, the Buckeye Incubator Co.

These letters and resolutions come from Springfield, Ohio, where the tax will have a hurtful effect:

FEBRUARY 22, 1918.

Hon. S. D. FESS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: The day is fast approaching when, in our modest judgment, there will be a calamity if some relief is not given by your honorable body, together with the Senate. On June 15 excess-profits tax payment must be paid.

Some method of spreading this payment over a few months should—and we are inclined to say, must—be solved, and we urge upon you your best efforts along these lines, which we know will be appreciated by the world at large.

Very truly, yours,

THE RIDGELY TRIMMER CO.,
J. K. WILLIAMS,
General Manager.

Resolution of Springfield Clearing House Association, Springfield, Ohio.

Whereas by the requirements of the Federal income and war-tax laws, taxes assessed thereunder for the year of 1917 must be paid on or before June 15, 1918, and involve an abnormal burden on the taxpayers of the city of Springfield and of Clark County, Ohio, amounting to several millions of dollars, the major portion of which will be borne by the manufacturers of said city, and substantially all of which will have to be handled through the banks thereof; and

Whereas by reason of a maximum of unfavorable conditions, growing out of the past rigid winter, transportation problems, scarcity of fuel, labor, and materials, and excessively high wages, and prices of materials, added to the handicaps consequent upon the war, the manufacturers aforesaid have been unable to accumulate surplus funds and credits requisite to pay the taxes aforesaid; and

Whereas the available resources of the banks of said city will not permit them to loan to said manufacturers the amount necessary to pay said income and war taxes in addition to providing them with requisite funds and credits for their normal business demands; and

Whereas by reason of the causes and conditions aforesaid it is imperative that adequate relief be provided against the payment of all of the income and war taxes aforesaid, within the period aforesaid; otherwise not only will the legitimate and essential operations and business of the manufacturers aforesaid be seriously curtailed and impaired but the ability of said banks to finance the allotment of said city and county of the impending third liberty loan also will be dangerously restricted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the clearing-house banks of the city of Springfield, Ohio, and by the Manufacturers' Association of said city, in joint meeting assembled, as follows, to wit:

1. That it is our unanimous sentiment and conviction that adequate relief must be provided against the dangers and evils which will inevitably ensue from execution of the existing legal requirements that all of said income and war taxes be paid on or before June 15, 1918.

2. That we recommend, as such relief, that the payment of said taxes be apportioned into equal monthly installments throughout the remainder of the present calendar year, beginning with June, 1918.

3. That we recommend that such relief be made effective either by congressional or departmental action, as the law and facts may require.

4. And that copies of this resolution be sent to Hon. William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury; Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, chairman Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives; Hon. FRANCIS M. SIMMONS, chairman Finance Committee of the Senate; Hon. ATLEE POMERENE, Senator from Ohio; Hon. WARREN G. HARDING, Senator from Ohio; and Hon. S. D. FESS, Congressman from this district.

GEO. W. WINGER,
President Springfield Clearing House.
W. S. THOMAS,
For the Manufacturers' Association.

This letter comes from a very substantial business firm:

Hon. S. D. FESS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Under the terms of the Federal statute income and excess-profits taxes are required to be paid in a lump sum on June 15. Unless this requirement is modified so as to permit a distribution of these payments over a considerable period of time in installments, the result may be disastrous.

In the absence of such an extension most of our large businesses will be required either to take the money out of working capital and reduce operation or to borrow the money from banks. Moreover, the men and business institutions who must be relied upon to absorb the great bulk of liberty bonds will not be in a position to purchase them and at the same time accumulate money for their taxes. Either one or the other must give way.

The impairment of the country's financial resources or the curtailment of industry at this time might seriously jeopardize the successful progress of the war.

While this company probably is in a position to pay its income and excess-profits taxes without injury or inconvenience, we think this statement does not apply to most of the larger companies, firms, or individuals. In writing you we are not speaking for ourselves so much as for the general good.

Very truly, yours,

THE DEWEY BROS. CO.

I here append a letter which I referred to Mr. KITCHIN, and also his answer:

THE TRANCHANT & FINNELL CO.,
Osborne, Ohio, March 1, 1918.

Hon. S. D. FESS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FESS: We find there is an agitation on the part of the manufacturer and others who will have income and excess-profit taxes to pay to try and have the payment of same distributed over a considerable period of time in installments.

In the absence of such an extension a number of the larger firms will be required either to take the money out of working capital and reduce operations, or to borrow the money from the banks, and we believe on account of the tightness of money that it is a difficult matter for the banks to increase the line of credit to their depositors over what they are now loaning them. Moreover, the men and business institutions whose money has been relied upon to absorb a large number of liberty bonds will not be able to purchase them and at the same time accumulate money for their taxes. Either one or the other must give way.

If, on the other hand, payments may be made in installments extending over the latter half of the year by a natural process the Government will have time to redistribute this money in the regular channels of trade without a serious disturbance to business.

We kindly ask you to use your influence in bringing about the proper adjustment of this very important matter.

Courteously,

THE TRANCHANT & FINNELL CO.,
Per M. L. FINNELL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8, 1918.

Hon. S. D. FESS.
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FESS: In reply to your letter of the 7th instant, inclosing a letter received by you from Mr. M. L. Finnell, president of the Tranchant & Finnell Co., Osborne, Ohio, with reference to extending the time of payment of the income and excess-profits taxes, I beg to advise that probably no single proposition involved in financing this war has received more careful attention and consideration than the question of extending the time of payment of the income and excess-profits taxes, which become due and payable on June 15, 1918. The war-revenue act became a law on October 3, 1917, and everyone has known since that time that these taxes will have to be met by June 15. The law also provided that these payments might be anticipated by turning in money monthly throughout the year and a credit of 3 per cent would be given for such advance payments. The Secretary of the Treasury has issued certificates of indebtedness bearing 4 per cent interest which taxpayers could buy and which could be used for the payment of these taxes. I am advised that about $1,250,000,000 worth of such certificates have been sold for this purpose.

To extend the time of payment of these taxes only means that the Government will have to issue that many more bonds in order to meet its obligations coming due by June 15. It also makes the amount of money available for use by the Secretary of the Treasury uncertain and might place the Federal Government in a very hazardous position.

Personally, hoping that the time of payment could be extended, I have had several conferences with the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to this matter, and after considering all phases of the matter we have concluded that it will not be for the best interest of the Government to extend the time of such payments. I think the Ways and Means Committee is pretty well agreed that the extensions of the time of payment of these taxes would be inadvisable. If a business concern has a Government contract and is really performing a service that is useful to the conduct of the war, and if such concern can not get relief through its bank, I think that in such a case the War Finance Corporation, when organized, will consider an application from the concern and give relief if found necessary.

Yours, very truly, CLAUDE KITCHIN, Chairman.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. While we are on this income-tax collection I think it may be well enough to say that neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor the Commissioner of Internal Revenue have the power to make regulations for the payment of taxes in periods. The tax-payment period is fixed by law. Before the revenue law was passed the business public were very urgent in their demand for a provision which would authorize the payment of taxes quarterly, and that demand had two objects. One was that the banks should not be drawn against for so large an amount of money as will be required to pay the taxes at a particular date. Another was that most of the people engaged in business would have to borrow the money to pay the taxes, and it might be hard for the banks to accommodate them. Many gentlemen in the House thought there ought not to be quarterly periods of payment. I think one leading financial authority, the former chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. Fitzgerald, offered an amendment to the revenue bill to provide that returns should be filed on a fixed day, and that checks should accompany the statements. Of course his advocacy of that proposition was based on the theory that every man who has a return to make always has a large bank account. But the reverse of that is true and is particularly true since the war began, for in all lines except lines directly connected with the war, business has fallen off, incomes have decreased, profits have dwindled, and losses have taken the place of profits in a large line of industrial institutions throughout the country, and that is going to happen to a greater and greater degree as the war proceeds, for all industries not essentially necessary for the war are going to find themselves without business. For, as the war needs grow greater, a larger percentage of our men will be called upon to engage in war activities either at the front or back of the lines, and a great many institutions of different kinds will go out of business. They are going out of business already. One of the most important business industries in the United States is the building trades. It ramifies into more activities than any other line of business, but in every place in the United States, except where a need is found for building construction in connection with the war, that line of industry has stopped, the men previously engaged in it are idle except those who have been able to find employment in the shipbuilding yards and in the construction of gun factories and similar institutions for the Government, and there are thousands of men, mechanics, trained in the art of building, who are out on the street looking for employment, and the men who formerly employed them are out on the street looking for a job themselves. We can not gauge what has happened to the country by looking——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). At the rent rolls in Washington or the price of food in restaurants here or the charges of the hotels here and the difficulty in getting a place to sleep. This is the only city in the United States that has profited by the war. All the other cities find themselves in a condition of distress caused by the war, and if those gentlemen who are responsible for the enactment of revenue laws have a care for the proper protection of the business of the country they will in the next revenue bill provide for periods of payment in quarterly installments of those taxes, because there is nothing more difficult to understand than the fact that men prosperous in other times are to-day on the ragged edge of despair. We have got to look the facts in the face. We have got to meet the situation as we find it and encourage the people, in every way we can, to cooperate with the Government in the great undertaking in which it is engaged.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will not the gentleman join me in the wish, also, that in the next revenue bill all the present revenue laws will be combined——

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to see that done.

Mr. HAMLIN. So that the people could understand just how they are taxed and for what?

Mr. MADDEN. I really used to think myself an expert accountant—so classed sometimes—but I have had great trouble to find out how to make my income-tax returns. The forms which are furnished upon which to make those returns are so complicated that it is hard to tell where to enter any particular item of income, and the law itself covers such a wide range of complications that often a lawyer is obliged to employ an expert accountant to figure out the intricate problems that must be solved in making out an income-tax return. I hope the wise men in this House, who are sitting on the Ways and Means Committee because of their wisdom and knowledge and experience, will take into account the fact that most of us laymen in the House are not as wise as they are and can not see as far through complicated problems as they can, and that the next legislation will be simplified so that an ordinary man will be able to understand it. Take notice, Brother MOORE, that is what we are looking for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not like my friend from Illinois to take advantage of the absence of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who is now engaged on another revenue bill which may attract the attention of the gentleman even more than those hitherto passed may have done——

Mr. MADDEN. The revenue bill he is considering now, if he is considering it, is one of the problems of the war.

It establishes a new corporation of $500,000,000 capital and authorizes a board to be appointed by the President, formerly authorized to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury and discharged by him, and they may create obligations of $4,000,000,000 more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is an effort being made to prevent the wildcat business to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MADDEN. I am proud to say that the members of the Ways and Means Committee, both on the Republican and on the Democratic side, have been awake to the necessity of protecting the interests of the people in connection with the creation of this great corporation, and I congratulate them on the wisdom they have displayed up to now, and I hope that they will be able to take a broader view and display vision, and that they will see that nothing is done in which the people are not properly protected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman at this time, with his vast experience, admit on the floor that he is not sufficiently expert to comprehend the revenue bills that are brought out?

Mr. MADDEN. No man can understand the revenue bills that are on the statute books to-day—not even the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. He has had a board of special experts sitting as a court, or something, and they have not yet been able to enlighten him to the extent of enabling him to find out what the regulations should be; and so he has extended the period in which the returns shall be made from the 1st of March to the 1st of April. So even the wise men that have been sitting on this court—and I admit many wise men have been sitting on it, and some of vast experience—have not been able to fathom the difficult problems that are contained in the law, in this wonderful fabrication or system brought out in the form of a revenue bill by the genius and the labor of the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the internal-revenue law, I want to say that I have received a letter this morning from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, replying to an inquiry that I made, in which he stated that his office was getting out a ruling on the particular subject concerning which I made an inquiry and had not at that time decided just what the ruling as to the amount of income tax to be paid would be in the case of where a man who had a large number of cattle which he had bred and raised on his farm during the past five or six years sold all these cattle during the year 1917 and placed the proceeds of the sale in a bank on a time certificate of deposit. I particularly wanted to make an inquiry of the chairman of the subcommittee as to the cost of collecting income taxes and the internal-revenue taxes. Has the gentleman any figures showing the percentage of the cost of collecting internal-revenue taxes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that the Internal Revenue Commissioner stated that his estimate of cost for 1919 is fifty-six hundredths of 1 per cent, compared with ninety-five hundredths of 1 per cent in 1917. Answering further, I will state to the gentleman that in 1914 the collection of internal revenue cost 1.64 per cent. In 1916 the percentage of cost was 1.40 per cent, and in 1917 ninety-five hundredths of 1 per cent.

Mr. NORTON. How does that compare with the cost of the collection of the income taxes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The figures I have given to the gentleman are for all the taxes.

Mr. NORTON. Including internal-revenue taxes and the income taxes as well?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Has the gentleman any figures showing a comparison of cost of the collection of the income taxes with the cost of collection of internal-revenue taxes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not furnish the gentleman with that information. Of course the very large percentage of the taxes collected come from excess profits and from corporation and individual income taxes.

Mr. NORTON. The figures that the gentleman gives as to the cost in 1914 being 1.64 per cent and the estimated cost of 1919 being fifty-sixth hundredths of 1 per cent, of course, would not be a comparison that would be of any particular value, inasmuch as a large proportion of the taxes now are income taxes, whereas in 1914 they were chiefly internal-revenue taxes. If the gentleman had the figures, I wanted him to make a comparison between the cost of the collection of the internal-revenue taxes and the personal and corporation income taxes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that one difficulty in giving the exact figures or estimating the exact figures with reference to the collection of any particular tax lies in the fact that these tax collectors who were appointed are not altogether confined in their work to one particular phase of the tax. In other words, their duties are general in the collection district, and they may be engaged on income-tax work, and in the same county where they are working they may have something to do with the inheritance tax. This is done in the interest of economy. A different policy would require a much greater number of employees.

Mr. NORTON. Is it the fact that the collectors of general internal-revenue taxes throughout the country also employ their services in the collection of income taxes? Is it the fact that those who are employed in the Internal-Revenue Bureau in the work of collecting general internal-revenue taxes also do work in connection with the collection of income taxes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. I have just explained that these collectors are not confined to looking after one particular form of tax.

Mr. NORTON. From observations in my own section of the country I was led to believe that two sets of officials were employed in the work of collecting taxes. One set of these men look after the collection of income taxes and another set take care of the collection of general internal-revenue taxes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. To what taxes does the gentleman refer when he says internal-revenue taxes?

Mr. NORTON. Taxes such as stamp taxes, Government license fees, and all internal-revenue taxes other than those derived from taxes on incomes and excess profits.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course there are storekeepers and gaugers who are concerned particularly with the collection of taxes on liquors.

Mr. NORTON. The income tax, of course, is an entirely different tax to the general internal-revenue taxes which were levied before the income-tax law was enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes, as provided in an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, including the employment of necessary officers, attorneys, experts, agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, janitors, and messengers in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, to be appointed as provided by law, telegraph and telephone service, rental of quarters, postage, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, printing, stationery, law books and books of reference, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $8,000,000: Provided, That not more than $500,000 of the total amount appropriated herein may be expended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for detecting and bringing to trial persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations: Provided further, That not more than $1,172,000 of the total amount appropriated herein may be expended in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I observe in this paragraph and in the preceding paragraph—also in some of the paragraphs following—that lump-sum appropriations are used to a large extent, as I understand, for the payment of employees who are not under civil-service rules. Let me, in that connection, ask the distinguished chairman of the committee whether the President could not, if he so desired, put these employees under civil-service rules?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, as I understand it, practically all these employees in this paragraph are under the civil-service rules, except the deputy collectors, and they were exempted by express provision of law, as the gentleman will recall, a year or two ago.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I remember that; and I also remember that the employees under the preceding paragraph were exempted by an express provision of law. But I had not supposed that that placed the matter beyond the control of the President.

However, I do not profess to be sufficiently well informed on that point to say positively whether the President could or could not place these employees under the civil-service rules, but it seemed to me that the time ought to have come when it is no longer necessary that we should, in the language of a former distinguished Secretary of State, feel compelled to provide "places for deserving Democrats" by exempting them from the civil-service rules. But as we go on and on in these appropriation bills we see the same policy that has manifested itself so often persists.

Now, so far as these persons who are employed to collect the income tax are concerned, if anybody ought to be under the civil-service rules they ought to be. If we are to continue to keep some of our departments under the civil-service rules, these employees should also be placed under them. Otherwise we ought to abolish the civil-service rules entirely and go back to the old system.

Of course it is too much to ask of this administration that it should be consistent. I find that gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, when they want to justify some act in kicking over the party traces, always find some declaration of the party leader or some act which they think constitutes a sufficient precedent, and I do not think they have very much difficulty in hunting up something of that kind.

When I was a young lawyer I was inquiring whether I had better purchase the New York Reports, and an old lawyer told me to do so by all means, because if I hunted long enough I would find any law I desired in any direction. Without attempting to determine whether that is the case with reference to the precedents supplied by the present administration, I might refer briefly to the figures which have been given by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee as to the cost of collecting the revenue and the apparent justification of present methods, so far as the mere face of the figures is concerned. The percentage of cost has greatly decreased, as the gentleman quite correctly stated, but there is a very plain and obvious reason why it should be so. It costs no more to collect a million dollars of income tax from Mr. Rockefeller than it did to collect the comparatively small sum that was exacted of him before the income taxes were raised so high. That expense is trifling, and it costs but little more to run the whole internal-revenue machinery, comparatively speaking, since we have provided for these increased taxes. Now, we have raised the taxes everywhere. Larger amounts are required under the same circumstances without, of course, in any way increasing the expense of collection. Naturally the percentage of the cost of collection has fallen. But this affords no justification for the unnecessary amounts which I think we are spending in salaries largely because they are fixed without reference to a decision of Congress under lump-sum appropriations. If there is no other way of bringing these parties under civil-service rules, the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service ought to get busy and Congress ought to get busy and bring these employees under the rules to which others holding similar positions are required to conform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the manner of the employment of these employees under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the collection of the income taxes, war excess-profits tax, and corporation taxes was given considerable attention during the hearings in the preparation of this bill. I inquired of the Collector of Internal Revenue as to what employees were exempted from the provisions of the civil-service law, and he said in reply to my question that special employees and deputy collectors were so excepted. I asked him to state the amounts of money that are available for the employment of employees and the character of employees who are not under civil service and which he has authority to appoint. Mr. Roper replied, "I will insert that in the record," and following that is inserted a table on page 367 of the hearings, giving the total appropriation of $14,800,000, which is available for the employment of employees by Mr. Roper and the collectors in the field that will not be under the civil service. He lists in that schedule salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, total amount appropriated, fiscal year 1918, $2,565,000; salaries and expenses of agents and subordinate officers of internal revenue, $2,200,000; collecting the income tax, $1,700,000; collecting the excess-profits tax, $2,000,000; collecting the tax on estates, munitions, etc., $340,000; restricting the sale of opium, $300,000; collecting the cotton-futures tax, $20,000; collecting the war revenue, $4,583,000; punishment for violating of internal-revenue laws, $175,000; miscellaneous expenses Internal-Revenue Service, $100,000.

Mr. Roper was very frank in answer to the queries put to him as to how this method was accomplished in evasion of the civil-service law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman does not mean to say that the Internal-Revenue Commissioner said that all the employees under these funds to which the gentleman alluded were appointed without the civil service?

Mr. STAFFORD. He did not say that all were, but I asked him that plain question on page 367—

> Will you please state the amounts of money that are available for the employment of any character of employees who are not under the civil service and which you now have authority to appoint?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The trouble with the gentleman is that he has not noticed the last column, in which the status of the employees are fixed. The only employees excepted are deputy collectors and district surveyors, and as a matter of fact the commissioner states that all the other employees are under civil service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I stated when I was interrupted by the chairman that Mr. Roper was very frank as to the way the civil-service law is gotten around in its operation by the department and the respective collectors. The collectors in the respective districts are privileged to appoint men without the civil service as special agents or deputy collectors, if they are to give bond, not to the department but to the collector. So the collectors in the respective districts, I assume, are now proceeding in that way, because I am receiving letters not only from my home district but from other parts of the country asking me to use my influence in the appointment of a deputy collector outside the civil service by writing to the local collector, which I have declined to do. Of course, the collectors select some of the faithful.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. They select some one who has been recommended, I assume, by a political friend. The local collector gives him an appointment as a deputy collector, who is accountable to him directly in the performance of his duty. Later on an examination is held for one of these positions covered by the civil service which, under the law, and for which these funds are available for appointment, are required to be civil-service appointees. If they qualify under the subsequent examination, show that they have the ability, then they are appointed; but the vice of that system is that the collector originally selects the men who may take the appointment, and then if they can qualify they are put into the civil-service list in a similar fashion to the way the post-office inspectors were appointed years ago, and are still appointed. That limits the appointment to those who have first been selected by the local collector and does not open it to the public generally to secure the best character of men. They are turned into permanent employment in the civil-service register provided they can meet the qualifications of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I went into one of the largest bureaus in the city the other day and sought to have a party employed, and they told me that everything was under civil service; that they had had the right to put people on and afterwards give them a civil-service examination, but, he said, "I am not now getting the class of people that I was when I was able to select them myself."

Mr. STAFFORD. There have been criticisms made on the floor of the House in the past few days as to the department appointing people not within the civil service. There was an exigent condition that confronted the department by not having a sufficient number of employees to perform the necessary work, but I am calling attention to these places in the field, where high-grade men are required to enforce the law and protect the Government in the collection of the war revenue. I must say that I was surprised when I saw these big amounts running into millions open to the spoils system, and the Civil Service Commission say that they are in no position to overcome it when the collector appoints them as deputy collectors. Mr. Roper himself stated that the plan that was being followed all along the line was for the local collectors to designate the men for temporary appointment, and then if perchance they could qualify, go to the civil-service register in a different capacity. In two of the items alone—that for salaries and expenses of collectors and that for collecting the war revenue—the pending bill has increased the first appropriation by a million and the other by three and a half million, all available for the appointment of additional deputy collectors that may be appointed by the local collectors without regard to the civil service, and retain their places for all time, so long as the collector decrees, without civil-service examination. The Civil Service Commission have said that they are helpless. They have said that there are available civil-service lists of eligibles, and yet the local collectors are privileged under the practice now being indulged in to take these men outside, put them in temporarily, and then turn them over into another class or continue them temporarily in the employment as deputy collectors, provided that they can give bond. This is the most outrageous evasion of the civil-service law that has been called to my attention. There are occasions when it is necessary to lift the civil-service requirements, as was the case when we needed a large temporary employment, but it is not necessary in this field. We can not look for good administration of the all-important revenue laws, with their resulting revenue, aggregating hundreds of millions, when the force employed for its collection largely comprise political appointees.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, there is no man in this House who has been stronger for the civil service than I have been. When the provision omitting the deputy collectors from civil service was put in the bill by Congress some time ago I voted against it, and I have voted consistently against any encroachment on the civil-service system. The gentleman from Wisconsin seems to overlook the fact that these are extraordinary times, when it is absolutely impossible for the department to get the men from the civil-service list as fast as they are needed. The Civil Service Department has been unable to supply them. They have been taking men on the temporary list and afterwards letting them take the civil-service examination. If they pass they are continued, and if they do not pass they are separated from the service. It would have been absolutely impossible for the Government to perform the duties required since the war was declared if they had not taken these extraordinary steps. I know that Mr. Roper told me not more than two days ago that he was unable to take any man now, except these deputy collectors, unless they came through the Civil Service Commission. Another head of a bureau told me that he could not take anybody unless recommended by the Civil Service Commission, and he said, in addition to that, that he was sorry for it, because when he had the selection in his own hands and would afterwards let them take the examination he got a whole heap better people than he is getting to-day, because he had a larger field to draw from and could make his own selections of men well fitted for the position. I do not think the criticisms of the gentleman as to what is being done at the present time are fair. Certainly, as one gentleman said previously about deserving Democrats, I have not found that the department is asking any questions about what a man's politics are, or what his people's politics are. They want good people who can perform the service, and in taking people and asking for these places I have never even known their politics, but I have endeavored to give the department good people whenever I could recommend them, regardless of what their politics were. The Government needs good men, there are positions for all fit men whether Democrats or Republicans.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am curious about what seems to be an inconsistency in this matter. I raised the question with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] the other day. In the bill before us we find that when we come to the employment of clerks for Congressmen, or for those who are to give service round about the House of Representatives, for instance, every man is detailed, every item of salary is carefully set out and scrutinized, but when we come to the expenditure of $16,000,000 in the aggregate, we pass it over to the Collector of Internal Revenue in a lump sum so that there can not be any scrutiny on this floor or any point of order as is constantly made in other cases.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would say in reply, that the explanation of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which he made the other day amply explains that. There is a very good reason for it If you put these people on the rolls with a salary attached, and make it the law, they will continue on after the war is over, but if you give a lump sum we have a chance after the war is over of separating some of them from the Government employ. I do not know how many will be separated, as I have always found that very few of them want to give up their jobs, but we will be able to discontinue them after the war is over.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It would be almost as hard to separate clerks from the Government employ as to discontinue these Subtreasuries.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not think you are going to discontinue the Subtreasuries, because they are so useful to the United States and to the cities where they are situated that I do not believe Congress will be so mean as to discontinue them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the Subtreasuries are so hedged about that every dollar spent on them is known and scrutinized?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why, certainly. You take the Subtreasury in Baltimore, which does a business of $314,000,000, and all it costs the Government is $31,500 a year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is that they are based on incorrect premises. As a matter of fact, every person employed in the collection of internal revenue is under the civil service except the collectors themselves, who are appointed by Executive authority, the deputy collectors, and special employees, who can not be appointed for a period exceeding six months, and are only appointed when the needs of the service require it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In just a moment. That statement was very clearly set forth by the Internal Revenue Commissioner in his statement. He stated that even in the case of deputy collectors, where the collectors are empowered under express provision of law to make the appointment without regard to the civil service, he had in all cases instructed the collectors to observe and follow the civil-service rules and regulations in making the appointments. In other words, his instructions were to the collectors not to appoint any man as a deputy collector who could not qualify under the civil-service rules and regulations in respect to the experience he had had in bookkeeping and the other various qualifications requisite for a civil-service appointee.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not mean by that statement that they were on the civil-service eligible list at the time of their appointment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not, and I did not say so. My statement was that in making these appointments outside of the civil service the Internal Revenue Commissioner stated that the collectors were instructed not to appoint a person who could not, if required, qualify under the civil-service rules and regulations.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that has always been the representation when they have had the spoils system established in full force—that they were able to qualify if necessary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows more about the spoils system than I do, because his party was in power for a very long number of years.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the Republican Party has a more consistent policy in regard to the civil service than has the gentleman's party, because under its administration we passed legislation requiring that all employees should be under the civil service, but here in the field service which is now being established as a political machine, there are more exempted from the civil service than ever before.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is simply repeating the errors that he made in his statement a while ago. The facts are, and I repeat, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue stated that every one in the employ of the Internal-Revenue Service is under the civil service and required to take the civil-service examination except these deputy collectors who are exempted by express provision of law, and the special employees, who can not be appointed for a period exceeding six months.

Now, the gentleman has referred to the table printed on page 367 of the hearings——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular before he proceeds on that line? Does not the gentleman remember that Mr. Roper testified to the fact that the way these deputy collectors got under the civil-service protecting arm of the Government was that the local collectors first appointed the men and then later they took the civil-service examination, and if they were able to qualify they were taken into the service in other grades?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, certainly; if they take the civil-service examination. They are not precluded from taking the civil-service examination and securing a civil-service status after their appointment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only those were able to take the civil-service examination who had first been designated by the local collector. That is the testimony.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I beg to differ with the gentleman very positively on that point. I have in mind, I will say to the gentleman, one individual who has never been a deputy collector but who took the civil-service examination and made one of the highest grades, and he was appointed only the other day by reason of the fact that he stood at the top of the eligible list.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what position?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As an income-tax collector.

Mr. STAFFORD. But not a deputy collector, which is outside of the civil service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have never contended that deputy collectors were appointed under civil service.

Mr. STAFFORD. That brings the question I wished to ask the gentleman originally. How many deputy collectors are there in the service who are not under civil service——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to consume the time of the committee, but the gentleman from Wisconsin in his remarks a few moments ago referred to a table which was submitted by the Internal Revenue Commissioner at his request and is printed on page 367 of the hearings. He read from that table, but the gentleman unintentionally, I am sure, overlooked the material facts contained in that table, and that is the last column of the table which shows the status of the employees so enumerated. This table undertakes to set forth all the employees under the lump sums carried in the current law, and then in the last column of the table the internal-revenue collector designates those who were appointed under the civil service and those appointed outside of the civil service, and in order that the House may understand just how these employees are appointed I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing the table referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The table is as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My time has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give the committee information as to the number of deputy collectors who are paid from this $15,000,000 appropriations or the amount of money that is paid to them. I asked that question of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Roper, and he failed to incorporate it in the hearings, as he said he would. A large amount of this appropriation is paid to deputy collectors. That is the way they are being appointed to-day outside of the civil service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, if the gentleman will turn to page 412, and subsequent pages of the hearings, extending down to and including page 417, he will find a specific, definite statement from the Internal Revenue Commissioner giving that information. I have not the time to count them up, but the gentleman can do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assumed he yielded to me for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD at this point a list of the deputy collectors under these various appropriations, as shown in the respective pages of the hearings referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including the list of deputy collectors. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The list referred to is as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 175. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915, and for prior years, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3700. An act for the relief of John McW. Ford.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restricting the sale of opium, etc.: For expenses to enforce the provisions of the act approved December 17, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," including the employment of agents, deputy collectors, inspectors, chemists, assistant chemists, clerks, and messengers in the field and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and for the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, including not to exceed $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence, $325,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With respect to the opium item, was there any testimony before the committee showing that there was an increase in the use of narcotics?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There were no statements made as to increase, except in a general way showing that there was a need for an additional number of employees. I will state to the gentleman that the commissioner stated:

Many requests from various parts of the country are received asking that assistance be rendered in preventing traffic in narcotic drugs, and this condition has been intensified due to congestion in the cities and elsewhere on account of war conditions.

I think that answers the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It does; but I would like the gentleman to listen to this brief statement. I have been informed the opium and drug habit has been on the increase, and particularly in some of the large cities and within the environments thereof, and it has been charged that this increase has come along very largely in consequence of the prohibitory laws with respect to the sale of liquor. Is there any testimony before the committee along that line?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There was not. The committee made no inquiry along that line.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A very careful and conscientious judge of my city has indicated recently that there has been an increase in the number of addicts who appear before him. I have been informed also that there have been increased activities in the department.

Now, Philadelphia is a large city and prohibition has not yet struck it. But if the dope habit is growing——

Mr. LINTHICUM. How large is Philadelphia?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is about four times the size of Baltimore. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Baltimore has nearly a million people. What is the size of Philadelphia?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is still growing, and the suggestion is that a great many of these addicts are coming from suburbs like Baltimore to Philadelphia.

Mr. LINTHICUM. They do not have to come over there for wet goods.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They do not; but they drift into Baltimore for wet goods from dry territory, and after smoking a few cigarettes and taking a cocktail they get into the opium habit.

I am satisfied to vote for a larger appropriation to stamp out this evil, but I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the reports indicate that the habit is growing. How do they get this stuff? It may be due to a lack of vigilance on the part of the officers charged with the administration of the antinarcotic law, or it may be that the law itself is inefficient. At any rate, it is a serious problem and one that affects the morale of our communities.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will state that there was a very large percentage of our population addicted very largely to narcotics in the South—the colored people—and the addiction to drugs has been very greatly diminished by the passage of this law, notwithstanding the fact that we have made that territory bone dry at the same time. It was a great scourge amongst the colored people, and it has been very materially reduced.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will.

Mr. MEEKER. I wanted to know whether or not the gentleman would like to say here now that the illicit distilling is decreasing in his territory?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not think it is increasing in my territory.

Mr. MEEKER. You are willing to let that statement stand, are you?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is not increasing, but it is because of the vigilance of the officers. The cupidity of the human family would make it increase if we did not catch the offenders, but we catch them down there.

Mr. MEEKER. I wanted to get you on record as to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the enforcement may be brought about as effectively in one section of the country as it is in another.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to discontinue the offices of the assistant treasurers at Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco within six months after the President shall have proclaimed the termination of the existing state of war between the United States and Germany; and section 3595 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is repealed from and after the discontinuance of the said offices. The Secretary of the Treasury further is authorized to retain only such of the employees in the offices of the assistant treasurers as may be necessary to safeguard the property and funds of the United States and to transfer to Washington to the office of the Treasurer of the United States such others as in his judgment may be necessary in connection with the discontinuance of the said offices.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On what ground?

Mr. IGOE. I make the point that it changes existing law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] intending to make a speech on this subject?

Mr. IGOE. I think the point of order is so well taken and so apparent that I did not suppose it was necessary to argue the matter. I suppose the chairman will oppose the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think so. This amendment, I insist, is in order under the so-called Holman rule, since it serves to retrench expenditures. I am not going to discuss the matter at any length, because I recognize the fact that the present Chairman has heretofore had occasion to construe that rule and its application and has delivered a very able opinion upon the subject, which will be found in the Manual, on page 507. The Chairman is recognized as one of the very ablest parliamentarians of this body, and therefore it is not necessary for me to do more than call attention to this ruling. This ruling, if the Chair pleases, was made on an amendment offered to the military appropriation bill by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who at that time was Mr. Hay, of Virginia, by which he sought to reduce the number of Cavalry regiments from 15 to 10, there being nothing in the bill to show that it meant retrenchment of expenditures except the fact that the number of regiments was reduced from 15 to 10. As I have stated, the Chairman acting then as he is now, delivered an exhaustive opinion upon the subject, in which he held that it was not necessary for the bill to show specifically upon its face that it did serve to retrench expenditures. I quote from a portion of that opinion, as follows:

The words "amounts of money covered by the bill" refer not only to the amounts specifically appropriated by the bill but to the amounts required under the different heads or items of expense to which the bill relates. And if the necessary effect of an amendment is to reduce, in the operation of the departments or bureaus for which appropriations are made, the amount otherwise required for any one or more heads or items of expense, then a retrenchment has been effected by a reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

And further on the Chair said:

But it is not necessary for this conclusion of reduction to be established with the rigor and severity of a mathematical demonstration. It is enough if the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, will fairly operate by its own force to retrench expenditures in one of the three ways indicated. This result must be a necessary result, not a conjectural result or a problematical result.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In just a moment.

I quote further:

It is true that, having reference to the difference of minds, one chairman might hold that retrenchment would be the necessary result of an amendment, while another chairman or the committee on appeal might be of a different opinion. But this is inevitable.

Clearly, Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted it will result in a reduction of more than $600,000 in expenditures, because that is the sum that is appropriated for these nine Subtreasuries.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. COADY. Where is there any language in that section that justifies the gentleman in making the statement that he just has made, that it will save $600,000? Does not this section authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to retain all these men?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not all of them. It authorizes him to retain——

Mr. COADY. Such number as he may deem necessary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Such employees as he may deem necessary.

Mr. COADY. He may deem all of them necessary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is not the total expense of the Subtreasuries. There is the expense of rent, of heat and light, and water, and all those accessories that are necessary to maintain them. And, in addition to that, there is the specific saving of the salaries of nine assistant treasurers, who get $4,500 each.

Mr. COADY. Not necessarily so. The Secretary of the Treasury may deem it necessary to employ more men, and he would be authorized to do it under that section.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This section refers to civil-service employees. It does not refer to the nine assistant treasurers who are appointed by executive authority.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COADY. Is it not true that most of these Subtreasuries are in Government buildings?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Probably all of them are.

Mr. COADY. Then how would it save rent and light and heat and janitor service if they are in Government buildings?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If they were not needed for this purpose, they could be used for some other purpose, and such expenses would be charged to other appropriations and not to this.

Mr. COADY. That is a mere speculation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And if they were vacated they would not need light, heat, and water. But I am willing to waive that, if it disturbs the gentleman, and rest it upon the statement that the adoption of this amendment would absolutely save the Government the salaries of nine assistant treasurers at $4,500 a year each.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to know when will the saving take place? Do you know when six months after the war will be?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I hope very soon. I can not state exactly.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I will send you across. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that every one of these officers is authorized by statutory law, and that there is a well-known method recognized in this House and elsewhere to change statutory law. It is well known under the rules that while the Committee on Appropriations has authority to report appropriations, the power to report legislation relating thereto belongs to other committees. In fact, if that were the only question, this committee could not change existing law in the manner it is proposed to do it here, and the point of order must be sustained. These Subtreasuries were created by statute, and when the time came when there was to be a change of existing law as to one of them it was changed by statute. The original law provided for the creation of offices at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, New Orleans, San Francisco, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Chicago. Every one of those cities has a Subtreasury now, with the single exception of Charleston. The Charleston Subtreasury is no more, because by a statute brought in here and passed in the regular way, and not upon an appropriation bill, the office at Charleston was abolished. It was done in the regular way by statute.

Now, that is the first proposition. The point raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, however, is that under the Holman rule, or Rule XXI, a point of order would not lie, because there would be retrenchment of expenses if the committee were to accept the amendment as proposed in the bill. I respectfully submit to the Chair that no retrenchment of expenses is provided for or suggested in the amendment itself; that on the contrary, the objectionable paragraph contemplates action some time in the future, after the usual appropriations have been made, possibly long after this Congress has adjourned. The bill provides for the appropriation of salaries to continue these offices in the usual way and for no actual retrenchment of expenses except as some offices may be abolished some time in the future.

Now, that is the legislative status. What does the committee suggest in this paragraph? That after a certain period after the close of the war—and the Lord only knows when that will be—these offices are to be dispensed with, and the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to do what? To discharge, dispense with, reduce expenses? No; but to retain only such employees in the offices of the assistant treasurers as may be necessary to safeguard the property and the funds. It contemplates a retention of the existing force.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Let the gentleman read a little further, and he will see that the Secretary of the Treasury is given discretion to transfer the balance of them to Washington, so that there will be no saving of employees at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. It provides, as the gentleman says, that the rest of the employees may be transferred to similar service in Washington.

Now, where is the saving of expense? The gentleman from Tennessee suggests it may be in rent. On the contrary, rather than a saving of expense in rent, where there is no rent to pay, the Government being already in the possession of the property, the Government will then actually lose money because of the expense incurred in keeping the abandoned premises in order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman point out any authority to retain the assistant treasurers?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I point to the statutory law creating them. Here is an act of Congress providing that Assistant Treasurers of the United States shall be appointed by the President from time to time at the following places, and they are to be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That section is repealed by this amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know; and I contend that the gentleman has no right to bring in here a repealer of an existing statute on an appropriation bill. That is the very point I make.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The very fact that it is repealed shows that the adoption of the amendment will dispense with nine places at $4,500 each.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I answer that by saying that the gentleman has provided for every one of those officials under this bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. These appropriations will necessarily be inoperative.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman has nevertheless provided for them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman contends that we will have a saving in the matter of rent if we close up these offices. I contend that instead of having a saving we will have to employ other watchmen and other caretakers, and that therefore there will be an actual expense to the Government by reason of closing these offices.

But I contend that there will be no saving, for other reasons. The gentleman has very cleverly quoted the present Chairman as passing upon a point of order on a previous occasion. What did the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], the present Chairman, say in connection with the proposition he passed upon then? He said that the amendment, in itself a complete piece of legislation, must operate ex proprio vigore to effect a reduction of expenditure; that the reduction must appear as a necessary result; that it must be apparent to the Chair that the amendment will operate of its own force to effect a reduction.

Now, if it is not apparent to the Chair that there will be a reduction, whose word does he take for it? Does he take the word of the gentleman from Tennessee, who says it will save in rental, or does he take the word of the Efficiency Commission, which recommends this change? Or does he take the word of the Secretary of the Treasury? Or, instead of taking the word of the board or the Secretary of the Treasury, will he require that "it must be apparent to the Chair" himself, as he indicated in the decision quoted by the gentleman from Tennessee, that there is an actual retrenchment?

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question which is, of course, vital to the determination of the point of order: What would be the effect of this paragraph, should it remain in the law, upon the offices at the point designated; will they or not remain after this law is passed?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The establishments would remain at the expense of the United States. They would be vacated, and the Government would have to care for them, and the employees would probably be transferred to other positions—except for new caretakers.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair is trying to ascertain with respect to the offices of the assistant treasurers; would there be, in the gentleman's judgment, still assistant treasurers at these points?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, if abolished there would not be assistant treasurers.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, the effect of it would be to abolish the office of assistant treasurer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no suggestion of the abolition of them now, but sometime in the future, perhaps after two or three Congresses—six months after the close of the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not bringing up the question of time. The Chair is looking at the bill as enacted into law. If enacted into law, the assistant treasurers at some time will be abolished?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Six months after the end of the war, whenever that may be. That is the condition set forth in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The effect will be that six months after the war is ended the offices will be abolished?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would be the effect of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, that is agreed to as far as the construction of the paragraph is concerned.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As to that I desire to be heard further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not intimating any opinion, but he is trying to get at the agreed facts.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Is it the gentleman's opinion that if another year should elapse and the war still be going on and these treasurers are still in existence, would it not be necessary to bring in an appropriation for the Subtreasuries, and would it not be necessary to repeat the language in this paragraph?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would be necessary to bring in new appropriations for the Subtreasuries, because they would not be abolished if the war continues over another Congress. There could be no saving in that.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. VARE. Assuming that these employees would be transferred to Washington to the Treasury Department, which is already crowded, is it not fair to presume that there would have to be additional floor space?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Either that or a waste of existing floor space, and that would be a charge against the Government.

Mr. VARE. Is not that an increase of expense?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. I am trying to impress that on the Chair. Who is going to decide the question whether there is a retrenchment under the Holman rule? No one can tell when the retrenchment is to take place, following the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and it may not take place until subsequent Congresses have continued the appropriation in order to perpetuate the offices as now provided by statute. Who is to determine whether there is to be a retrenchment? We can not accept wholly the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I question whether the Chair, in view of his own ruling, would attempt to decide this question for himself.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is no presumption either of law or of fact that war will ever end, is there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; no one can tell.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Some wars have lasted 5 years, some 10 years, and one war lasted 30 years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We hope this one will not last that long.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is anything more indefinite than that, and can you say that such a law, if passed, will curtail the expenses of the Government, when you can not tell within 5, 10, or 30 years when the war is going to end?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am making that contention. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to such language as we have as to the probable retrenchment of expenses. The Chair stated that "it must be apparent to the Chair"; there must be something to convince the Chair on that point. Where does this proposition originate? Who brought it in? We have the report of the Bureau of Efficiency. It is a lengthy report, covering a great many pages, and also covers a great many points that the gentleman from Tennessee does not refer to in his objection to the point of order. The Bureau of Efficiency states this:

> In the opinion of the Bureau of Efficiency, however, the seeking of other employment should be optional and not necessary. The bureau states that it would be wrong to drop any of these men or women from the pay roll unless they go of their own volition; that they ought to be retained in the service either in Washington or elsewhere, although it might be economical to drop some of them.

Hence we have the suggestion from the body making the proposition that everybody to be abolished shall be retained. What did the Secretary of the Treasury say upon this question? He is the one officer of the Government most concerned. He has the direction of these officials in the Subtreasury and the Subtreasuries come under his control. Is the Chair to be influenced solely by the statement of the Bureau of Efficiency, which makes the recommendation of the abolition, that they propose to retain everybody? Let us see what the Secretary of the Treasury says on this very point.

Mr. McAdoo, in a letter to the Speaker of the House, received December 6, 1916, a long letter defending these Subtreasuries and going into detail as to their usefulness to the country and their serviceableness to the Treasury of the United States, among other things, said:

> It will be seen that the cost of maintaining these institutions, treating the Subtreasury system as a whole, is only one one-hundredth of 1 per cent, approximately, on the total transactions involved—an insignificant sum compared with business done, the important service performed, and the conveniences afforded to the public. Aside from New York, the cost of maintaining the other eight Subtreasuries is $347,416.88, which is a comparatively small sum to pay for the service and convenience they provide. If these institutions were abolished the total cost of operating them would not be saved, as a counter expenditure by the office of the Treasurer in Washington resulting from the increased work that would be thrown upon that office would be entailed.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that the best witness as to whether we are going to save money is the Secretary of the Treasury, and he states here emphatically that there would be no saving, that the cost which apparently would be saved would be entailed on another branch of the service perhaps in aggravated form. But the Secretary is not done with that. He goes on further and says:

> Aside from the custody of the trust funds of the Government, the Subtreasuries perform a highly useful service to the public in making exchanges of money, supplying money and coin where needed, and reducing the cost and expense of shipments of money and coin from a common center. It is necessary to maintain the facilities and conveniences provided by the Subtreasuries in the large centers of business in the country, such as the cities in which the Subtreasuries are now located.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Has the Secretary of the Treasury joined in the report of the Bureau of Efficiency?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He certainly has not, so far as this letter would indicate. Now I come to that section of the Secretary's statement on this question which I think is vital and answer thoroughly the Bureau of Efficiency and the gentleman from Tennessee. Secretary McAdoo says:

> It has been suggested that the Subtreasuries are merely conveniences and not necessities, and that their duties might be performed entirely by the Treasury in Washington. This is in a sense true, but the cost of handling all the business from a common center in a country so extensive as the United States might be greater than the expense of the Subtreasury system, whereas the delays and inconveniences which the public would have to suffer might prove a very serious handicap upon business.

Can there be any better testimony than that? I submit, first, that the Committee on Appropriations can not change existing law in this way, and, second. I submit there will be no retrenchment such as is contemplated by the Holman rule if this paragraph remains in the bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, it is very distasteful for me to engage in a discussion upon a parliamentary question like this, because there are certain professional "sharps" around here who monopolize this particular form of legislative diversion, and I have never aspired to a place in that galaxy; but I merely want to stress this aspect of the case. I am willing to concede that under the amendment, if it should be enacted into law, there will be a reduction to the extent of the salaries of the assistant treasurers who will be eliminated, though their salaries may possibly be spent in the increased salaries of additional clerks to handle the work that the assistant treasurers have heretofore performed. The point I want to make and impress upon the mind of the Chair is this, that it is not within his power to tell whether that event will ever take place, whether a particular time within his knowledge or foresight or within a date reasonably to be fixed can be anticipated from the amendment that the committee now presents. It says what? That six months after the President's proclamation of peace the assistant treasurers shall be abolished and their salaries eliminated. When is that to take place? Can the Chair tell whether within the life of this Congress, whether within the fiscal year for which these appropriations are to be made, such a "consummation so devoutly to be wished" as the arrival of peace and six months thereafter will come to pass? Therefore may not the Chair reasonably take into consideration the satisfaction to his own mind that he must have that a retrenchment will some day take place, bringing such an amendment under the Holman rule, before he can hold the words of the committee in order? That is all I care to say. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The application of the Holman rule is a matter that has been the subject of many rulings, but it seems to the Chair that the case under consideration, while not entirely novel, presents a somewhat unusual aspect of this rule.

In connection with the Holman rule, it may be said in a preliminary way that the authorities are agreed that the rule is a wholesome one, and therefore proper to be liberally construed. Hence if the question presented is difficult of decision under that rule, the Chair in case of doubt should resolve that doubt in favor of an interpretation which will submit the paragraph, or amendment under consideration to the judgment of the House, which will thereby be put in a position to pass upon the merits of the substantial question in issue. A former Speaker of this body announced the canon of construction for the Holman rule as follows:

> The purpose of the rule is most beneficial and proper, and it should have a liberal construction in the interest of retrenchment.

To the same substantial effect Mr. Chairman CRISP:

> The Holman rule is intended to have a beneficial effect upon the Treasury of the United States. If the Chair is in doubt whether an amendment is in order this doubt should be resolved against the point of order, for by so doing the Chair works no hardship upon anyone, but submits to the committee itself the privilege of passing upon the amendment. If the committee favor it, then a majority can adopt it. If a majority is opposed to it, then that majority can reject it. (Manual House Rules, 1916, p. 505.)

If the contention that the paragraph under consideration was in order, rested exclusively upon the ground that it effected a reduction in the amounts of money covered by the bill, the Chair would be constrained to sustain the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Plainly the paragraph will not necessarily reduce the amounts covered by the bill, since the provision relating to the offices proposed to be abolished, may not take effect within the periods for which this bill makes appropriations.

There is no effective proposition to reduce the amounts covered by this bill for the obvious reason that the reductions which the repealing provision will effect, will not of necessity occur within the life of the bill which is limited to a duration of two fiscal years. There is another feature, however, of the paragraph which has apparently been overlooked, and that is the reduction effected in the number of the officers of the United States. It seems to be conceded as a matter of fact, that this paragraph, if it remains in the bill, will eliminate a very definite number of Federal officials, receiving considerable salaries fixed by law. Looking to the Holman rule, as it appears in the House Manual, section 21, subsection 2, it will be noted that a retrenching amendment, changing existing law, will be in order, if it accomplishes any one, of several results. The rule is as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill, or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number, and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

As pointed out, it is not possible to bring the paragraph under consideration, within the benefit of the last portion of the language cited, on account of the uncertainty of the date at which the repealing clause of the paragraph will become operative. But the rule contains another provision, or head to which the paragraph may be related. The Chair in this connection will call the attention of the committee to this language of the rule:

except such, as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures, by a reduction of the number and salaries of the officers of the United States.

The rule does not say at what time this reduction of officers shall take place, but that expenditures shall be retrenched by a reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States. This reduction may be effected eo instanti, or at some future date. The one thing needful is that the reduction of the number and salaries of Federal officials shall be effected. Now a very definite number of Federal officials and incidental salaries will be eliminated if this paragraph is retained in the bill.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. The section cited in the proposition of the committee is section 3595 of the Revised Statutes, which simply provides that there shall be assistant treasurers appointed from time to time at certain cities. Following that there is another section—3596—that is not mentioned here, and it says that the assistant treasurers shall be entitled to the following salaries, and then mentions the places where they are to be appointed and the salaries. Now, if section 3595 is repealed and section 3596 and subsequent sections still remain the law, under those sections assistant treasurers might be appointed at the salaries fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the contention of the gentleman, in point of fact—the Chair desires to get the facts straight—that if this paragraph remains in the bill there will still be assistant treasurers at the indicated cities?

Mr. IGOE. My contention is, under section 3596 and subsequent sections assistant treasurers are still authorized and their salaries fixed and the cities designated.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, this paragraph, as it remains in the bill will not abolish the assistant treasurers?

Mr. IGOE. That is my contention, that they can still be continued.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the statement of the chairman of the committee on that proposition?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Section 3595 is the section which confers upon the President the authority to appoint assistant treasurers. That is the particular section which was repealed when the Subtreasury at Charleston was discontinued.

Mr. IGOE. Was not the section amended?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the amendment proposed now for the first time repeals section 3595? If the Chair will permit, section 3595 provides as follows:

There shall be assistant treasurers of the United States appointed from time to time by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, to serve for the term of four years, as follows—

And then they are enumerated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That answers the Chair's question. When we repeal that section there shall be no assistant treasurers, and there will be none if we repeal the particular section which is the only authority there is for them.

Mr. IGOE. The only thing it says is that they shall be appointed and confirmed by the Senate, and in section 3596 it authorizes and fixes the salaries.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair will permit as to the facts. Section 3595 provides:

There shall be assistant treasurers of the United States, appointed from time to time by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to serve for the term of four years, as follows: One at Boston, one at New York, one at Philadelphia, one at Baltimore, one at Charleston, one at New Orleans, one at St. Louis, one at San Francisco, one at Cincinnati, one at Chicago.

Now, the repeal of this section takes away any law for such assistant treasurers at such places.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true a statute was enacting repealing the law as to Charleston when Charleston was discontinued——

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was not done through the medium of an appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. The authorization in reference to Charleston was repealed some time ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was it because confirmation was required of the Senate?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. Now, the law as it exists to-day, the only law that makes possible these assistant treasurers at these particular places, is section 3595. If that law should be taken off the statute book there would be no law authorizing such assistant treasurers at any such places.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very glad to have had the sections cited, called to his attention. This citation will serve to keep the RECORD straight. Section 3595 provides that there shall be assistant treasurers at certain designated places. Section 3596 determines the salaries for these officers. Very well. If the paragraph under consideration repeals the law providing for the assistant treasurers at the places indicated, how can it be argued that salaries can be paid to nonexistent officers. The shadow follows the substance. If the office falls, the officer and the salary falls with it. All that the next section in succession proposes to do, is provide salaries for the officers authorized by the preceding section. The section fixing the salaries of the assistant treasurers is of importance, in the determination of the point of order. It affords the most positive and reliable information as to the extent of the salary reductions effected by the paragraph to which the point of order is directed. Looking to the first section cited and then to the section which provides the salaries for the officers created by the first section, it is easy to determine precisely the aggregate amount of reduction of official salaries effected by the paragraph under discussion, should it be retained in the bill by the action of the committee. As to the right of the Committee on Appropriations to submit a repealing provision germane to the subject matter of the bill and retrenching expenditures by reducing the number and salaries of Federal officials, the Chair is content to rest his ruling upon the precedents afforded by numerous decisions construing the Holman rule. Judge CRISP rendered a very interesting and instructive opinion in this connection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the Chair will permit me to call attention to the ruling of Judge CRISP, he ruled on a case preceding the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], in a case somewhat similar to this, and he said:

The Chair is of the opinion that it does not reduce the amount of money covered by the bill.

In other words, there was a distinction there which pertained to a bill as of that time and here where a provision pertains to the future and is indefinite.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sought to point out that this paragraph can not be sustained on the ground that it reduces the amounts covered in this bill. But the Chair has also endeavored to point out as a part of his ruling that the paragraph can be sustained under another head, or portion of subsection 2 of Rule XXI. The language of that portion defines precisely how the retrenchment of expenditures may be effected, namely by a reduction of the number and salary of Federal officials. In order to qualify so to say, under that language, it is only necessary to show first that the number of Federal officials has been reduced, second that salaries of these officials have also been reduced. Retrenchment of expenditures is established, by the mere fact of reduction in the number and salaries of the officers of the United States. The subsection reads:

Which shall retrench expenses by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

The repealing language of the paragraph provides a very distinct reduction in the number and salaries of officers of the United States. Should this bill become a law, it will be possible to state very definitely the number of officers that will be eliminated, and the consequent reduction in salaries that will be effected. There is no doubt in the mind of the Chairman, and I suppose none on the part of any member of the committee, that this paragraph, once enacted into law, will abolish all of the offices provided for in section 3595, and at the same time eliminate the salaries fixed for these offices by section 3596.

This being so, this paragraph, in the very language of the Holman rule, will retrench expenditures, and, retrenching expenditures, it thereby becomes in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the Chair permit me to make a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. As I understand, in order to make the repeal of this statute permissible in this bill it must appear that the paragraph is germane, and it must also appear that the committee reporting this to the House has jurisdiction of that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph must be germane to the subject matter of the bill and retrench expenditures in the manner provided.

Mr. RUSSELL. Now, the Chair states this statute can properly be repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. That might be true, and still it might not be germane and proper in this bill, because it occurs to me if this statute is repealed by an independent bill, the bill ought to come from some other committee and not the Committee on Appropriations. And under the rule in the Holman case it must be germane, and it must appear that it is a subject matter over which the committee has jurisdiction.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the Chair will permit, that is only under the requirements under which the committee can offer amendments. The Chair, as I understood, was discussing that part of the Holman rule which permitted not only the committee but any Member of the House to suggest an amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. The same rule applies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair apprehends the point suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL], but I call his attention to the fact that if his point is well taken the Appropriation Committee could never effect any change of law, whatever might be the amount of reduction secured by the change.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And should never.

The CHAIRMAN. But the right of the Appropriations Committee to propose repealing provisions in an appropriation bill has been sustained.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Can not any Member from the floor of the House, who is not a member of the committee having the bill in charge, offer an amendment, which would retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salaries of officers in the United States, to any bill to which that might be germane?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make answer by referring once more to the positive law of the House to the effect that a provision in an appropriation bill changing existing law shall not be in order, unless being germane to the subject matter of the bill, it shall retrench expenditures in one of the ways provided.

Mr. Chairman CRISP has ruled on this precise question on March 14, 1916, in a decision reported in the House Manual on page 502. The legislative, judicial and executive bill was under consideration, and the ruling was upon an amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]: This amendment in substance provided for a reduction in the number of persons in the classified service, to be effective on or before June 30, 1917, and effected certain changes in existing law. The point of order was made that the amendment proposed legislation, and therefore was out of order on an appropriation bill. The Chair first proceeded to determine whether the amendment was germane, and in that connection used the following language:

> The bill before the House is the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, dealing generally with the salaries of officers and employees of the United States Government. In the main this is the appropriation bill which carries the salaries for the officers and employees of the Government. The amendment seeks to deal with a certain number of the employees of the Government, and the Chair thinks the amendment proposing a new section, dealing with a certain class of Government employees, is germane to the bill. * * * The amendment clearly reduces the salaries to be paid out of the Treasury. The Chair is clearly of opinion that where an amendment is offered reducing the number of salaries paid out of the Treasury, coupled with legislation, that legislation to be in order must be connected up with, related to, or logically follow from the part of the amendment, reducing the number of employees, or the amounts of money covered by the bill. The Chair can not escape the conclusion that if you reduce the number of clerks, the business of the Government will require those remaining in the service to work longer hours. The Chair thinks the legislation naturally and logically follows the provision reducing the number of clerks.

The principles of this decision and of other decisions quoted by Judge CRISP may be readily applied to the case in hand. The same bill is under consideration. It deals with the salaries of these assistant treasurers. In part they are the subject matter of the bill. The repealing language of the paragraph will eliminate these officers and their salaries. It deals with officers to which the bill relates, and for whom it will make appropriations, so long as the offices are in existence. It proposes to change the law which affords the very offices that will be filled by the assistant treasurers, until the offices themselves are abolished. Hence the amendment, that is the repealing and reducing language is germane to a bill which proposes to appropriate for these officers. It is not only germane, but it retrenches expenditures in the very manner contemplated by the rule, that is by reducing the number and salaries of Federal officials. Being both germane, and retrenching expenditures, it is in order. It is not material that the officers will be abolished in future. The rule does not require them to be abolished eo instanti. It is enough that they will be abolished at some sufficiently definite date. The abolition effects the retrenchment.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the Chairman permit?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. If the matter was an original proposition, and a bill on this subject were offered, and the present occupant of the chair, one of the most distinguished and learned in this whole body, had the disposition of the measure, would he refer it to the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Ways and Means, or say, the Committee on Banking and Currency?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to answer that question. The Committee on Appropriations is not incapacitated from offering a repealing section effecting a reduction of expenditures. A ruling to the contrary would in substance mean, that the Committee on Appropriations could never bring itself within the Holman rule, since that rule contemplates legislation upon an appropriation bill, provided it is germane, and retrenches expenditures. The Committee on Appropriations has no general jurisdiction to enact legislation. It is concerned exclusively with appropriations. In order that it may come within the provisions of the Holman rule, and enact legislation, it must appear that the proposed legislation is related to the subjects for which the committee appropriates, and if enacted will reduce expenditures.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Why would the Chair view it from that standpoint, even for the first time?

The CHAIRMAN. For that matter, I am not trying to view this situation for the first time. I have ruled on it several times, and do not think that it is a just interpretation or construction of the Holman rule, to say that it contemplates under certain conditions, that an amendment proposing new legislation is in order, and then so construe the rule, as to make it impossible for any amendment reported by the committee, and containing legislation, to be in order.

Now, so far as the suggestions of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the merits of the paragraph are concerned, the Chair can not take them into consideration in passing on the point of order. The only thing proper to be considered is, whether this paragraph is within the principle of the Holman rule. The Chair thinks it is, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can not agree upon time to dispose of this question. It seems to me it ought not to take all the afternoon. I would like to know if we can not agree upon 30 minutes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I will be very glad to join with the gentleman in an effort of that kind to limit debate.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a couple of minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Gentlemen, bear in mind there are nine cities.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does that mean——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That means a fight, I suppose.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentlemen who are opposed to this provision agree to limit the time to five minutes in opposition? That is five minutes for each Subtreasury city.

Mr. DUPRÉ. There are 17 Members from the city of New York alone. I will agree to that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was thinking that gentlemen would agree to 30 minutes, or 45 minutes in all. Can we not agree upon an hour, 30 minutes for and 30 minutes against?

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. COADY. Suppose that this section was stricken out. Does the gentleman then, after that, propose to offer an amendment providing for each of these cities?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a stream that we will cross when we come to it.

Mr. COADY. I want to know that for the purpose of fixing the time. I think in that case we ought to have more time. Will the gentleman agree upon 45 minutes to a side?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will not the gentleman agree to an hour, half an hour on a side? I submit that we ought to dispose of this matter to-day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Make it 40 minutes. I will cut my own.

Mr. GALLIVAN. That is, 40 minutes to a side.

Mr. COADY. Do you mean the Republican side or those in favor of the motion?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Those in favor of the motion to strike out.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that 1 hour and 20 minutes be allowed for debate, to be equally divided for and against the paragraph, the time to be controlled by the Chair.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I must ask the gentleman to raise that five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I adopted the suggestion made by the gentleman himself, who said he would agree to 40 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. I will cut my own.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has already made a very able speech.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I hope that will go in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph close in 80 minutes, 40 minutes on a side, the time to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My suggestion was that the time be equally divided for and against the proposition, under the control of the Chair, so that if it should happen that 40 minutes was not desired the Chair would control it.

Mr. DUPRE. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman so arrange his request as to say that the vote be taken at a particular time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be limited to 80 minutes, 40 minutes to be controlled by myself and 40 by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], a member of the committee.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time be limited to 80 minutes, 40 minutes to be controlled by himself and 40 minutes by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know if I could get a little time on this. I would like five minutes. I had an understanding with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], but I have none with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of the request, I will withdraw and leave it to my colleague [Mr. VARE].

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the 40 minutes contemplates that there shall be 5 minutes to a city. In my opinion that is a very insignificant portion of time for each of these great cities to devote to such a very important proposition. However, if this motion prevails, if the gentleman from Maryland represents one of the cities——

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; my colleague [Mr. COADY] must have some time, because the Subtreasury is in his district.

Mr. VARE. I agree that five minutes to a city is a very limited time to devote to such an important subject.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object to it unless Baltimore shall have more than five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. It is impossible to satisfy individual Members.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, what is pending before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out the paragraph; and, pending that, there is a discussion as to the limitation of time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What became of the unanimous-consent request?

The CHAIRMAN. There was objection to the 80-minute proposition.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I renew my suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee that we agree upon this vote to strike out the paragraph at 5 o'clock.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am willing to close the debate at 5 o'clock.

Mr. GOOD. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he had better ask to close debate at quarter to 5, as his committee meets at 5 o'clock.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at 5 o'clock.

Mr. FESS. That is not in order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is not in order. We have had no discussion on the amendment.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the Chair to say that the motion was in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not rule on any specific motion. Does the gentleman submit a motion?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Is my motion in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until there has been discussion on the paragraph.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. And the control of the time to be as it has been heretofore?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at 5 o'clock, the time to be in the control of the Chair.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will object to that unless I can have some time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no doubt the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] will yield the gentleman time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the unanimous-consent request. The unanimous-consent request is this: That the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close at 5 o'clock, the time between the present and 5 o'clock to be divided in equal portions, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the other by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE]. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. IGOE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, the motion to strike out the paragraph will mean, if adopted, that all the Subtreasuries will be continued as heretofore. A year ago, when the question was up, the matter was referred to the Bureau of Efficiency for investigation, and that b reau has made its report, recommending, first, the immediate suspension of the Subtreasuries at Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Cincinnati; and, second, the immediate release of the assistant treasurers at the remaining six Subtreasuries; and, finally, the consolidation of the entire Subtreasury system with the Federal reserve bank six months after the end of the present war.

The committee has reported a provision abolishing the Subtreasuries six months after the war ends. The Treasury Department, through the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in the hearings had before the committee, took the position that at this time no legislation of any kind affecting the Subtreasuries should be enacted. Ordinarily we find Appropriation Committees willing to act upon the suggestion of officials of the Government who have charge of these particular activities, but in this case we find that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury immediately in charge of the Subtreasuries has been disregarded absolutely and this provision inserted in the bill against their recommendations.

I have not time to read all of this testimony, but the Assistant Secretary was very positive in his statement that it was wrong to pass this legislation at this time. I know that the committee believe that through the abolition of the Subtreasuries they will be able to save some money, and the Efficiency Bureau in an exhaustive report undertakes to state how much money will be saved. But, strange to say, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who is in immediate touch with this matter, says that he does not believe that a single cent can be saved by any such proposition.

Furthermore, there is not a statement of a single bank or a business man anywhere in the United States in favor of the proposition which the committee submits. The Treasury Department is opposed to it, and I venture to say, from the personal knowledge I have of the conditions that exist—and my knowledge is confined to the Subtreasury at St. Louis—no money will be saved by the abolition of that Subtreasury, because if that work is turned over to the Federal reserve banks they must receive compensation for it. Two officers of the Federal reserve bank in St. Louis to-day receive as much money as the assistant treasurers and all the employees of the St. Louis Subtreasury combined. Even the rent of vault space in the city of St. Louis to accommodate the funds now in the Subtreasury would cost more than this Government is now paying for the operation of the whole Subtreasury system in that city.

There is an impression that the Subtreasury is a mere convenience for a few banks in the city in which it is located, but that is a mistake. The Subtreasury serves not only the banks in that city but it serves the banks in the States immediately adjoining to it. The banks of 17 States do business through the St. Louis Subtreasury. There is nowhere in these hearings a statement of a single banker, or a single business house, in favor of this proposition, and, on the contrary, the Treasury Department is opposed to it.

The service by the Subtreasuries to the country banks throughout the United States can not be as well rendered by any other system nor can it be rendered at as small a cost as under the present system. The Federal reserve banks are not ready to take over this work, and if they do it will be necessary to compensate them for the work. It is apparent to anyone who has studied this matter that it will not result in a saving; but, even if it did, that in itself would not justify such action in view of the very valuable and necessary service rendered to the country banks and business interests generally. The business of the country deserves consideration and in a purely governmental function, such as that performed by the Treasury Department, it is right and proper that full and complete facilities should be supplied the financial and business interests, and the best means possible should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MEEKER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I have read with considerable interest the report of this so-called Efficiency Commission. I think the word "efficiency" as used in connection with that commission is a misnomer. It ought to be called the inefficiency commission. I think a cursory examination of this report will bear me out in my statement in that connection. The recommendations made by this commission are absurd.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has made a motion to strike out the last word. The last word is "offices." He is discussing the Efficiency Commission. I desire to state that I shall make this point as often as the motion is made to strike out the last word.

Mr. IGOE. Does the gentleman mean during the remainder of the Congress?

Mr. WALSH. During the remainder of this discussion.

Mr. IGOE. Does not the gentleman think we ought to have a quorum here?

Mr. WALSH. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland may proceed five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland may proceed five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, an examination of page 1 of the report of the Efficiency Commission shows this language:

> Furthermore, the bureau is convinced that the abolition of the Subtreasuries will effect a large saving to the Government.

And yet on page 7 of the same report this commission recommends that this work now performed by the Subtreasuries and the important functions and duties now performed by them shall be transferred to the Federal reserve banks and to the branches thereof.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. Is it not true that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury states that now we are paying the Federal reserve banks for work they are doing on the bond issues?

Mr. COADY. That is absolutely true. They recommend that this work be performed not only by the Federal reserve banks, 12 in number, but by the branch banks, which are 11 in number, thereby transferring the work now performed by 9 offices, so thereafter it will be performed by 23 different offices of the country. They further recommend in their report that an additional employee be provided for in each of the 23 branches.

Therefore, instead of having the employees now provided for in this law in the different Subtreasuries of the city, we will have those same employees, barring, of course, the assistant treasurers and 23 coin clerks, and in addition to that there is a certain equipment required in these Subtreasuries. We have nine of these equipments now, and if the recommendations of this commission are adopted and enacted into law we will have to obtain 23 of these equipments for 23 cities of the United States. Mr. Leffingwell, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, and recommended strongly the continuance of these Subtreasuries. On page 448 of the printed report of the hearings had on this bill he has this to say:

> The department is not ready to recommend that any be abolished. Since the Secretary made his report of a little over a year ago the condition of the world's affairs and of the United States has been changed by the great war, and the department has been called upon to multiply its activities vastly. The Subtreasuries have had to do more than ever before.

I know that is true. In our own city of Baltimore from February, 1917, until January, 1918, the receipts and disbursements amounted to over $314,000,000, an increase of $90,000,000 over the business done there the previous year. That vast amount of business in the Subtreasury at the city of Baltimore was done at an expense of only $31,500—one one-hundredth of 1 per cent of the entire business done. The Subtreasury at Baltimore meets the needs and necessities of 700,000 people. The United States Naval Academy uses it for small coins. The proving ground at Aberdeen, a permanent institution, uses it. The great shipbuilding plants in Baltimore use it, and this amendment provides that these shall be discontinued six months after the war.

Mr. Chairman, these shipbuilding industries will be busy, not only 6 months after the war, but for 10 years after the war, replacing the ships that have been destroyed and sent to the bottom of the ocean.

Mr. HAMLIN. And if the Baltimore Subtreasury or any of them were abolished, you would only save the salary of the subtreasurer.

Mr. COADY. That is true.

Mr. HAMLIN. The overhead charges would go on.

Mr. COADY. Yes; and I do not think under the recommendations of the Bureau of Efficiency we would save those, because they recommend additional offices be employed in 23 different cities of the United States and the salaries of those would more than offset the little saving obtained by abolishing the offices of subtreasurers.

The business and financial people of Baltimore who have put millions of dollars of their own money in Red Cross work, Y. M. C. A. work, and K. of C. work, are now asking the Government to continue the small annual appropriation of $31,500 for the maintenance of the Baltimore Subtreasury, not for their personal benefit but to enable them to serve their customers who furnish the money that finances the big industrial plants which employ thousands of workmen. These manufacturers need a large amount of fractional currency every week for their pay rolls, and they obtain it at the Subtreasury. The Baltimore Subtreasury serves not only our own community of 700,000 people but it also meets the needs of the people of Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and a part of the State of Pennsylvania.

The figures that I have mentioned demonstrate beyond any question the value of the Subtreasury in Baltimore to the communities it serves. If we transfer the functions of these Subtreasuries to the Federal reserve banks, it will be, in my judgment, a serious mistake. The Federal reserve banks are now overworked, and so are the Subtreasuries. I know that the 21 men employed in the Baltimore Subtreasury are a hard-worked class of men, and that for some time past they have been constantly employed in the performance of their duties from 9 in the morning until 6.30 in the evening. It is inconceivable that the force of clerks in Federal reserve banks or any of the Federal reserve bank branches could, in addition to their present duties, perform the additional work that would be imposed upon them if the functions of the Subtreasuries were imposed upon them.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am only going to take a few minutes in support of the amendment offered. I was rather surprised that the point of order was raised by the distinguished chairman of this committee. We discussed this matter in our committee. There were not any real sound reasons advanced for the abolishing of these Subtreasuries, and I can not gather why the gentlemen who have been so unanimous in support of practically every proposition to give the present Secretary of the Treasury increased powers are now unwilling to take his word for it that these Subtreasuries ought not to be abolished. The Assistant Secretary, speaking for Mr. McAdoo, said something else before the committee. He said that since the organization of the Federal reserve banks the Subtreasuries have been actually called upon in the Federal reserve cities to assume subsidiary labors for these banks, and that since his own brief term of office began his principal burden in connection with the Subtreasuries has been to resist the appeals of the Assistant Treasurers for additional assistance. He believed that the work of the Subtreasuries had been increased instead of reduced by the establishment of the Federal reserve banks. It was difficult to resist the appeals of the assistant treasurers for additional assistance.

Yet—

Said he—

I had to resist when I felt that there was real merit in those appeals, because I knew it was the wish of the Secretary and of your committee that there should not be an increase in the activities of the Subtreasuries.

Mr. Chairman, I speak in part for the city of Boston, where the Subtreasury there takes care of the wants not only of the citizens of Boston, but of about 2,000,000 or more of the people of Massachusetts. Every business interest in Massachusetts stands back of the Subtreasury in my city, and I can not, as I said before, for the life of me understand what sound argument can be advanced for this committee to produce such a suggestion as is offered in the bill. Our committee was not unanimous, and I do not want the impression to prevail that the entire Committee on Appropriations stands back of this report. I can recall at least five of us on that committee who did not agree to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman has no right to discuss what occurred in the committee.

Mr. GALLIVAN. My good friend, we, the minority, reserved our rights and agreed that we would not support this suggestion of the committee. There was nothing confidential about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That does not give the gentleman the right to discuss what occurred in the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. There is nothing sacred about the committee, is there?

Mr. GALLIVAN. No, even though I do happen to be a member of it.

Mr. RUCKER. Can not a gentleman on the committee say he does not agree to what the Efficiency Bureau does?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, yes.

Mr. RUCKER. If he could not do that, we had all better adjourn and go home. I am tired of this Efficiency Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The general rule is that Members shall not bring into the House matters that took place in the committee which are likely to bring about a controversy in the House.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, whether I have the right to say it or not, I have said it. I told the committee I would say it on the floor of the House.

Mr. VARE. Is it not the fact that gentlemen desire to be extremely courteous to the chairman of the committee and did not file a minority report.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Exactly; and my colleague from Pennsylvania agreed with me, but it was well understood that the committee was not unanimous and that the minority would be heard from in the discussion.

Mr. MADDEN. What else could they expect from two such agreeable gentlemen?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, we had this fight once before, and this branch of Congress overwhelmingly refused to abolish these Subtreasuries.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought from the beginning of the gentleman's speech that he was opposed to the continuation of these Subtreasuries.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I am afraid that the gentleman has been lost in reading a speech which he delivered a few hours ago, and is so wrapped up in it that it is hard for him to follow an intelligent discussion from any other source. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that it is a good deal easier to get wrapped up in a thing of that sort than a package of sugar these days.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I have been somewhat interested in this debate during its short progress.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire what is before the House. I make the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER. I am before the House. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Let us keep the record straight.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad I have the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], because, it seems to me, the gentleman from Massachusetts and the Efficiency Board are running Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. That is why it is being so economically managed.

Mr. RUCKER. I submit to the gentleman from Massachusetts with more grace than I do to the Efficiency Board. My colleague from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] and the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] tell us that the Secretary of the Treasury, into whose hands we have placed almost unlimited power by practically unanimous vote, says these Subtreasuries ought not to be abolished. But what difference does that make now? A certain concern has sprung up like a mushroom and named itself "Efficiency," and gentlemen connected with the Committee on Appropriations consider it efficient and whatever that concern says has at least the support of some gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations. Now, "efficiency" is a pleasing term, it is an euphonious term, and, as far as I know, the bureau is self-named. I doubt if any gentleman on the Committee on Appropriations has the genius to find a name suitable for this magnificent and, pardon me, this autocratic aggregation, composed of a few men, who arrogate to themselves the right to say that one department must do thus and so, and other great departments of the Government shall do nothing, because we, the chairman and members of the Efficiency Bureau, acting through the chairman, have arrayed our infallible judgment against the combined wisdom and judgment of all the departments of the Government, and since the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has generously permitted me to proceed out of order, I am going to remain out of order long enough to say that, so far as I am concerned, the Efficiency Bureau has no weight or influence with me. [Applause.] I regret to see this great committee, clothed with the stupendous power that it has, come in here and attempt to override and crush to earth the recommendations of high officials of the Government in obedience to the dictations of this great efficiency expert, who gladly took a job at $4,000 a year.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is aware this Bureau of Efficiency is the child of the Democratic administration now in power?

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say there are so many Democrats in the country now that I do not know upon whom to fix the blame, but, so far as I am concerned, speaking as a Democrat, I repudiate the suggestion and assure the gentleman that my conduct has been honorable. This bureau, however, is of Republican origin. It could not claim Democratic paternity—its conduct is too objectionable.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I yield.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand the Efficiency Board and the efficiency investigations, out of which this thing grew, were originated by Mr. Taft and his administration.

Mr. RUCKER. I understand the head of the Efficiency Bureau came from that side of the House.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I will yield.

Mr. MEEKER. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, would not the gentleman be bound to say that accidents sometimes occur in the best-regulated families?

Mr. RUCKER. I want to say to my colleague [Mr. MEEKER] the gentleman from Massachusetts did not make an accusation against him, and I regret that he deems it necessary to make a defense. [Laughter.] Seriously, Mr. Chairman, I believe the time has come when the Members of this House ought to assert their individual manhood. If this Congress is going to legislate, we ought to legislate without seeking or obeying the mandate of the Efficiency Bureau. I am sick and tired of hearing gentlemen come here and justify their conduct by saying that a $4,000-a-year man, who was glad to take a position at that price, is now the guardian and director of congressional action and the keeper of congressional conscience.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. I hope the time will come when this thing will stop. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Under what rule are we proceeding?

The CHAIRMAN. Why, we are proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Under what rule are gentlemen selected or preferred for recognition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is just trying to alternate between the different sides of the House and the different sides of the question. The gentleman who now has the floor is a member of the committee that reported the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Committee on Appropriations?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Everybody so far has had to get time by unanimous consent; there has been no motion.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be permitted to proceed out of order or in order as he chooses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed either in or out of order for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, it is very seldom as a member of the Committee on Appropriations that I disagree with the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERLEY], for whom I have the very highest regard, and likewise concerning the chairman of the subcommittee which reported this bill [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee], and I regret very much that they do not come from great centers of business activity wherein they would have the opportunity of observing the importance of the great business interests of the community to a much greater extent, because that, combined with their great knowledge and ability, would make them a tower of strength to the business interests of the country by being more familiar with its operation. I have listened to the discussion on the floor to-day concerning the abolishment of these nine Subtreasurers' offices. It seems to me, on the one hand, we have the report of the Efficiency Commission recommending the discontinuance of these offices, and, on the other hand, we have absolutely no sympathetic favorable consideration or agreement with the commission from the Secretary of the Treasury or the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Based on their knowledge of the service of this time-honored institution, the various interests in Philadelphia which go to make up the industrial life of the community and the prosperity of the surrounding territory, every business man whom I have approached, every commercial organization to whose attention this matter has been brought have been loud in their denunciation of the movement to destroy the Subtreasury system of the United States.

This bill provides that the action should be taken six months after the conclusion of the war, and that the activities of these institutions should be transferred to Washington. It is true that the Nation is looking to the centralization of authority and management, but is it well to make provision for such action in a matter where a broader scope of activity will be needed at the conclusion of the war? We might devote our attention to the better working order of things in the present era of commissions, boards, and committees to scatter broadcast the duties of our well-established Government. It seems to me that there has been too much legislation to hamper and interfere with business.

I have in my possession a letter from the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, in which Ernest T. Trigg, the president of that body, declares the "Philadelphia Subtreasury performs important functions in the commercial, industrial, and banking life of this community." I have another from Alfred E. Burke, chairman of the finance committee of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, in which he says that the "Subtreasury has been of immense value to the business and banking interests of the city of Philadelphia, and that the removal of the same would be nothing short of a calamity."

I could mention another from Emil Albrecht, president of the Philadelphia Bourse, where he says, "The Subtreasury here is of great assistance both to the Government and to the Federal reserve bank in the operation of Government work." And, mark you, gentlemen, these men, members of the three great commercial institutions and associations in the city of Philadelphia, are doing Government work second to none in any city in the United States. Is their "will" to be set aside for the recommendations of a committee on investigation, whose very report shows a narrow view on the subject at its best?

It is useless to go through the large list of banks and bankers who have protested against this provision, as it includes practically every bank in Philadelphia. The Philadelphia Clearing House, an organization in which the large banks of Philadelphia are represented, at its meeting last week protested against the removal of the Subtreasury by a unanimous vote.

Edwin S. Stuart, former governor of Pennsylvania and one of the most able and respected business men of the city, writes "that you can do no better service to the business interests of Philadelphia than making the effort to prevent the removal of the Subtreasury from this city." Fred T. Chandler, president of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, assures me that the Subtreasury is of great benefit to Philadelphia, as well as its neighboring communities.

The removal of the Subtreasury would cause confusion and delay, and I can not see why the present system should be disturbed. If it is because some sections of the country can not share in its benefits, enlarge its scope, do not destroy it. The Subtreasury in Philadelphia operates at a cost of about $50,000 a year to the country, and it handles more than a billion dollars a year in receipts and payments. This work must be done somewhere, and I fail to see where it could be done with less cost or with as little confusion.

The importance of the Subtreasury can not be overestimated. It occupies a position in our financial structure which is of great importance. It is the medium through which gold exchanges are made, and I understand that it issues certificates for gold payments which under certain conditions can not be issued by the Federal reserve bank or any other agency under the present law.

Conditions will be very different six months after the war is brought to an end than they are at the present time. We can not estimate the relative value of our financial institutions for that time on present conditions, even if the Subtreasury were giving little or no service now. I feel that the prompt and unhampered transaction of all business at that time, when we again enter into competition with our presen. allies, will be more necessary than now, and to endeavor to legislate for a period six months from an unknown date is not businesslike.

I have sat in this House since May, 1912, and I have voted sympathetically with organized labor at all times, and I have supported the President on every occasion since his declaration of war in so far as his recommendations apply to war matters. [Applause.] I believe that we as Members of this House should stand with him in the conduct of the war. And I have no sympathy with those on either side who may on this question only give their half-hearted support, if there be a Member of this body who is so doing. I do not speak from a partisan standpoint, although I have the honor of representing the greatest Republican district in this country, Republican on every and all things, and I come from the greatest Republican city in this country, Republican on all occasions. In a recent campaign in my city the two elements of Democracy united, and with every great newspaper in that city favoring a combination Democratic ticket, the senior United States Senator from Pennsylvania subscribing and bolting his party and uniting with the Democrats, that great constituency could not be fooled, and the entire Republican ticket was triumphantly elected.

Mr. MEEKER. I would like to say that St. Louis was the first one back into the Republican column since 1912. Do not forget that.

Mr. VARE. But we stayed in the Republican column in 1912. Do not forget that. [Applause.] We never left the Republican column and did not leave it last fall, notwithstanding the fact that there was not a single newspaper but that opposed the party.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that inasmuch as there is a division of opinion on the question of Subtreasuries, the Efficiency Commission on the one side and the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury and his assistant on the other, that the needs and requirements of the great business interests of Philadelphia, as well as of the other communities, should be considered. Therefore I hope that the committee will strike out this provision and that the splendid service which has been rendered to the different communities for more than half a century, at least so far as Philadelphia is concerned, shall be maintained. [Applause.]

I insert the following letters:

[Letter from former Gov. Edwin S. Stuart, of Pennsylvania, now director in the Federal reserve bank.]

MARCH 1, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Much obliged for the copy of the report of the Bureau of Efficiency, relative to the question of the Subtreasury, in your telegram of yesterday. You can render no better service to the business interests of Philadelphia than making the effort to prevent the removal of the Subtreasury from this city.

With kind regards, I remain,

Yours, sincerely, EDWIN S. STUART.

MARCH 1, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In response to your wire of the 27th, regarding legislation being considered to eliminate the Subtreasury at Philadelphia and other cities, permit us to say that we consider the Philadelphia Subtreasury performs important functions in the industrial, commercial, and banking life of this community.

Philadelphia has a tremendous total pay roll. In supplying the different varieties of bills and coin the Subtreasury performs an invaluable service. Unless other machinery equally well adapted for this purpose is supplied, elimination of the Subtreasury would entail enormous inconvenience upon manufacturers, banks, and merchants. The banks of Philadelphia transferred most of their cash to the Federal reserve bank, with the understanding that an assortment of cash would be ready at hand for their use in the Subtreasury, and its supplies are, therefore, being used daily by the important banks for the benefit of the entire third Federal reserve district.

All forms of money, except Federal-reserve notes and national-bank notes, are being constantly redeemed at the Subtreasury. In short, it is a clearing house for currency and coin.

We sincerely trust that you will use your influence to retain the Subtreasury here.

Yours, very truly, ERNEST T. TRIGG, President.

[Letter from Alfred E, Burk, chairman finance committee of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia.]

PHILADELPHIA, March 1, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your telegram of the 28th, addressed to Mr. N. T. Folwell, president of the Manufacturers' Club, in reference to legislation eliminating the Subtreasury at Philadelphia, at hand. The Manufacturers' Club seriously protests against this legislation. The Subtreasury has been of immense value to the business and banking interests of the city of Philadelphia, and the removal of the same would be nothing short of a calamity. On behalf of the Manufacturers' Club, you can not too strongly protest against such legislation.

Respectfully, yours, ALFRED E. BURK,
Chairman Finance Committee.

FEBRUARY 28, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE,
Representatives Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN VARE: Your wire of the 27th instant is received. I feel that the Subtreasury at Philadelphia is a big and necessary asset to our banking institutions and large commercial interests, and should by all means be retained. I feel certain that the banking institutions as well as our business interests here will enter a strong protest against its removal.

If you will permit me, I would suggest that you communicate with the heads of our several banks, the chamber of commerce, etc., so that their protests may be forwarded to you.

If there is any way in which I can further assist you, I will be glad to receive your commands.

With kindest regards, I am,

Very truly, yours, FRED T. CHANDLER.

[Letter from Edwin Wolf, of Wolf Bros. & Co., bankers.]

FEBRUARY 28, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Am opposed to the removal of Subtreasury from Philadelphia and other cities to Washington, as proposed in legislation now before Congress.

Their removal would cause untold confusion and delay, not only to the banks and banking community but to all business, and I certainly feel the present system should not be disturbed, and would urge you to use your endeavors to prevent such removal.

Respectfully, CLARENCE WOLF.

PHILADELPHIA BOURSE,
Philadelphia, February 28, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. VARE: I have your telegram in relation to the legislation designed to discontinue the Subtreasuries at Philadelphia and other cities and asking for information as to the service rendered to the community by the Subtreasury and the effect it would have upon business in general if the same were removed to Washington.

I had the impression that the provision in one of the bills recently before the House for discontinuing these Subtreasuries had been stricken from the bill, but I suppose from your telegram that the matter has been revived in some other form.

It seems to us unfortunate, and we fail to understand the necessity, that the question of removing the Subtreasuries from Philadelphia and from other cities should be raised almost every session of Congress. We fail to see that any arguments have yet been made which would indicate that greater efficiency would be obtained or any less expense incurred by such removal.

We understand that the Subtreasury in Philadelphia is operating at an expense of about $50,000 per annum and handles very close to $1,000,000,000. The work here performed must necessarily be done somewhere, and the expense we feel could not be reduced, while the convenience to the banking and general business interests of this city and vicinity would be very much curtailed if the operations now performed by the Subtreasury had to be carried on in Washington.

The Subtreasury here is of great assistance both to the Government and the Federal reserve bank in the operation of Government work, and it does not appear feasible or practicable to combine these institutions, consequently for this, if for no other reason, in our judgment and in that of representatives of the largest banks, the Subtreasury should remain in Philadelphia.

The Philadelphia Clearing House Association at its meeting to-day had this proposed legislation up for consideration, and finally decided to wire you and other Members of Congress from this city asking that you do everything you can to prevent the enactment of this measure.

Philadelphia is one of the leading financial centers of the country. The dealings of the financial institutions here and in the vicinity of this city with the Subtreasury are heavy. If these institutions were obliged to have these dealings with Washington, it would entail considerable expense and delay; and we submit that as an aid to these financial institutions the importance of the Subtreasury can not be overestimated. Furthermore, the Subtreasury acts as a clearing house for the large requirements of the banks of Philadelphia and vicinity in the matter of the supply of minor coins, which are vitally necessary in payroll work and as a place of deposit for the banks and public-service corporations of their excess of subsidiary coins, and we doubt very much whether these could be successfully handled by the Federal reserve bank.

We understand further that the Subtreasury is the medium through which gold exchanges are made, and that it issues certificates for gold payments under certain conditions, which could not under the present law be issued by the Federal reserve bank or any other agency.

The Subtreasury occupies a place in our financial structure which is of great importance. We can see no reason or excuse on the grounds of economy or efficiency that it should be closed and the community thereby be put to the delay and inconvenience that would be caused by its discontinuance. Finally, as we understand from your message that the proposed legislation provides for the discontinuance of the Subtreasuries six months after the war, we feel that we can not protest too strongly against the enactment of legislation which is to take effect six months after an unknown date in the future and at a time when conditions may be very different from those at the present time and require even more than now every facility for the prompt transaction of business that we possess. We respectfully submit that after the end of the war there will be ample time to consider the necessity for making such a radical change, and sincerely trust that any attempt to change the present condition may be at least laid aside until after the war is over.

I hope to be able to send you to-morrow some additional information on the subject, as I have requested the banking interests of the city to give prompt consideration to the subject, and I am advised that it will have the attention of the clearing-house committee to-morrow morning, after which I will write you further or you will hear directly from that committee.

Thanking you for giving us this opportunity of expressing our views, and assuring you of our appreciation of your efforts to prevent the discontinuance of any of the facilities already possessed by our city, I remain,

Very truly, yours, EMIL P. ALBRECHT, President.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think it is hardly fair, Mr. Chairman, that the request should be granted. I appreciate the gentleman is a member of the committee, and if he insists I will not object.

Mr. VARE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. I will finish very soon.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have no objection, except I would like to know if in allowing one Member 10 minutes some of the balance of us may be able to get two or three minutes? I am a little afraid that they may close debate and some of us who want to say a few words may not get any time at all.

However, I will not object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may I submit a request for unanimous consent? The opposition to this paragraph, those who favor striking it out, have had 20 minutes. Now, I ask unanimous consent that further debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MADDEN. Is this in addition?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In addition. My request gives to the opposition to this paragraph 20 minutes the advantage. In other words, it gives them 50 minutes and gives 30 minutes to the other side.

Mr. PLATT. Reserving the right to object, I want to speak against the amendment, striking it out.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is against the amendment?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be extended one hour, one-half to be controlled by him and one-half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE]. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, who has control of the time in favor of striking out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. GARD. May I have five minutes of the gentleman's time?

Mr. VARE. I shall be happy to divide the time equitably among all those who speak, but I have not any list of those who desire to speak.

A MEMBER. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question being the regular order, the regular order is, Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is recognized.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] controls——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania controls 30 minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee 30 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] five minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I have been in favor of abolishing the Subtreasuries ever since the Federal reserve banks were established, and I think I have either made a motion to cut out the appropriations for the Subtreasuries in this appropriation bill each year since 1913 or else have supported such a motion, and I am very glad to find that the great Committee on Appropriations, after full hearings, has at last decided to recommend that the Subtreasuries be abolished six months after the end of the war and has so written the paragraph under discussion of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

I am strongly opposed to the pending amendment to strike out the paragraph. I do not see how anybody can read the report of the Bureau of Efficiency without being convinced that this paragraph should remain in the bill and that the Subtreasuries should be abolished as useless and as a very considerable source of expense to the people of the United States. The Bureau of Efficiency "has found no function at present exercised by the Subtreasuries which can not be performed as well by Federal reserve banks or other agencies." The Subtreasuries cost $604,042 in the last fiscal year, $455,705 of which was for salaries alone. It is estimated that 75 per cent of this can be saved by abolishing the system. Why, in the name of common sense, then, should it be retained, especially at a time when the resources of the Nation will be strained to the utmost to pay the enormous expenses of the war?

The report of the Bureau of Efficiency is absolutely convincing to anyone who knows anything about the financial affairs of the Government and the workings of the Federal Reserve Banking System. It shows that the old-time functions of the Subtreasuries have, in fact, been gradually absorbed by the banks, a process that has been going on for years, until now most of the fiscal functions have already been transferred.

> The majority of the receipts and disbursements of the Government go through the national depository banks, including the Federal reserve banks. Every day the collectors of internal revenue and of customs put their receipts in the depository banks. The postmasters deposit their surpluses. All checks are now drawn directly against the Treasurer at Washington. These checks will be cashed as readily at any depository bank as at the Subtreasury.

The Subtreasuries are therefore simply a fifth wheel on the wagon—useless and even cumbersome.

It does not seem to me that the Bureau of Efficiency has stated all of its arguments as strongly as they might well be stated. It has indeed hinted that the abolition of the Subtreasuries would be in the direction of a mobilization of our resources, but it has not stated strongly enough that every bit of gold or silver held in the Subtreasuries beyond the trust funds which are back of the gold certificates and the silver certificates and the greenbacks, is hoarded and out of circulation—a source of weakness rather than strength to our whole fiscal system. Such money belongs in the banks, where it can be loaned under proper safeguards to uphold the business of the country. The bureau, too, has understated the advantages that would accrue to the banking system, and especially to the Federal Reserve banks, from the abolition of the Subtreasuries. It has failed entirely to state that two sets of paper money issued against the same piece of gold are unnecessary. To-day gold certificates are issued against a certain sum of gold, and then the Federal reserve banks take the certificates and issue Federal reserve notes against them dollar for dollar, impounding the certificates in their reserves. They might just as well have the gold itself in their reserve vaults instead of having it in the custody of the Subtreasuries and issue their notes directly against it, thereby saving the overworked Bureau of Engraving and Printing the entirely unnecessary labor of printing the certificates, which add nothing whatever to the circulation of the country.

Do not misunderstand me. I do not mean to say that no gold certificates whatever would need to be printed if the Subtreasuries were abolished, but I do mean that those against which the Federal reserve banks issue notes would not be printed, because the gold itself would be taken out of the Subtreasuries and put in the custody of the reserve banks where it belongs.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened with some amazement, not to say amusement, to the arguments of the gentlemen from Philadelphia and Boston and Baltimore, who have told us what a great blow to their cities the abolition of their particular Subtreasuries would be. Nobody has expressed the opinion that the city of New York would be injured if its Subtreasury, which does far more business than all the others put together, were abolished, nor has anybody yet suggested that Chicago would be seriously damaged by the loss of its Subtreasury, which is second in amount of business transacted. But Philadelphia—well, I had always supposed that those stories about the slowness of Philadelphia were fakes until I heard the eloquent gentlemen who represent that overgrown village tell us how they would suffer without this antique institution. I do not know how much of this argument is genuine and how much of it is just an effort to hold the jobs of the assistant treasurers and their subordinates. It is a mighty difficult thing to abolish a job once well established, no matter how useless it has become.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I regret to say that the gentlemen who are holding the jobs in Boston are, 99 per cent of them, Republicans, and yet I speak for them.

Mr. PLATT. I am not at all unwilling, although they are Republicans, that they shall lose their jobs at the present time in the interest of the Government. There is plenty of more useful work that they can find to do.

Now, the Subtreasuries have in their vaults a part of the trust funds that are kept back of the gold certificates and silver certificates. The report of the Bureau of Efficiency shows that these trust funds are not segregated by themselves, but are kept separate in the bookkeeping. It shows that all this metallic money can easily be taken care of in the Treasury at Washington, in the assay office and in the mints. In Philadelphia these funds are partly in the mint, in New York largely in the assay office now, and they can just as well be kept there. The vaults at Washington contain an enormous quantity of silver dollars. The gold is far more concentrated in volume, and presents no great difficulty. It is conclusively shown that the vault space in the Subtreasuries is not absolutely necessary for the safekeeping of the gold and silver of the United States. The Federal reserve banks have vaults, and the Treasury here at Washington has vaults. The free gold and silver—that which is not a part of the trust funds—ought to be in the banks. Every consideration of economy and of sound finance demands that the Subtreasuries should be abolished. The amendment ought to be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] use some of his time?

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I can not understand why at each session of Congress we are compelled to make this fight for the retention of our Subtreasuries. We are voting billions of dollars in this great war, and here you propose to come to Baltimore and to these other cities and absolutely disrupt the financial system which has existed there for the last 72 years. We have been doing business at these Subtreasuries, including the one at Baltimore city, for 72 years. Federal reserve banks have been assigned to all the cities as large as Baltimore throughout the country, and just the other day you established a Federal reserve branch in Baltimore.

I might say that even in this report this Bureau of Efficiency recommends that the Subtreasuries at Baltimore and Cincinnati be abolished at once to see if it works out all right, and if it works out all right that the others be abolished also. In other words, the plan is to "try it on the dog," and if it works out all right on the "dog," then to try it on the other cities.

Now, the expense is not very large—$31,500 to do a business of $314,000,000. I do not see anything in the Government service, as far as I can notice, that is anything like so efficiently and economically performed as these Subtreasuries. Nine of the largest cities in the country have been doing their business through these Subtreasuries, and at this time, when the war is in progress and everybody is making sacrifices, all the strength of our people and the revenue ought to be put into the prosecution of this war instead of trying to trim off some little matter of $31,500 in our city. You appropriate billions of dollars, you appropriate in blocks millions of dollars, and yet you come and talk about lessening the expenses of the Government by cutting off a few Subtreasuries.

Baltimore is trying to do its part. All the other cities are doing their part, and it does seem to me that, Congress having passed upon this matter within the year and having definitely decided not to do away with the Subtreasuries, we ought not to be compelled to come again each year and make the fight over again. When is the fight to cease? I heard the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] in private conversation say that Congress had been making the fight against these Subtreasuries for 15 years. If you would count the time and the value of the time that Congress has consumed in trying to do away with these Subtreasuries, you would find that it amounts to more in dollars and cents than the Subtreasuries have been costing the Government.

Now, I think that you ought to be fair in this matter. The Secretary of the Treasury tells you not to do away with the Subtreasuries. He said so in his letter, and gives specific reasons for his opinion. Every man in these Subtreasuries, if they are abolished, will be located in some other department of the Government, and you will not save any expense. They will either be brought to the Treasury Department here or they will be put in other local institutions conducted by the Government in the various cities. They are all good and efficient men and the Government needs them; and if they do not carry on the work of the Subtreasuries in their respective cities, where they are most accessible, they will have to do the same work here in Washington in the Treasury Department. The work must be performed. It is necessary work, and whether it is done locally or in the National Capital, in Washington, it will not save any expense to abolish them.

I want to say to the committee that it should be fair about this matter. The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended that these Subtreasuries be continued. Congress not more than a year ago passed upon the subject and determined by a large vote that the Subtreasuries ought to be continued. The Efficiency Board has made only slight examination. It is not right and proper that the fight should be continued every year. Let us have peace in this matter. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, this is a repetition of the old, old fight that Congress observes every time it undertakes to remove some old barnacle fastened on the country which is good for nothing but to give somebody a job. That is all there is in it, and all there is about it. Many of you Members here to-day were here five or six years ago when Congress undertook to unhorse and throw out a lot of old antiquated pension agencies throughout the United States. It was proven by various Secretaries of the Interior that they could be abolished and save $125,000 a year to the Treasury of the United States. If I recollect correctly, it took three years of constant, continuous, hard, eternal hammering before that bunch of men were dislodged. One of them was in my own State, in the city of Indianapolis, where they paid approximately $10,000,000 a year to the soldiers. The banks in the city of Indianapolis had an interest in it. During that period of time I got letters and telegrams by the hundreds from banks in the city of Indianapolis asking me to oppose the demolition of the pension agencies through the United States, but Congress eventually abolished them and the old soldier got his pension on schedule time just as he had before.

You all remember in the last three years the desperate fight that the gentleman from New York, Mr. Fitzgerald, had in trying to dislodge a lot of trustees at the Soldiers' Home, and if he had not been joined by the able and distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] I doubt whether he would ever have been able to eliminate a lot of officials there.

Here is the same old fight. Just look at it. You may turn and twist the English language as much as you like. There is nothing in this whole business except holding a few jobs in these Subtreasury cities.

I was chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department from 1910 to 1912, and my committee undertook to investigate this same identical question. We had before us Mr. McVeigh, a very prominent and able Secretary of the Treasury, and he said that he was not quite in favor of their abolition at that time, but he said if we had a central bank in this country that from that time on they would serve no purpose and no use and be of no benefit whatever to the financial interests of the country. It is hard for me to understand how a man can stand up here and argue that it would not bring about any economy to abolish them. I do not remember the exact amount that is paid out for salaries, but it is something like $700,000 paid out now to these officials of the Subtreasuries.

What can they do with that office force? Why, we are taking on employees here by the thousands. We are soon going to be asked to appropriate $50,000,000 to build buildings for the employees coming in here. We could release that number of employees now in the Subtreasuries and send them here without depletion of the civil service lists. It is a question of economy, and you can abolish every one of these Subtreasuries and not disturb the business interests of any city one iota; it will move onward and forward and upward just as fast as it is moving downward. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Just as the pension offices were abolished.

Mr. COX. Absolutely; I have discussed that. There is nothing in it but the question of jobs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment proposing to strike out that clause of this bill that undertakes to abolish the Subtreasuries of the country, and for the information of the Members I may say I do not live in one of the cities where a Subtreasury is located. While I am in the same State where there is one—in the city of St. Louis—I am not very close to that city, but, in fact, a long ways from it. I know that the banking interests of that State, and I believe of the entire country, appreciates the Subtreasuries of the country as an important part of the financial system of this Government and want them preserved.

This is a proposition to strike down the Subtreasuries, as I understand, without any information as to what is to take the place of them. I am advised that the work which to-day is being done by the Subtreasuries must be done somewhere, and if the Subtreasuries are abolished that work must be transferred to some other branch of the Government; and when you do that, the expenses—as I am informed by those who are in position to know the most about it—will probably be just as much as they are to-day, and the work will likely not be done as well or as satisfactorily as at present.

I am opposed to sudden and radical changes in our financial system, and especially so unless there is to be something beneficial accomplished as a result of the change. I am not convinced that there will be any improvement by the proposition suggested here. My information is that the able Secretary of the Treasury, the recognized head of our Government's fiscal affairs, has not advised the abolition of these institutions, but that his judgment is against such action.

Let me suggest that this is a proposition to abolish the Subtreasuries, putting them out of business six months after the war is closed, which is an indefinite time. This war may last, although I hope it will not, but may last two or three or four years. Why hasten to-day to pass this act to repeal the law establishing these Subtreasuries at an indefinite time like that without substituting anything in their place? As this is not to take effect until six months after the war is over, I submit that the sensible thing to do would be to delay action till that time comes, and then in the time and light of peace to determine what is best.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, San Francisco is a Federal reserve city, and it also has a Subtreasury. So that if the work of the Subtreasury be given over to the Federal reserve bank, San Francisco, in one sense, will not be a loser. But what is the condition in the Subtreasury and in the Federal reserve bank in San Francisco at the present time? I understand that the Federal reserve bank in that city has been having so much work that it has had to rent additional quarters in one of our large office buildings. I am informed it has a force of about 100 clerks. These are undoubtedly necessary to do the voluminous work of the Federal reserve bank alone. The Subtreasury has been doing and is now doing a very large percentage of the work in connection with cashing the coupons of the bonds issued, the payments of large sums of money in other directions, and the transferring of the bonds from the Treasury of the United States to the Federal reserve bank with a clerical force that was fixed by law many years ago, and at a stipulated cost. It is being done much cheaper, I dare say, under the present system than it could possibly be done under the Federal Reserve Bank System. If the Federal Reserve Bank System requires in that city alone the employment of a hundred clerks, how many additional clerks will be required to do the added work of the Subtreasury?

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. As a matter of actual fact, all of the warrants and the notes that go to the Subtreasury to be cashed go through the Federal reserve banks and the national banks now. All you have got to do is to stop them there and not allow them to go to the Subtreasury.

Mr. KAHN. I understand the Subtreasury pays large numbers of those demands, and I shall ask leave to insert in my remarks some figures to show just what the Subtreasury in San Francisco is doing—work entirely independent of the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not a fact that the payments they make are on business that comes to them through the banks?

Mr. KAHN. No; that is not altogether so.

Mr. PLATT. That is what the report of the Bureau of Efficiency shows.

Mr. KAHN. I think they have been misinformed. I shall state, as I proceed in my remarks, quite a list of work that has been done by the Subtreasury at San Francisco that is not being done by the Federal reserve banks. I suppose that you could pass a law to have the Federal reserve banks do that work. I want to be fair about it. I say, however, that if that is done they will have more employees doing it than the Subtreasury has and that instead of saving money to the Treasury you will add largely to the expense of the taxpayer. This House fixes the number and status of employees in every one of the Subtreasuries. It fixes their salaries; there is a legislative limitation. How will you limit these things if the Federal reserve bank does the work? Why, the managers of the Federal reserve banks get larger salaries in practically every Federal reserve-bank city than the Subtreasurer and two or three of the leading employees, put together, get in the Subtreasury.

I do not know what the conditions may be in the other Subtreasury cities of this country, but I am fairly familiar with the conditions in San Francisco. And I may say that the conditions are apt to be so different in the various cities that each case ought to stand on its own merits. There should be a full investigation made by the Treasury Department as to this entire matter. I understand that neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury has recommended the legislation for the abolition of the Subtreasury at this time or even in the immediate future.

At San Francisco all Federal reserve notes issued are forwarded to the Subtreasury and there delivered to the Federal reserve banks on order of the Treasury Department. All coupon bonds of the Government are dealt with in the same way, the Subtreasury acting for its principal in Washington. In this way the San Francisco Subtreasury has delivered to the Federal reserve bank, fiscal agency for the twelfth district, coupon bonds of the liberty loans amounting to $350,000,000. It pays all demands of the Government that are presented over its counters by individuals, banks, and Federal reserve banks. It issues and redeems all Government currency in coin for the entire Pacific coast, thus saving the banks the cost of transportation that would be assessed if the business had to be carried on from Washington. The war has added greatly to the amount of work of the San Francisco Subtreasury. The amount of money required, the increased number of disbursing officers' checks handled and paid, the distribution to the Federal reserve banks and other banks of their currency, the keeping and distributing of liberty bonds, and the payment of interest coupons on these bonds, with other additional duties has required the office force of the Substreasury, which has not been increased since the war, to constantly work overtime.

The Subtreasury is paying most of the interest coupons on the liberty bonds for the twelfth Federal reserve district, the payments on these coupons running as high as $65,000 a day.

As I have already stated, if this work be transferred to the Federal reserve banks, I feel confident that a large clerical force will be necessary to handle it, and the $27,000 a year which the Government now pays for the maintenance of the Subtreasury will be materially augmented by the reserve bank. Congress, of course, will not have the right to limit the number and the pay of these employees.

For these reasons I am in favor of the pending motion to strike out the paragraph from the bill.

I desire to print as a part of my remarks the statement of William J. McGee, Assistant Treasurer of the United States in San Francisco, which was published in one of our newspapers about a year ago:

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM J. McGEE, ASSISTANT TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Several articles have recently been published in favor of the abolition of United States Subtreasuries.

It was contended in these articles that the Subtreasuries should be abolished because their employees were appointed as a reward for political services, and that the duties and functions of the Subtreasuries could be absorbed by the Federal reserve banks, and thus great expense saved to the Government.

All of the Subtreasury employees, except the assistant treasurers, are under civil service; no one can be appointed to this service except eligibles who have passed civil-service examinations and are certified by the Civil Service Commission, and then the selection must be made from one of the three highest on the list; nearly every employee of the San Francisco Subtreasury has held his position for from 15 to 25 years; recently an employee resigned; all the employees under him were promoted one position, and the Civil Service Commission held a competitive examination for the vacant clerkship thus created; over 50 bright young bank clerks took this examination, which was a rigid one; a dozen passed, and the 3 highest were certified as eligibles, and from their number 1 was chosen.

FUNCTIONS ARE VARIED.

The functions of the Subtreasuries are generally as follows: The payment of United States coupons and interest checks, payment of checks, warrants, and drafts drawn against the Treasurer of the United States and presented at a Subtreasury for payment; deposits of postal savings funds direct and money-order funds, direct and indirect; deposit of post-office funds, direct and indirect; deposit on account of 5 per cent redemption fund; deposit of funds belonging to disbursing officers; deposit of interest on public deposits; funds deposited for transfer to some other point through a payment by a Subtreasury located thereat; exchange of various kinds of money for other kinds that may be required; remittance from United States depositary banks of their surplus deposits of internal revenue, customs, money-order, postal, and similar funds; laundering of unfit currency which permits of this process; cancellation (before shipment to Washington) of unfit currency; acceptance of gold and silver certificates for redemption; issue of gold-order certificates on gold deposits; acceptance of Treasury notes for redemption; acceptance of gold coins for exchange; acceptance of United States notes for redemption; acceptance of minor coins for redemption; acceptance of fractional silver for redemption.

THIRTY MILLION DOLLARS HANDLED WITHOUT LOSS.

In addition the Treasury Department often assigns special duties to the Subtreasuries. For instance, the assistant treasurer at San Francisco represented the Comptroller of the Currency during the money stringency in 1914 and was chairman of the committee that passed on the securities offered for emergency currency.

Thirty million dollars was handled by the San Francisco Subtreasury on these emergency currency loans without a loss. The interest collected would pay the expenses of the San Francisco Subtreasury for years. This entire work was done without cost to the Government.

The San Francisco Subtreasury has now in process of collection 200 promissory notes of American refugees living in this vicinity who were in Europe at the beginning of the war, and who, under an act of Congress, were loaned funds for their return passage. These collections are also made without expense to the Government.

Panama Canal tolls are paid at this Subtreasury, and the owner of a vessel may pay the toll the day the ship is ready to enter the canal and have the canal advised by wire, which is a very great convenience to commerce.

Just now the San Francisco Subtreasury is receiving subscriptions for stock in the Federal land bank at Berkeley.

It is true that the Federal reserve banks could discharge most of the duties of the Subtreasuries, but they could not do this without employing an additional force of employees with similar skill and experience as those now doing the Subtreasury work, and the reserve banks would have to pay as high, if not higher, salaries for this service than are now being paid by the Government.

WOULD EFFECT NO SAVING.

I dislike to make personal comparison, but in support of this contention a comparison might be made between the salaries of the governors of the Federal reserve banks and those of the assistant treasurers, or between the salaries of the cashiers of the reserve banks and those of the cashiers of the Subtreasuries, and I venture to suggest that it will be found that the principal employees of the reserve banks are receiving more than twice as much salary as the principal employees of the Subtreasuries.

The Federal reserve banks are private corporations, like national banks, and the duties of the Subtreasuries could not be imposed upon the reserve banks without compensating them.

It might not be necessary or wise to continue indefinitely all of the Subtreasuries where even most of the business could be taken over by Federal reserve banks, but such a change can not be made except by proper legislation and negotiation and agreement regarding compensation to the reserve banks for the service; it certainly would be most unwise to stop abruptly all the business of the Subtreasuries by failure to make provision for their maintenance, as was recently attempted in Congress, without transferring their functions by proper legislation.

The amount of Government funds held by the nine Subtreasuries on June 30, 1916, was $700,000,000 and the total transactions of these nine Subtreasuries during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, was nearly $5,000,000,000 and at an expense of about $500,000, or approximately one one-hundredth of 1 per cent.

LEAST IN EXPENSE.

The San Francisco Subtreasury is third in number in assets, ranking next to New York and Chicago, third in the list of business transactions, and yet ninth, or the least of all the Subtreasuries, in expense of maintenance.

This Subtreasury at the end of the last fiscal year carried about $100,000,000 in funds, its transactions during the last fiscal year amounted to nearly $300,000,000 and its cost of maintenance was, in round numbers, $25,000.

And as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury, if these Subtreasuries were abolished the total cost of operating them would not be saved, as a counter expenditure by the office of the Treasurer in Washington, resulting from the increased work that would be thrown upon that office, would be entailed, or if arrangement was made with the Federal reserve banks to do the work they would have to be compensated.

In addition to the foregoing duties and functions of the Subtreasuries, they have the custody of a large part of the reserve and trust funds, consisting of gold coin and silver dollars deposited to secure gold and silver certificates and greenbacks; vault space is required for the deposit of these trust funds, especially the silver dollars. The new San Francisco Subtreasury building, which has only been completed a year and a half, cost approximately $500,000, and its vaults, among the largest and best in the country, cost $130,000. Besides the large amount of gold coin stored in these vaults, they contain over $25,000,000 in silver dollars, nearly all of which are held as trust funds against outstanding silver certificates.

COULD NOT STORE FUNDS.

None of the Federal reserve banks have the facilities for storing these trust funds, and if they provide such facilities they would necessarily have to make a considerable charge for the safe-keeping of these prodigious sums of money.

The present Secretary of the Treasury and other Secretaries of the Treasury have always been very much opposed to committing the custody of these trust funds to any private institution or institutions; the custody of these trust funds, their maintenance, direction, control, and administration are distinctly a governmental function, and, according to the contentions of the Treasury Department, should be exercised by the Government.

A large portion of the money in the Subtreasuries are trust funds which really do not belong to the Government and can not be used by the Government, because they are held as security for the payment of gold and silver certificates and greenbacks; hence it is a fallacy to argue that this money should be put in circulation through the medium of Federal reserve banks; any agency that holds this trust fund must hold it as a trust fund, or, in other words, must hold it in storage.

San Francisco is a city of commerce, and the Subtreasury here performs a highly useful service in furnishing merchants full-weight gold coin for shipment to the Orient to settle trade balances. During the past six months $15,000,000 in gold coin has been withdrawn from the San Francisco Subtreasury for shipment across the Pacific.

Aside from the convenience to the business public provided by the Subtreasuries in the large centers of business in the country, it is not considered good business safety to have all the money held by the Treasury Department, about $2,000,000,000, nearly all of which is trust funds, stored in one place; and if it was that place would be a shining mark for the first enemy that undertook to invade the country.

In conclusion, it is not claimed that the Subtreasuries are necessities, but they are conveniences, and it is the duty of the Government to provide adequate facilities to meet the convenience of the public in all parts of the country. San Francisco is 3,000 miles from the Treasury at Washington, and if the Subtreasuries are to be reduced from nine to three, as recently suggested in Congress, shall the San Francisco Subtreasury, which is the only one west of the Mississippi River, and which serves also Alaska, the Philippines, and the Hawaiian Islands, be one of the three?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. Illinois has a Subtreasury, located in the city of Chicago. I suppose it does about as much business possibly as any Subtreasury in the United States, but it is a useless place, and we ought to abolish it. There is no excuse for retaining all these Subtreasuries. One of the arguments made, as I remember, when we passed the Federal reserve bank bill was that it would do away with the Subtreasuries of the United States. Still we are asked each year to appropriate a large amount for Subtreasuries. There are just nine reasons to my mind why we ought to appropriate for Subtreasuries, and that is to give nine men jobs. If there is any other reason, I do not know what it is.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Not now. I remember that year after year, I do not know how many, but for a number of years we fought here in Congress over a lot of pension agencies, just because these agencies scattered throughout the country, in the cities of Chicago, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, or New York, or wherever they were located, were affording jobs. We had all those pension agencies and we could not get rid of them. They told the soldiers that if we abolished the pension agencies they would not receive their money until a long time after it was due; but the pension agencies were finally abolished and the soldier received his pension more promptly than he did before.

Now, here we are asked to continue in a time of war, when we are taxing the people for every dollar they can stand, and will be compelled to do so for a long time, to maintain a lot of worthless offices. It might be a nice thing to have a Subtreasury in every city of any size, but it is unfair to the people we represent that we should be asked to appropriate simply because it favors Baltimore, or Chicago, or San Francisco, or Boston, or any other city in the United States. We should not waste the money. It costs more than $600,000 to maintain them. Most of this amount could be saved if they were abolished.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I can not yield now.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I want to ask my colleague about the Subtreasury at Chicago.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I will yield to my colleague; certainly.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Does the gentleman know who the assistant treasurer at Chicago is, and where he hails from?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; he hails from down the State, and he is a very good man, a splendid Democrat; but that does not alter the case one bit. We ought not to retain a man or the office just because he is a good man when the office he holds is useless. it does not make any difference from what political party he comes.

By unanimous consent, Mr. IGOE and Mr. PLATT were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I want to have the clerk read a letter from the ex-Governor of Pennsylvania, who is and has been a director in the Federal reserve bank in Philadelphia since it inception.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, February 28, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: Your telegram in reference to the removal of the subtreasury at Philadelphia received. The subtreasury is a very necessary and useful institution to the business and banking interests of Philadelphia.

Philadelphia has become and is continuing to develop as an important financial center, and the subtreasury being located here is of great benefit to the business life of the city. It would be a great mistake to have it removed.

I think that the question of what shall be done six months after the conclusion of the war can be taken up at that time and not settled now.

With kind regards, I remain,
Yours, sincerely, EDWIN S. STUART.

Mr. VARE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of this House, on all appropriation matters, especially matters pertaining to the several departments, I have tried to get whatever information I could from those whom I thought were best fitted to give the information, and so on this question to-day I am going to follow the same course.

The information that we have received as to why these Subtreasuries should be abolished comes from a bureau recently appointed by this Congress. In the opening of their report to the Congress of the United States and to the country almost one of the first sentences is this:

The Bureau of Efficiency have not attempted to make an exhaustive study of the efficiency and economy with which the Treasuries are now run.

Mr. Chairman, this is the report of the Bureau of Efficiency, yet they have made no report as to the efficiency of the Subtreasuries, but go on to say that they are well managed, and have cared for the funds of the Government in a proper manner. If this were an appropriation for the War Department and I desired information, I would consult those who are in touch with conditions and know the wants of the War Department to tell this Congress what is best for that department. The same applies to every other department. In this instance the Secretary of the Treasury sends a letter to the Speaker of this House and he says that these Subtreasuries should not be abolished. But this Bureau of Efficiency comes in and says they should be abolished, for what reason? Not as a matter of efficiency, not as a matter of economy, but that the service of these departments is not required, and it should be given over to the private interests of the reserve banks, which are run by men elected by the banking institutions of the several cities where the reserve banks are located. Mr. Chairman, these reserve banks do not do the business of all the banks in the community, but merely with the members of their associations, while the Subtreasuries not only do business with the banking institutions but they do business with the business men in all the large communities wherever they are located.

Mr. Chairman. I have yet to hear one good, sound, substantial reason advanced by any member of this committee why these Subtreasuries should be abolished, other than that they should be abolished because they are barnacles on the ship of state and because they are unnecessary. Yet the men who know say that they are necessary and should be continued.

Mr. Chairman, if we are to believe that the men who are handling the affairs of the Government know what they want, if we believe that the men who are at the head of these great departments, and especially the gentleman who is at the head of the great Treasury Department of the United States—a man to whom we have intrusted immense problems—if we believe that he is right, if we believe that he knows, if we believe that he is intelligent enough to tell this Congress how the expenditures of this department should be met, then we should have confidence enough in him also when he says to this Congress that these Subtreasuries should not be abolished, instead of taking the word of a commission or bureau who admit in the opening of their report that they have not investigated the conditions that surround these institutions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care who the gentlemen are who are employed in these Subtreasuries. The Subtreasury in Boston is in the district that I have the honor to represent, and I know that many of the employees of that department have been there for many years and have rendered faithful service. They have given the best that is in them, and this commission comes forward and says their department should be abolished and these men should be transferred to the department that runs the Federal reserve banks. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-eight Members, not a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise. Mr. Chairman, I hope I will be permitted to make this statement, that to-morrow I hope gentlemen will consent that we can run very late or at least until 6 o'clock because the trouble is that we have been several days upon this bill and we are not making the progress we should make.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks permission to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think those requests should be made in the House in view of the fact that the Chair has declared that there is no quorum present and no business can be done without a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if it is done by unanimous consent the Chair does not think there is any difficulty.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10358 had come to no resolution thereon.

COMPENSATION OF PRIVATE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some data which has been furnished me as to employees in private life which I think may have some bearing upon the legislation seeking to increase clerical salaries.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does it have any bearing on anything connected with this bill?

Mr. COX. I think it will before we get through with it. I am trying to get this in the RECORD for the information of Members of the House, pure and simple.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks on the Subtreasury matter.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that those who spoke on the Subtreasury matter to-day may be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that everybody who spoke on the Subtreasury business shall have five legislative days——

Mr. SHERLEY. No; just have leave to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman desire to include those who may speak to-morrow?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection to that. I thought gentlemen wanted to extend their remarks after to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH. I think it would save time to include all of those, too.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MEMORIAL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following memorial, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1, 1918.

To the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the Sixty-fifth Congress, I beg to inform you that at a general election held in the second district of Ohio on November 6, 1917, I was duly and legally elected by the electors of that district as a Representative in Congress for that district to fill out the unexpired term of Capt. VICTOR HEINTZ, and that by reason of political chicanery, trickery, and other unlawful means I have been unable to obtain my regular credentials.

Having exhausted all lawful means in my State to obtain the usual credentials, I now appear before you with the evidence, written and oral, in support of my claim to a seat in this Congress.

And upon behalf of the electors of the second district of Ohio and myself I respectfully request that an opportunity may be afforded me to present to this House the evidence of my election.

Yours, respectfully,

DAVID L. BAUMGARTEN, Sr.,
Representative elect of the Second District of Ohio.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Speaker is going to refer it?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair is going to refer it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask whether every communication that is addressed to the Speaker, upon being presented in this informal way, gives it the privilege to have it referred to a committee?

The SPEAKER. It does not; but there are precedents, three or four, about this very line of conduct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought it did not give the privilege to have it referred.

The SPEAKER. A communication that ought not to be referred will not be referred.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. May I inquire to what committee the Speaker will refer this?

The SPEAKER. The matter is referred to Elections Committee No. 3.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. I think it is well to look into this matter, and overnight we may have the privilege of doing so. It comes here of a sudden, and involves the privileges of a Member of this House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, the Speaker can refer it.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3700. An act for the relief of John McW. Ford; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 9, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CARAWAY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7796) to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the western district of Michigan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 362), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3563) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Rhode Island, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 363), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RUBEY, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7795) to appropriate $50,000,000 for the purchase of seed, grain, and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of this act, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 364), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KETTNER: A bill (H. R. 10587) granting to the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation, for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DOUGHTON: A bill (H. R. 10588) authorizing the Postmaster General to cancel or readjust the terms of star-route and screen-wagon contracts; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SABATH: A bill (H. R. 10589) to make valid certain certificates of naturalization; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 10590) to provide for a determination of heirship in cases of deceased members of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians, in Oklahoma, conferring jurisdiction upon district courts to partition lands belonging to full-blood heirs of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 10591) to regulate and license the business of selling pianos, jewelry, furniture, clothing, and other commodities on installments; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 10592) authorizing the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming national forest; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 10593) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clarks Fork River at or near the village of Clarks Fork, Bonner County, State of Idaho; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DRANE: A bill (H. R. 10594) to safeguard cargo-laden vessels of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HADLEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 262) relating to the establishment of an international memorial day; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the investigation into the situation confronting dairy farmers and to take the necessary steps to remedy same; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial relating to the privilege of sending mail without payment of postage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CARY: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to the privilege of sending mail without the payment of postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to excess profits and war revenues; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 10595) granting an increase of pension to George W. Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10596) granting an increase of pension to George D. McKinney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOOHER: A bill (H. R. 10597) granting an increase of pension to Edward M. Hayhurst; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 10598) for the relief of Mathew Horrigan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 10599) granting a pension to Joseph R. Cook; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 10600) granting an increase of pension to R. P. Leach; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, memorial of Pennsylvania State Chamber of Commerce, relative to the payment of excess-profit taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 9, 1918.

(Legislative day of Friday, March 8, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Overman	Thomas
Culberson	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Tillman
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Saulsbury	Townsend
Dillingham	Kenyon	Sheppard	Trammell
Fletcher	Knox	Sherman	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	Martin	Smoot	Warren
Gallinger	New	Stone	Watson
Harding	Nugent	Swanson	Williams

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absense of my colleague [Mr. BAIRD].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-two Senators have answered to their names. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators and Mr. GERRY, Mr. HALE, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, and Mr. UNDERWOOD answered to their names when called.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. COLT, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. KIRBY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. MCNARY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent by reason of illness.

Mr. STERLING, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. BORAH, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. MCKELLAR entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the senor Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is detained by illness, and that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

FUEL ORDER AND BUNKERING OF SHIPS—CORRECTION.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, through some error a number of newspapers have misquoted me with regard to a matter which I desire to have corrected. I know they did not do so intentionally and that they will be generous enough to give the correction that I am about to make all reasonable publicity. The same error occurs in a number of papers, possibly because the accounts may have emanated from the same source. I read:

"I am sorry that Dr. Garfield gave out that statement, because it is not true."

He added—

Says this article—

that Shipping Board figures showed that 56 less ships were released than under normal conditions.

I saw this language, or practically this language, in several newspapers, and concluded that I might have said something that I did not intend to say; but I have the official report of my remarks in my hand, and I will read what I did say:

I am sorry to say what I am going to say now. Dr. Garfield published an excuse. A hard case sometimes makes hard excuses. He said, in good, set terms: "As a result of the fuelless days, 480 ships have been released from American harbors."

I went and got the figures, and I got the figures right. I got them from the Shipping Board. Within the period of time he named there had been a net reduction in the ships in all American ports of just 56.

So instead of saying that 56 less ships were released than under normal conditions, what I said was that the number of ships in the ports had been reduced by 56, which means that 56 more ships did leave the ports than were in the ports at the time the order took effect.

I want that correction made, because it ought to be made in justice to Dr. Garfield as well as myself, and in justice to the facts.

REGISTRATION OF ALIENS FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate, in the presence of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who is now acting as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to Senate joint resolution 136. That resolution provides for such amendments to the law as will enable the Government in a proper way to enforce certain treaties between this Government and other governments with respect to the enrollment and drafting of their respective subjects or citizens into the military service. The joint resolution comes more directly from the War Department and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I think it was a proper reference, but inasmuch as the Committee on Foreign Relations is now considering some of the very treaties involved, and will doubtless have others in the immediate future, I had intended to ask the Senator from Florida to allow the joint resolution to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations and to be studied by that committee in connection with the treaties themselves now pending before that committee. But upon talking with him I think every end worth while will be subserved by his statement to me that he would not call up the joint resolution for the action of the Senate until ample opportunity had been given to the Committee on Foreign Relations to go over the entire subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there can be no possible conflict, because I think the joint resolution contemplates conforming entirely to any existing treaty or any that may be afterwards entered into. I think the best course would be to allow the joint resolution to remain on the calendar. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs. But the Committee on Foreign Relations will take the joint resolution, of course, and present it and consider it in any way they feel inclined. We shall just delay action upon it until that committee shall have had ample opportunity to thoroughly examine it.

Mr. STONE. Of course, I have not the remotest idea that there will be any conflict between the two committees; on the contrary, an easy agreement between them on any point; but what I had in mind to do, and to which the Senator consented, as I understood and as he now says, was that no action would be attempted on the joint resolution until the Committee on Foreign Relations had had ample opportunity to examine it in connection with the treaties themselves pending before that committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. That course is entirely agreeable, Mr. President. I did not mean to intimate that there was any possibility of a conflict between the committees. What I meant to say was that there is no conflict between this joint resolution and any treaty that might be reported by the committee or had already been reported by the committee. With the understanding the Senator from Missouri has mentioned, I shall not press the joint resolution until he is prepared to have it considered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3471) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowances to enlisted men of the Army of the United States, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9352. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10477. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. WEBB, Mr. CARLIN, and Mr. VOLSTEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7998) granting the consent of Congress to the village of East Dundee and the village of West Dundee to construct a bridge across the Fox River, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PAGE presented the petition of J. B. Silver and sundry other citizens of Greensboro Bend, Vt., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented resolutions of the State Grange of New Jersey, remonstrating against the repeal of the tax on oleomargarine, favoring improved rural mail service, urging the necessity for Federal aid in the farm-labor problem, and for an appropriation for the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River between Philadelphia and Camden, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MCNARY (for Mr. CHAMBERLAIN) presented a memorial of the congregation of the Mount Tabor Presbyterian Church, of Portland, Oreg., remonstrating against the further use of grain and fuel in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors during the war, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Merchants' Association, of San Diego, Cal., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 4056) granting an increase of pension to Amos B. Horton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOLLIS:

A bill (S. 4057) for the relief of the legal representatives of George W. Soule; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 4058) granting a pension to Florence M. Anderson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4059) granting a pension to Jonora Legg (with accompany papers); and

A bill (S. 4060) granting a pension to Naomi Buck (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 4061) granting a pension to Ellen Merritt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4062) to authorize the exchange of certain lands within the Wasatch National Forest, Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4063) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4064) granting authority, on certain conditions, to the Secretary of the Navy to reinstate George L. Davis in the Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 4065) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Wise;

A bill (S. 4066) granting a pension to James D. Ash; and

A bill (S. 4067) granting a pension to John B. Moore; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4068) for the relief of Ella Oliver Richardson and Edmund Richardson, of New Orleans, La.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment providing for the fulfilling of treaties with the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, Oklahoma, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RAILROAD CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I submit the report of the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill 3752, known as the railroad-control bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will have it printed and go over, I presume.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I merely ask to have it printed and go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"That the President, having in time of war taken over the possession, use, control, and operation (called herein Federal control) of certain railroads and systems of transportation (called herein carriers), is hereby authorized to agree with and to guarantee to any such carrier making operating returns to the Interstate Commerce Commission, that during the period of such Federal control it shall receive as just compensation an annual sum, payable from time to time in reasonable installments, for each year and pro rata for any fractional year of such Federal control, not exceeding a sum equivalent as nearly as may be to its average annual railway operating income for the three years ended June 30, 1917. That any railway operating income accruing during the period of Federal control in excess of such just compensation shall remain the property of the United States. In the computation of such income, debits and credits arising from the accounts called in the monthly reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission equipment rents and joint facility rents shall be included, but debits and credits arising from the operation of such street electric passenger railways, including railways commonly called interurbans, as are at the time of the agreement not under Federal control, shall be excluded. If any lines were acquired by, leased to, or consolidated with such railroad or system between July 1, 1914, and December 31, 1917, both inclusive, and separate operating returns to the Interstate Commerce Commission were not made for such lines after such acquisition, lease, or consolidation, there shall (before the average is computed) be added to the total railway operating income of such railroad or system for the three years ended June 30, 1917, the total railway operating income of the lines so acquired, leased, or consolidated, for the period beginning July 1, 1914, and ending on the date of such acquisition, lease, or consolidation, or on December 31, 1917, whichever is the earlier. The average annual railway operating income shall be ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission and certified by it to the President. Its certificate shall, for the purpose of such agreement, be taken as conclusive of the amount of such average annual railway operating income.

"Every such agreement shall provide that any Federal taxes under the act of October 3, 1917, or acts in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, commonly called war taxes, assessed for the period of Federal control beginning January 1, 1918, or any part of such period, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds, or shall be charged against or deducted from the just compensation; that other taxes assessed under Federal or any other governmental authority for the period of Federal control or any part thereof, either on the property used under such Federal control or on the right to operate as a carrier, or on the revenues or any part thereof derived from operation (not including, however, assessments for public improvements or taxes assessed on property under construction, and chargeable under the classification of the Interstate Commerce Commission to investment in road and equipment), shall be paid out of revenues derived from railway operations while under Federal control; that all taxes assessed under Federal or any other governmental authority for the period prior to January 1, 1918, whenever levied or payable, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds, or shall be charged against or deducted from the just compensation.

"Every such agreement shall also contain adequate and appropriate provisions for the maintenance, repair, renewals, and depreciation of the property, for the creation of any reserves or reserve funds found necessary in connection therewith, and for such accounting and adjustments of charges and payments, both during and at the end of Federal control as may be requisite in order that the property of each carrier may be returned to it in susbtantially as good repair and in substantially as complete equipment as it was in at the beginning of Federal control, and also that the United States may, by deductions from the just compensations or by other proper means and charges, be reimbursed for the cost of any additions, repairs, renewals, and betterments to such property not justly chargeable to the United States; in making such accounting and adjustments, due consideration shall be given to the amounts expended or reserved by each carrier for maintenance, repairs, renewals, and depreciation during the three years ended June 30, 1917, to the condition of the property at the beginning and at the end of Federal control and to any other pertinent facts and circumstances.

"The President is further authorized in such agreement to make all other reasonable provisions, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act or of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, that he may deem necessary or proper for such Federal control or for the determination of the mutual rights and obligations of the parties to the agreement arising from or out of such Federal control.

"If the President shall find that the condition of any carrier was during all or a substantial portion of the period of three years ended June 30, 1917, because of nonoperation, receivership, or where recent expenditures for additions or improvements or equipment were not fully reflected in the operating railway income of said three years or a substantial portion thereof, or because of any undeveloped or abnormal conditions, so exceptional as to make the basis of earnings hereinabove provided for plainly inequitable as a fair measure of just compensation, then the President may make with the carrier such agreement for such amount as just compensation as under the circumstances of the particular case he shall find just.

"That every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company, and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads of which the President has taken the possession, use, and control, or which connects with such railroads and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within 'Federal control,' as herein defined, and necessary for the prosecution of the war, and shall be entitled to the benefit of all the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as including any street or interurban electric railway which has as its principal source of operating revenue urban, suburban, or interurban passenger traffic, or sale of power, heat and light, or both.

"The agreement shall also provide that the carrier shall accept all the terms and conditions of this act and any regulation or order made by or through the President under authority of this act or of that portion of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, which authorizes the President in time of war to take possession, assume control, and utilize systems of transportation.

"SEC. 2. That if no such agreement is made, or pending the execution of an agreement, the President may nevertheless pay to any carrier while under Federal control an annual amount, payable in reasonable installments, not exceeding 90 per cent of the estimated annual amount of just compensation, remitting such carrier, in case where no agreement is made, to its legal rights for any balance claimed to the remedies provided in section 3 hereof. Any amount thereafter found due such carrier above the amount paid shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The acceptance of any benefits under this section shall constitute an acceptance by the carrier of all the provisions of this act and shall obligate the carrier to pay to the United States, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from a date or dates fixed in proceedings under section 3, the amount by which the sums received under this section exceed the sum found due in such proceedings.

"SEC. 3. That all claims for just compensation not adjusted (as provided in section 1) shall, on the application of the President or of any carrier, be submitted to boards, each consisting of three referees to be appointed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, members of which and the official force thereof being eligible for service on such boards without additional compensation. Such boards of referees are hereby authorized to summon witnesses, require the production of records, books, correspondence, documents, memoranda, and other papers, view properties, administer oaths, and may hold hearings in Washington and elsewhere, as their duties and the convenience of the parties may require. In case of disobedience to a subpœna the board may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and such court within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, corporation, partnership, or association, issue an order requiring appearance before the board, or the production of documentary evidence if so ordered, or the giving of evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Such cases may be heard separately or together or by classes, by such boards as the Interstate Commerce Commission in the first instance, or any board of referees to which any such cases shall be referred may determine. Said boards shall give full hearings to such carriers and to the United States; shall consider all the facts and circumstances, and shall report as soon as practicable in each case to the President the just compensation, calculated on an annual basis and otherwise in such form as to be convenient and available for the making of such agreement as is authorized in section 1. The President is authorized to enter into an agreement with such carrier for just compensation upon a basis not in excess of that reported by such board, and may include therein provisions similar to those authorized under section 1. Failing such agreement, either the United States or such carrier may file a petition in the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the amount of such just compensation, and in the proceedings in said court the report of said referees shall be prima facie evidence of the amount of just compensation and of the facts therein stated. Proceedings in the Court of Claims under this section shall be given precedence and expedited in every practicable way.

"SEC. 4. That the just compensation that may be determined as hereinbefore provided by agreement or that may be adjudicated by the Court of Claims, shall be increased by an amount reckoned at a reasonable rate per centum to be fixed by the President upon the cost of any additions and betterments, less retirements, and upon the cost of road extensions to the property of such carrier made by such carrier with the approval of or by order of the President while such property is under Federal control.

"SEC. 5. That no carrier while under Federal control shall, without the prior approval of the President, declare or pay any dividend in excess of its regular rate of dividends during the three years ended June 30, 1917: Provided, however, That such carriers as have paid no regular dividends or no dividends during said period may, with the prior approval of the President, pay dividends at such rate as the President may determine.

"SEC. 6. That the sum of $500,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which, together with any funds available from any operating income of said carriers, may be used by the President as a revolving fund for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Federal control, and so far as necessary the amount of just compensation, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment, such terminals, motive power, cars, and equipment to be used and accounted for as the President may direct and to be disposed of as Congress may hereafter by law provide.

"The President may also make or order any carrier to make any additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other equipment necessary or desirable for war purposes or in the public interest on or in connection with the property of any carrier. He may from said revolving fund advance to such carrier all or any part of the expense of such additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment so ordered and constructed by such carrier or by the President, such advances to be charged against such carrier and to bear interest at such rate and be payable on such terms as may be determined by the President, to the end that the United States may be fully reimbursed for any sums so advanced.

"Any loss claimed by any carrier by reason of any such additions, betterments, or road extensions so ordered and constructed may be determined by agreement between the President and such carrier; failing such agreement the amount of such loss shall be ascertained as provided in section 3 hereof.

"From said revolving fund the President may expend such an amount as he may deem necessary or desirable for the utilization and operation of canals, or for the purchase, construction, or utilization and operation of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways, and may in the operation and use of such facilities create or employ such agencies and enter into such contracts and agreements as he shall deem in the public interest.

"SEC. 7. That for the purpose of providing funds requisite for maturing obligations or for other legal and proper expenditures, or for reorganizing railroads in receivership, carriers may, during the period of Federal control, issue such bonds, notes, equipment trust certificates, stock, and other forms of securities, secured or unsecured by mortgage, as the President may first approve as consistent with the public interest. The President may, out of the revolving fund created by this act, purchase for the United States all or any part of such securities at prices not exceeding par, and may sell such securities whenever in his judgment it is desirable at prices not less than the cost thereof. Any securities so purchased shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, under the direction of the President, represent the United States in all matters in connection therewith in the same manner as a private holder thereof. The President shall each year as soon as practicable after January 1, cause a detailed report to be submitted to the Congress of all receipts and expenditures made under this section and section 6 during the preceding calendar year.

"SEC. 8. That the President may execute any of the powers herein and heretofore granted him with relation to Federal control through such agencies as he may determine, and may fix the reasonable compensation for the performance of services in connection therewith, and may avail himself of the advice, assistance, and cooperation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the members and employees thereof, and may also call upon any department, commission, or board of the Government for such services as he may deem expedient. But no such official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such services except as now permitted by law.

"SEC. 9. That the provisions of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, shall remain in force and effect except as expressly modified and restricted by this act; and the President, in addition to the powers conferred by this act, shall have and is hereby given such other and further powers necessary or appropriate to give effect to the powers herein and heretofore conferred. The provisions of this act shall also apply to any carriers to which Federal control may be hereafter extended.

"SEC. 10. That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President. Actions at law or suits in equity may be brought by and against such carriers and judgments rendered as now provided by law; and in any action at law or suit in equity against the carrier, no defense shall be made thereto upon the ground that the carrier is an instrumentality or agency of the Federal Government. Nor shall any such carrier be entitled to have transferred to a Federal court any action heretofore or hereafter instituted by or against it, which action was not so transferable prior to the Federal control of such carrier; and any action which has heretofore been so transferred because of such Federal control or of any act of Congress or official order or proclamation relating thereto shall upon motion of either party be retransferred to the court in which it was originally instituted. But no process, mesne or final, shall be levied against any property under such Federal control.

"That during the period of Federal control, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires, the President may initiate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices by filing the same with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall not be suspended by the commission pending final determination.

"Said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be reasonable and just and shall take effect at such time and upon such notice as he may direct, but the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon complaint, enter upon a hearing concerning the justness and reasonableness of so much of any order of the President as establishes or changes any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any carrier under Federal control, and may consider all the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the making of the same. In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices, or changes therein, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall give due consideration to the fact that the transportation systems are being operated under a unified and coordinated national control and not in competition.

"After full hearing the commission may make such findings and orders as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce as amended, and said findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act: Provided, however, That when the President shall find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control and operation fairly chargeable to railway operating expenses, and also to pay railway tax accruals other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers, operating as a unit, it is necessary to increase the railway operating revenues, the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make.

"SEC. 11. That every person or corporation, whether carrier or shipper, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by a carrier or shipper, or other person, who shall knowingly violate or fail to observe any of the provisions of this act, or shall knowingly interfere with or impede the possession, use, operation, or control of any railroad property, railroad, or transportation system hitherto or hereafter taken over by the President, or shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of any order or regulation made in pursuance of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or, if a person, by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both. Each independent transaction constituting a violation of, or a failure to observe, any of the provisions of this act, or any order entered in pursuance hereof, shall constitute a separate offense. For the taking or conversion to his own use or the embezzlement of money or property derived from or used in connection with the possession, use, or operation of said railroads or transportation systems, the criminal statutes of the United States, as well as the criminal statutes of the various States where applicable, shall apply to all officers, agents, and employees engaged in said railroad and transportation service, while the same is under Federal control, to the same extent as to persons employed in the regular service of the United States. Prosecutions for violations of this act or of any order entered hereunder shall be in the district courts of the United States, under the direction of the Attorney General, in accordance with the procedure for the collection and imposing of fines and penalties now existing in said courts.

"SEC. 12. That moneys and other property derived from the operation of the carriers during Federal control are hereby declared to be the property of the United States. Unless otherwise directed by the President, such moneys shall not be covered into the Treasury, but such moneys and property shall remain in the custody of the same officers, and the accounting thereof shall be in the same manner and form as before Federal control. Disbursements therefrom shall, without further appropriation, be made in the same manner as before Federal control and for such purposes as under the Interstate Commerce Commission classification of accounts in force on December 27, 1917, are chargeable to operating expenses or to railway tax accruals and for such other purposes in connection with Federal control as the President may direct, except that taxes under Titles 1 and 2 of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1917, or any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds. If Federal control begins or ends during the tax year for which any taxes so chargeable to railway tax accruals are assessed, the taxes for such year shall be apportioned to the date of the beginning or ending of such Federal control, and disbursements shall be made only for that portion of such taxes as is due for the part of such tax year which falls within the period of Federal control.

"At such periods as the President may direct, the books shall be closed and the balance of revenues over disbursements shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revolving fund created by this act. If such revenues are insufficient to meet such disbursements, the deficit shall be paid out of such revolving fund in such manner as the President may direct.

"SEC. 13. That all pending cases in the courts of the United States affecting railroads or other transportation systems brought under the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, including the commodities clause, so called, or under the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, approved July 2, 1890, and amendments thereto, shall proceed to final determination as soon as may be, as if the United States had not assumed control of transportation systems; but in any such case the court having jurisdiction may, upon the application of the United States, stay execution of final judgment or decree until such time as it shall deem proper.

"SEC. 14. That the Federal control of railroads and transportation systems herein and heretofore provided for shall continue for and during the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter, which shall not exceed one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace: Provided, however, That the President may, prior to July 1, 1918, relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation, further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable; and the President may at any time during the period of Federal control agree with the owners thereof to relinquish all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation. The President may relinquish all railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control at any time he shall deem such action needful or desirable. No right to compensation shall accrue to such owners from and after the date of relinquishment for the property so relinquished.

"SEC. 15. That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies, or the issue of stocks and bonds: Provided, however, That no State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, shall levy, assess, or collect an amount of taxes from railroad property within the State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, while under Federal control, in excess of the ratio which the taxes derived from railroad property bore to the total taxes of such State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for the year previous to Federal control.

"SEC. 16. That this act is expressly declared to be emergency legislation enacted to meet conditions growing out of war; and nothing herein is to be construed as expressing or prejudicing the future policy of the Federal Government concerning the ownership, control, or regulation of carriers or the method or basis of the capitalization thereof."

And the House agree to the same.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the unfinished business, House bill 9314, be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, in the item for transportation of diplomatic and consular officers in going to and returning from their posts, in line 20, after the word "State," insert the words "at the rate of not exceeding 10 cents per mile."

Mr. OVERMAN. Inasmuch as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is not here, and he is interested in this amendment, I ask that it be temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the pending amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico," on page 10, line 21, after the word "Mexico," to strike out "$47,500" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905, between the United States and Mexico, $25,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that this amendment be passed over temporarily, because in connection with it I also want to make some remarks in relation to the other international bureaus provided for in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well, let it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be temporarily passed over.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Boundary Line, Alaska and Canada, and the United States and Canada," under the item of appropriation enabling the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, etc., on page 12, line 9, after the word "allowed," to insert "a per diem or," and in line 11, before the words "per day," to strike out "$6" and insert "$8," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That when the commissioner is absent from Washington on official business he shall be allowed a per diem or actual and necessary expenses of subsistence, not in excess of $8 per day.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest that the words "per day" at the end of line 11 be stricken out. As the proviso now stands it gives the commission a per diem of $8 per day.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is a proper amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Institution of Agriculture," on page 14, line 19, to strike out:

For salary of one member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1919, $3,600.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to say that I disagree with the views of the committee upon the amendment striking out the paragraphs, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to by the Senate. The item covers the salary of one member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1919, $3,600. I do not think we ought to discontinue that salary. The American delegate to the International Institute, Mr. David Lubin, is now serving in this work. He is in Rome and is actually engaged in the work. I do not see why we should cut off his salary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Florida tell the Senate precisely what work either this institute or the represenative from this country, Mr. Lubin, is performing in Rome at the present time?

Mr. FLETCHER. They are collecting data—statistics on agricultural subjects—from all portions of the world. Its name signifies the character of the work; it is international in scope. Prior to the war there were 52 nations participating in this institution.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is, the name was international. I will ask the Senator from Florida, further, whether this institute publishes the result of its arduous labors?

Mr. FLETCHER. It does publish them. It makes reports to the various governments that are represented there, including our own. So far as I am informed—and I think I am accurate in the statement—the work is being carried on as completely, as fully, and as energetically as it is possible to do at this time. Of course, there are difficulties now; I recognize that.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are very serious difficulties.

Mr. FLETCHER. But at the same time the work is being continued there, and I think a very considerable and important collection of information, data, and material is being made and sent out by the institute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have had, first and last, a great deal of literature from Mr. David Lubin, and if there is any man in the United States or in Rome who has more vagaries on a great variety of subjects than has Mr. Lubin I have not come across him. It seems to me that Mr. Lubin might very properly be given a furlough, certainly until after the war is over. I do not believe the institute is doing anything that warrants our expending a copper upon it; but it is the fashion nowadays to spend money on everything and everybody. If this is insisted upon, I shall content myself by voting for the amendment of the committee, which saves half of the amount, I believe; and I shall feel that the committee will have done a good work, if we sustain the committee. I should like to wipe it all out.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. KNOX. I hope that this amendment will not prevail. I am quite in sympathy with the suggestion that has been made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] that these sums should be appropriated. I happen to have some personal knowledge of the work of this institute and of the work of Mr. Lubin, through whose efforts it was founded. Mr. Lubin had the conception of internationalism of effort to promote the agriculture of the world, and he presented it to various governments. Finally, it appealed to the imagination of the King of Italy, and this institute has been founded in Italy. Some 40 or 50 governments of the world are contributing to support it and are receiving the benefits of its labors. Its labors are of vast consequence; but they do not appeal to the imagination of those who have not made an investigation of it, because there is nothing for the imagination to operate upon.

However, I had the honor to report for four successive years to Congress the request that these appropriations should be made, and I think we have so committed ourselves to other nations that for the trifling sum involved here the United States ought not to be the Government to break up the harmonious operations of this institute, which has been progressing notwithstanding the war.

I trust that the Senate will put on its liberal glasses in looking at this amendment. The amount is not large and the work is good, not only in quality but it is good in its scope and in its sphere.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania. I have been more or less in close touch with the work in which Mr. Lubin has been engaged; I have been in constant correspondence with him. I get copies of these reports, and I know that they contain very valuable data as to the production of foodstuffs all over the world. This institute is the only international body, I think, that has continued its sessions after the beginning of the war, and, so far as I know, it still continues them. Some of the Governments may not be actively participating, but for a long while after the outbreak of the war they continued right along participating in the work of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome.

The King of Italy erected the building which is the home of the institute. It is a magnificent marble structure, provided entirely by the King of Italy. The collection of this information as to the production of foodstuffs all over the world, their distribution, handling, prices, and all such information, is most valuable. The work is being conducted to-day, and Mr. Lubin is there on the ground and in the building attending to the work, and is one of the active participants. His salary of $3,600 is a mere nominal amount; it really costs him a great deal more than that to maintain himself there, but at the same time it is a recognition of his work, and it seems to me almost absurd to take that salary away from him and to practically call him home. He is there now in Rome engaged in the work.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to vote against any appropriation which really serves the agricultural interests of the different nations of the earth, but I have been getting literature from Mr. Lubin for a number of years, and I frankly say that, with my limited knowledge of agricultural interests, I have been unable to see its application or its benefit. It is a lot of dry statistics, which we could get almost anywhere else, and I should like for the Senator from Florida to state what are the benefits derived from it? In what respect does it conserve or serve the agricultural interests of this country? It may be that, being located in Rome, the center of a great agricultural region, it is of some assistance there; but of what benefit is it, generally speaking, to the agricultural interests? If it has any benefit, I am willing to vote for the appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is material, Mr. President, for us to know and to have accurate data as to where wheat is grown, how much land has been planted in wheat in the different portions of the world in other countries, how much the yield is likely to be, how much it has been up to date, and what are the prospects for the future production of wheat, for instance, merely as an illustration. The same thing is true as to corn, as to oats, as to rye, and as to the various agricultural products that enter into the food of the nations of the earth. Those data are collected. The institute has its resources, its agencies, its organizations for the collection of these data, and it seems to me it is important to the American farmer to know what is being produced in other portions of the earth and what can be depended upon as to the supply of food products, for thereby he can judge as to his own possible prospect in that regard.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator state what instrumentality is used to get this valuable information to the farmer?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is communicated through the International Institute of Agriculture to our Department of Agriculture, to the various governments, and I do not know but that their publications are distributed to the agricultural organizations and the actual producers throughout the country.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, I do not want to take the floor, but I desire to suggest that it has been admirably put by some one in the past that this institute is the clearing house of the agricultural departments of the 40 or 50 different nations who are members of the institute, in the sense that interchangeability of crops is studied and also different questions as to the value of discoveries that crops which are made in one country may be transplanted to another country—a general interchange. The thing is entirely international in character.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Can not all that information be had, and is not all that information to be had, from our Agricultural Department and through our Agricultural Department, which gets consular reports from all over the world?

Mr. KNOX. The only answer I can make to that is that we voluntarily entered into this other arrangement that the information might be gathered in this way, and we have supported it up to this time. My point is that this is not the time, merely for the purpose of saving $3,600, to turn our back upon an orgaaiation in which we are coordinated with other nations.

I suppose the Senator from Idaho is entirely correct that we should be able to get the information through our own Department of Agriculture. How intimately the Department of Agriculture of the United States works with this institute in Rome I am not at this time prepared definitely to inform the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think on that question our Department of Agriculture depends very largely for its information on this institute. Our department is in constant touch with it; but I do not believe our Department of Agriculture has the organization for collecting these data even through the consular reports that this institute has. There are, I will say, 52 nations participating in it. The representatives of these different nations collect and furnish the information to the institute and then it is compiled and distributed through that institute. They have quite a force of people employed in collecting it, and the information is authoritative; it is as accurate as that sort of information can possibly be, I take it, and the institute is recognized as a dependable source for that character of information. Consular agents do not get it as the agents of the institute do, and the consular agents do not, of course, compile the information as does this institute.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield the floor.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, just a word or two. There are a number of organizations known as institutes, commissions, and so forth, for the maintenance of which appropriations have been made for years, and this is one of them. There are certain of these organizations that have passed under my official observation in one way and another, and I have thought that some of them could be dispensed with without detriment to the public service.

Mr. President, concerning this particular organization, I shall not speak as to its value; I think enough has been said about that already by those who are more interested in it than I; but it is in fact an international organization, in which are represented 52 nations, I believe, who contribute to its maintenance and have representatives taking part in its deliberations and its work.

Now, Mr. President, if Congress thinks the institute is not worth while to be continued or, at least, our part in it continued, then we should withdraw from it altogether; but I submit that that might possibly be done in a different and better way, in a more respectful way, considering the fact that we are dealing with a question wherein so many other nations are concerned.

I told the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that I would take but a minute or two, and that is all I am going to take; I am practically, through, but I want to add this, if I may. Eight thousand dollars are appropriated that the United States may bear its share of the expenses of the institute. That concerns the general expenses of the institute, but if we have no representative in the institute then we are practically no part of it. Then $5,000 is appropriated to pay for publishing the reports of the institute, and that is a matter I believe the Senate ought to have some information about. Those reports are not ordinarily printed in English. Contributions are made by the British Government and the American Government separately to have them printed in English, and except for these contributions they would not appear in English. Now, if we refuse to contribute our share toward the publication of these reports in English, the United States as a whole will be without them unless, as has been stated here in a communication from the State Department on the subject, the generosity of Great Britain should be such as to supply them to our population. That is what the $5,000 is intended to cover.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, some years ago in considering diplomatic and consular appropriations your committee found a number of small items, amounting to $2,000 in one instance, perhaps $3.000 in another, $4,000 in another, $5,000 in another, and $10,000 in another, for commissions of various kinds, to enable them to go abroad, have trips to Europe, and so forth. Those items had crept into the law from time to time under resolutions. We succeeded in repealing about a dozen of them, under which money was appropriated that somebody might be sent to Europe, in the meantime the Senate having forgotten all about them. Many of these commissions did nothing on earth except to take trips. In this bill there are, as will be observed, a number of such items, but we found that many of them were to provide for organizations established by treaty. Your committee was inclined to ask the Senate to repeal them all, but, inasmuch as this particular item grows out of treaty arrangements agreed to among 52 nations, we felt obliged to appropriate some money in order to carry on our share of the work. For example, here is an item for the International Bureau for Publication of Customs Tariffs, $1,500. We need no such publications as that. Here is an appropriation of $2,895 for the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, and another for the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration. Again, on page 12 there is an appropriation for the International Bureau at Brussels for Repression of the African Slave Trade.

These items have been in the law for years and years; every year we have appropriated for these things that amount absolutely to nothing and involve a waste of money. I have called the attention of Senators on the Foreign Relations Committee to this matter and asked that the treaties be abrogated in this respect.

Take the International Institute of Agriculture, which is now under consideration. It seems that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] thinks we have recommended the striking out of the entire appropriation, but we have not. The total appropriation was $16,000. We have looked into this matter, and I have yet to find anybody who has ever seen the reports of the institute except, I believe, the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who said that he had seen something of them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not say I had seen "something of them"; I have seen them once a month, for they are issued monthly, and I do not know but that they may have a bulletin that is issued weekly. I receive and read the reports regularly, and have been receiving them for years, as I know the Agricultural Department has.

Mr. OVERMAN. As to the statistics they are furnishing concerning the amount of wheat and the amount of corn grown in various countries, I will say that we have every facility for gathering that information through our consular agents. Our consular agents are submitting reports on such questions all the time to the State Department, and they go, of course, to the Agricultural Department and other departments.

Your committee felt obliged to make an appropriation for our part of the quota as one of the 52 nations concerned to continue this institute in force. As the Senator says, a building has been erected in Rome, and we have provided an appropriation in this bill of a sum amounting to $8,000 as our proportionate part of the cost of the institute; but during this war—and nearly all the nations of the world are at war—we do not need a man there at a salary of $3,600 a year. He can remain there and get his salary out of the $8,000 appropriated. I do not know whether or not the other nations are paying their quota; I doubt if there is a single one of the nations at war that is contributing a cent. I do not know what becomes of the $8,000, because no report of expenses is submitted by anybody. We do not know how the $8,000 is expended. All we know is that there is a man here getting $3,600 a year; and we have no report from anybody to show how this $5,000 for publications is expended. Therefore, during the war, we thought we would ask the Senate to repeal this part of the appropriation—the salary of $3,600 and the item for publications of $5,000—as in all probability nothing can be done while the war lasts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is true that the King of Italy built a costly building over at Rome for this institute to meet in, and it is true that in the past we have been appropriating some $8,000 per annum for the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture. I do not think the support of that institution is as expensive now as it has been in the past, because most of the 52 nations that are supposed to belong to this institute are out of business entirely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Agriculturally and otherwise.

Mr. SMOOT. They have no one in Rome to represent them, and the expenses must be very small, if any, other than simply to maintain the building. The committee decided not to cut the $8,000, because that is the amount that we have been appropriating since the organization of this institute; but, Mr. President, in my opinion it is not even necessary to appropriate $8,000. It ought to have been cut in two, at least.

As far as the statistics are concerned, Mr. President, I want to say that I can telephone to the Agricultural Department asking the production and the amount of the same covering wheat or any other farm product in any country in the world for the last year or the years before, and I can secure that information from our Agricultural Department in a few moments. It has the reports of the agricultural department of every country in the world, the same as every other country in the world has our reports. They are interchanged; and the information as to the production, as to the cost, as to the quantity, and as to the disposition of all of these farm products can be found to-day in our Agricultural Department.

I have heard from Mr. Lubin many times, but it has not been in the way of a report from this institute. It has been articles prepared by him on reform questions that he himself believed ought to be adopted by all the world. It has cost the Government of the United States thousands and thousands of dollars to print them—not out of this fund of $5,000, but they have been printed as public documents—and I have never had a single, solitary call for one of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Nor have I.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, what did the Senator do with them?

Mr. SMOOT. I read some of them out of curiosity, and then they went into the wastebasket.

The Appropriations Committee decided, Mr. President, to appropriate the $8,000 in order that it may be shown that the Government of the United States is still willing to pay its share of maintaining the building. They did not want the King of Italy to feel that we refused to pay our share of maintaining the building; but, as far as anything else is concerned, while this war lasts, Mr. President, we might just as well throw the money into the ocean.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we not only pay our share of maintaining the building, but the 52 nations that entered into this treaty agreed upon how much money each country should pay, not only to maintain the building but for the officers necessary. Our quota was $8,000. We have provided for that appropriation; but the $3,600 for this man's salary is an additional appropriation outside of the agreement between the nations.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is right. I did not go into the details, because I thought maintaining the building would cover the whole question; but I sincerely hope that the Senate will agree with the committee to strike out this useless appropriation. I know it is a small amount; it is only $3,600; but it is the principle of the thing that I am opposed to.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Then the fact is that we find ourselves in this position: We are willing to appropriate $8,000, which, with the appropriations made by the other nations of the world, will go toward keeping up an institute, and then we refuse to appropriate $3,600 in order that we may have a representative at the institute. It seems to me that it is an illogical proposition. It either ought to go out altogether as a worthless matter, one that we do not need to participate in; or, if it stays in, we ought to keep a representative there to see that the money is honestly expended.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have a great many of these institutions abroad. In fact, all of them—some 8 or 10—are abroad instead of in this country, and we have not a representative at any of them. Here is the International Sanitary Bureau. We have no representative there.

Mr. KNOX. I am not undertaking to defend the International Sanitary Bureau or any of the other divers and sundry bureaus to which the Senator from North Carolina has adverted. I am speaking about the International Institute at Rome. Any arguments that may be leveled at these other institutions, it seem to me, are not necessarily applicable to this. I may cooperate with the Senator from North Carolina in voting out the appropriations that the committee themselves have seen fit to put in for these institutions which they are now characterizing as practically worthless.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as I am concerned, I think the whole appropriation ought to be disagreed to, and that was my proposition to the Committee on Appropriations; but some of the members felt that we ought to appropriate the $8,000, so that it would not appear that we were withdrawing from it entirely without giving any reason. But as long as the war lasts nothing will come from it, and I say now that the good that has come from this institute has been so negligible a quantity in this country that it can not be discovered. As for the $16,600 a year that we have appropriated ever since the institute was begun, I say now that the country would be just as well off if we never had appropriated a dollar in the beginning.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question, since he has referred to several of these commissions and international bureaus.

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the exact meaning of the language used at the bottom of page 12 in the item for the International Prison Commission? I notice that there is an appropriation there of the large sum of $2,550 to maintain what is called in the bill an "adhering member." What kind of a member is an adhering member?

Mr. SMOOT. One that never lets go. [Laughter.]

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the difference between the adhering member and the other members?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He sticks, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. He never lets go.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The ordinary meaning of the word "adhere" is "to stick to."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is to send a man to Europe. It is an appropriation of $2,550 every year to give a man a little trip, and he adheres to this sum of money so that he can go abroad. [Laughter.]

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suppose the word is used there feelingly and intelligently. He is glued onto it probably——

Mr. OVERMAN. He is glued onto it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So that he can not be jarred loose. Is that the purpose of the word?

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator that we struck that out in conference here, and we sent for the Secretary of State, and he came down and said that that, too, was in a treaty; and he thought, inasmuch as it was included in a treaty, that good faith required us to make the appropriation. Since it is provided for in a treaty we thought we would ask the Foreign Relations Committee to give notice that all these commissions should be abolished by treaty.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, when did the Senator discover that it was the duty of the Foreign Relations Committee to give notice of the abrogation of a treaty?

Mr. OVERMAN. I meant to give notice to them that they might consider the question as to how to get rid of these appropriations.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida is again recognized.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course we are not now dealing with the other various and sundry commissions and institutes in this bill to which the Senator from North Carolina has referred. I do not know anything about them, and do not pretend to know anything about them, and do not care anything about them. In the first place, if they are not proper to be taken care of by this bill they ought to go out of the bill; and it is the committee's business to investigate it, and look into it, and see whether they ought to be in here or not. If the committee think that $125 a year is an outrageous appropriation to make for the International Bureau at Brussels, let them cut it out. I have nothing to do with that. Whether it ought to be here at all, I do not pretend to know.

I do know something about the work of the International Institute of Agriculture. I know Mr. Lubin. I have very great admiration for him. I think he is a man of extraordinary vision. He may be in some respects not sound as an economist in the estimation of other people. I do not know about that; but I do know, as one of the things that Mr. Lubin has accomplished over there, that he has made a study of the agricultural conditions and problems in European countries, and as a result of that he came to this country, and he brought to the attention of the people of this country the need of a rural-credits system; and although the farm-loan act is not in strict accordance with his recommendations it was his agitation of that question which very largely pioneered the way and produced that legislation which, I think, is of inestimable value to the farmers of this country. Mr. Lubin worked that out very largely by reason of his connection with the International Institute of Agriculture and his study of the solution of these agricultural problems which the older countries of Europe have made in the past. That is one of the results. I do not undertake to go into all the details of the work of this international institute. This appropriation, however, for the quota of the United States for the support of the institute has nothing to do with his salary. They have an office force. I do not know that the appropriation goes to maintain the building. I do not know about that; but they certainly have an office force, a clerical force, which must be kept up if the work is to go on.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state that the work is going on; and the fact that some nations are not able to participate in it to-day does not lessen the amount which we ought to appropriate to help carry on the expenses of that organization. On the contrary, it may call for increased demands upon those nations which do participate and carry on the work, by reason of the withdrawal of the support of some of those that are unable to participate under present circumstances.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. So that the item of $8,000 has not anything to do with the amendment here. No part of it can go for salary. No part of it ought to be stricken out because of the inability of certain nations to participate to-day. It ought to remain. The salary of the man who goes to Rome and stays there, and, as our representative, carries on that work, it seems to me ought not to be taken away from him.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Is this man, Mr. Lubin, an American citizen?

Mr. FLETCHER. He is an American citizen—a citizen of the State of California.

Mr. POMERENE. How long has he resided in this country?

Mr. FLETCHER. All his life, so far as I know, until he became the permanent American delegate to this institute of agriculture.

Mr. POMERENE. How long ago was that?

Mr. FLETCHER. Why, when this institute was established, some 8 or 10 years ago; and these participations have been under treaties with these countries. The institute was established years ago.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been impressed with the fact that he has more knowledge of agricultural conditions abroad than he has of agricultural conditions in the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. I might go into considerable discussion of that question with the Senator. I do not think so. I think Mr. Lubin has a very splendid idea of conditions here and the problems of agriculture in this country. I may not agree with him fully as to some of his theories and views; but he is a man of extraordinary ability, of extraordinary energy and force. You do not want to underestimate that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if I understood the Senator correctly, he says that Mr. Lubin is the "permanent representative." Is he made a permanent representative by statute?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so. My recollection is that the statute provides for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If he is not, I think the place ought to be passed around. A great many other American citizens would like that junket.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not sure whether the statute provides for that or not. I have not examined the statute recently.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; there is no statute on the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. At any rate, it is immaterial. He is the American delegate there. Whether somebody else can be given his place or not, I do not know. That is immaterial. It makes no difference. He is there on the ground, and it is simply a question of whether or not you want to take away his salary.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I was much struck by the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, when he suggested that that committee ought to take up these treaties. If I may do so without seeming to claim anything that the Senator from North Carolina may desire to retain, I would suggest that if the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill came from the Committee on Foreign Relations there would be an opportunity when these estimates came in to rectify some of the international conditions which surround these items. For one, I think that is where this appropriation bill ought to go. It ought to emanate from the Committee on Foreign Relations. There is not an item in it that does not concern our international affairs. While I think the appropriations are handled with great skill and ability by the Senator from North Carolina and his associates, yet the appropriate place for the bill to originate is with the Committee on Foreign Relations, who can rectify many difficulties that never come to their attention until the time they are presented for our adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 22, to strike out:

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 2, to strike out:

Total, $16,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries and expenses, United States Court for China," on page 15, line 15, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$10 per day for the judge and $5 per day for the district attorney" and insert "$5 per day each," so as to make the clause read:

The judge of the said court and the district attorney shall, when the sessions of the court are held at other cities than Shanghai, receive in addition to their salaries their necessary actual expenses during such sessions, not to exceed $5 per day each, and so much as may be necessary for said purposes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 9, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL HIGH COMMISSION.

To defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States section of the International High Commission, arising in such work and investigations as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KENYON. I was not present at the meeting of the committee when this matter was considered. I should like to ask the chairman just what this International High Commission is. What is it doing? What is the necessity for this appropriation?

Mr. OVERMAN. Some years ago we had an International High Commission which met in this country, as the Senator will remember. Delegates from every South American country met with the representatives of our country here and had discussions. Committee sections were appointed to consider questions that were of great interest to the country and to the world. The commission was gotten up with the idea of making closer relations between this country and our South American countries. This High Commission have resolved that they will hold their next meeting in this country, and it was the understanding of the South American people that we would make an appropriation for the purpose. It may not be expended, but if the commission meet here it ought to be expended, because I think it is very wise to keep up as close a connection with our South American friends as possible.

I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Treasury which gives information.

Mr. KENYON. This is money to be expended in the future?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir; it is to be spent in the future.

Mr. KENYON. We have appropriated in the past for this High Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. We appropriated $50,000 and that was expended four years ago. Every one of the South American countries, I think, was represented at the meeting. As the Senator will remember, I think, it was in session about three weeks.

Mr. KENYON. I remember some trip of some kind by the delegates to the High Commission, I think to South America.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was another mission.

Mr. KENYON. It was not this commission?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is the understanding that if the High Commission is held here this appropriation will be made to defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States. I should like to have the Secretary read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, because it gives all the information the Senator desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter, and before concluding,

Mr. OVERMAN. I think what the Secretary has read is enough to show the purpose of the amendment, and I ask that the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire of the Senator from North Carolina if he thinks an economic millennium will be accomplished by this appropriation of $25,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. This is the report of the Secretary of the Treasury as to what has been done under a former appropriation of $25,000.

Mr. KNOX. I understand that is urged as a reason for making this appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; a part of it. A part of it shows what has been done. The Senator from Iowa asked for information, and I had the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury read.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, I should like to have the last clause which the Secretary was upon the eve of reading when interrupted read to the Senate. It shows the present attitude of the United States in reference to this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read the part indicated, and the entire letter is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, January 22, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: When I appeared before your committee on January 12, 1916, I stated that a favorable recommendation on the appropriation for the International High Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, would not mean a committal to further appropriations, and that a request for any further appropriations would have to be considered on its merits. I am now coming to you with the request for a further appropriation of $25,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919. I make this request in the confident expectation that the important work done and results accomplished by the International High Commission during the present fiscal year will lead your committee to recommend a continuance of the work. The amount asked is so small commensurate with the results to be obtained that I feel that all that it is necessary for me to do is to enumerate these results and to lay before your committee an outline of the plans for future usefulness.

The committee will, I am certain, appreciate the fact that the development of closer relations with Latin America can best be brought about through the cooperation of a number of agencies, each devoting itself to the fostering of community of sentiment and community of standards in the subjects intrusted to its care. Much can be accomplished in bringing about such uniformity of standards without formal international agreements, and the greater part of the work of the international high commission is intended to secure uniformity of fiscal administration and juristic standards through domestic legislation. It is needless for me to say that whenever it becomes evident that the fulfillment of any portion of the program requires formal international agreements the negotiations for such agreements will always be conducted through the regular channels of international intercourse.

The commission has steadily advanced in its task of carrying out the resolutions of the First Pan American Financial Conference held in Washington in May, 1915. Under authorization of Congress given in the act approved February 7, 1916, the United States section of the commission proceeded to Buenos Aires and took part in the first general meeting of the commission held in the Argentine capital April 3 to 12, 1916. A concrete and definite program of action was agreed upon at that meeting, and the organization of the commission for such period as would be necessary to carry out that program was perfected. The work of the entire commission was concentrated in the hands of the executive officials of the United States section—the chairman, vice chairman, and secretary general of the United States section thus becoming the central executive council of the entire commission. My colleagues in this council, the Hon. John Bassett Moore and the Hon. L. S. Rowe, feel with me that the results of our work give ample promise for the realization of the aims of the commission within a reasonable period. Texts of model laws have been distributed throughout Central and South America in careful translation and with authoritative commentary, and these texts are now the subject of study on the part of the national sections and in some cases in the national legislative bodies. Chiefly worthy of attention among these texts will be The Hague rules on bills of exchange as modified at our meeting at Buenos Aires. It is altogether probable that the law of bills of exchange throughout Latin America will be unified on the basis of this modification of The Hague rules.

Another aspect of the work of the commission which has assumed considerable importance, especially during this war period, has been the necessity of fostering international banking arrangements for the purpose of stabilizing international exchange. The embargo on the exportation of gold from the United States, combined with a balance of trade unfavorable to this country, with respect to the larger countries of South America, has led to the decline of the American dollar in those countries. The banking arrangements that have been entered into for the purpose of preventing further depreciation and wherever possible to make the exchange situation normal, have been greatly facilitated by reason of the existence of such international financial agencies as the High Commission.

Another question included in the program of the Pan American Financial Conference, toward which the commission has been able to make a real contribution, has been the reduction of cable rates. Delegates to the conference of 1915 were unanimously agreed that one of the real obstacles to commercial intercourse between the countries of America was the high cable tariff which until recently prevailed. The International High Commission has been instrumental in securing a marked reduction in existing rates.

Again, the convention of 1910 concerning trade-marks is about to be realized in part through the securing of a sufficient number of ratifications. The Cuban Government has just inaugurated the International trade-mark registration bureau at Habana, and this will stimulate the work of the commission in bringing about the corresponding bureau at Rio de Janeiro. Ratification of the patent and copyright conventions of 1910 is being vigorously sought by the central executive council. On the basis of the international statistical classification system agreed upon at the statistical conference of Brussels in 1913 the central executive council has laid before the various sections a plan for the uniformity of classification of merchandise of the American Republics, and it is gratifying to be able to report that within a very short time after the distribution of this plan four countries had accepted it without modification, and a fifth will accept it with certain slight additions, and only these five countries have been heard from as yet.

The mandate given to the United States section by the Congress in the act approved February 7, 1916, is being carried out in an eminently satisfactory manner. Notable advantages will, I am certain, accrue to the people of this country as well as to those of Latin America from the further advancement and completion of this work. Particularly is this the case in view of the fact that the delegates of all the other American Republics saw fit at the meeting at Buenos Aires in April, 1916, to intrust to the officers of the United States section the power and responsibility for the direction of the work of the entire commission.

The results accomplished and the confidence so clearly reposed in the central executive council warrant my hope that your committee will report favorably the bill now under consideration. At no time in our history has the question of removing all obstacles to the development of closer trade relations with the countries of Latin America assumed greater importance, and it would be particularly unfortunate, therefore, if anything were to occur to hamper the work of the International High Commission. The amount asked for is small in view of the character and significance of the work. As to the exact disposition made of the appropriation of $40,000 provided for by the act approved February 7, 1916, the secretary general of the commission, Hon. L. S. Rowe, will be happy to furnish you all details.

I am submitting herewith copy of an article published in the American Journal of International Law, in which I discuss the underlying principles of the work of the commission.

I have the honor to remain, my dear Mr. FLOOD,
Faithfully, yours, W. G. MCADOO.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope I will not be subject to any criticism to the effect that I am trying to oppose this appropriation when I make some observations in regard to it and ask some questions, because I am not opposed to it, as I understand it, although my information in regard to this high commission is somewhat limited. This question, however, arose in my mind from the reading of the amendment as well as the reading of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. Why does the amendment provide that this appropriation is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury? The query at once arises in my mind why the Secretary of the Treasury is selected as the official, first, who shall decide what shall be done, and, second, who shall decide what the money shall be used for and how it shall be expended. It seems to me that the decision as to the activities of this commission, as far as our Government is concerned, ought to be decided by the Secretary of State. This is an international matter entirely, as I understand the work of the commission, and its dealing is entirely and without exception an international consideration.

It strikes me, therefore, that the Secretary of State, if Congress does not wish to determine it in the first instance, should, instead of the Secretary of the Treasury, decide just what investigation shall be made. This high commission can not use any of this money to make any investigation under this amendment except such investigation as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. It says, "arising in such work and investigations as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury." So the Secretary of the Treasury, on the part of the United States Government, shall decide in the first instance what they shall do, and after that the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe just how this money shall be expended. The amount is not large, it is true, but it gives to the Secretary of the Treasury absolute control. He can order that all this money shall be paid to one man whom he selects, for any purpose that he may want. He can decide that this international commission, as far as the United States Government is concerned, shall devote all its energy, use all the funds, for any particular purpose that he may designate.

As I said in the beginning, I do not want to be understood as saying that the Secretary of the Treasury is not competent to do that or that he would not do it well, but we have a Secretary of State, we have a State Department, that deals with international matters and relations with foreign governments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment. It does seem to me, in the first place, it is almost a discourtesy to the Secretary of State to have this provision here so enacted that it will take away from him activities of work that are peculiarly within the scope of his jurisdiction. Now, I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think if the Senator understood the situation he would not press his criticism. The Secretary of the Treasury is the chairman of this Joint International High Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. He ought not to be chairman; it ought to be the Secretary of State.

Mr. FLETCHER. He is the chairman of the American section of the high commission and, of course, he knows precisely the work they are engaged in. He is the only man to direct as to the course that should be pursued in connection with that undertaking.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if that be the case, it only emphasizes, it seems to me, the importance of giving this matter to the Secretary of State. If that is good logic, because the present Secretary of the Treasury happens to be a member of this commission, then in making appropriations for the International Institute of Agriculture we ought to say that the investigations shall be made and the money appropriated as Mr. Lubin may see fit; and when we appropriate money to provide for the embassy in London, we ought to stipulate, if the rule suggested by the Senator from Florida is to be followed, that the money shall be expended as the ambassador shall determine.

Mr. OVERMAN. Perhaps the Senator has forgotten that a great Pan American convention was held here some three or four years ago.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember it.

Mr. OVERMAN. That convention was divided into certain sections having to do with finances, trade regulations, and so forth. Mr. McAdoo was chairman of that convention, and he has been also chairman of the Joint High Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Somebody has got to supervise the expediture of this money, and he being familiar with the matter, was designated. The commission went to South America, with the Secretary of the Treasury at its head, and they held sessions in Buenos Aires and agreed on a certain program. The Secretary of the Treasury was the chairman, and it, therefore, seems to me eminently proper, as he has sustained an intimate connection with the convention which was held in South America and also the one held in Washington, that the expenditure of this money should be placed under his direction.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember when that commission went down there. I may be at fault, and if I am I should like to be corrected; and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who is now facing me, was on that commission. He went with it to South America. I am informed that Mr. Untermyer was also a member of the commission and that he went down there. If because gentlemen were on the commission and know just how this money ought to be used, it should be placed in their control, then we should provide here that a portion of the money, at least, should be expended as the Senator from Florida shall determine, because he knows a good deal about it and can enumerate the social functions which this money was used to defray the expenses of probably better than can the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the Senator from Nebraska charging that any of the money which was spent by this commission was spent in social functions?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not suppose so.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then the Senator ought not to make the charge.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not complaining if it was. I realize that is a great part of this work, and perhaps properly so.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator makes such a statement, he ought to be able to prove it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it goes without proof.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, in that connection, that the Argentine Republic took care of all the expenses of social functions, so far as that matter is concerned. We were invited to hold the convention in Buenos Aires at their expense; so there was not a dollar of that fund used for social purposes. I presume the Senator is not serious about that.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator from Florida does not take seriously the little remark I made about social functions. There were a good many social functions. I suppose they were necessary, as they would have a tendency to draw the nations together.

Mr. FLETCHER. There were two weeks of hard work down there.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt about that. As I said at the beginning, I think this commission, so far as I know about it, is a good thing; but I should like to see it discontinued. If the Senator from Florida had been made chairman of that high commission when it was down there at that meeting—and it would have done well to have done that, not that it did not do well as it was—he would have graced that position and have filled it with ability and honor, but would we have said now in making the appropriation that the money to continue it shall be expended under his direction, or would we say that the activities of that commission, because he has been or is the chairman of it, shall be along the lines that he shall map out and that he shall determine?

Mr. President, we have a regularly recognized mode of dealing with matters of this kind. This is entirely a foreign matter; and it seems to me there ought to be no question but that the Secretary of State should have charge of the activities of the commission so far as the American part of it is concerned. If we are not ourselves going to prescribe how the money shall be used in the appropriation itself, then the Secretary of State is the proper person to determine that.

There is another reason why that is true. The Secretary of the Treasury at the present time—that is, since he was elected president of this high commission, since he made the trip down to South America representing our Government—has been burdened with a great many additional responsibilities which have been placed upon his shoulders. We passed a bill only the other day where in almost every other line there was a clause providing that such and such a thing should be done "under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury." He can not, if he lives for a million years, personally give attention to the duties which it will be incumbent upon him to perform in the next year. Those duties are more important than is this particular duty; they are connected with the war. It will be an impossibility for the Secretary of the Treasury to determine just what the activities of this commission shall be so far as the American Government's part of it is concerned. He will not be able to give it any attention; and I say that without any criticism of him. It is beyond human possibility for him to give the matter any personal attention whatever.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the Secretary of State is not also a pretty busy man and whether he could give any more attention to this matter than could the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. NORRIS. The Secretary of State is pretty busy, Mr. President; but as compared with the burdens which have been placed by law upon the shoulders of the Secretary of the Treasury burdens of the Secretary of State are infinitesimal. He is not in the same class with the Secretary of the Treasury, so far as the burdens imposed upon him by law are concerned.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the Senator from Nebraska must remember that the relations between the nations of the world are now very complicated and that an enormous amount of time and labor is necessary to keep in touch with those nations

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that, but to a great extent, those relations, and what we are doing in reference to them, are by law under the direct supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury—all our finances, all our bonds, all our banking system, all our loans, almost everything, is under the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, in the first place, that there is absolute cooperation among the various departments in reference to the work of the Joint High Commission. They cooperate not only with the State Department but with the Navy Department, particularly with reference to radio communication subjects, in which the different departments are interested; but the main function of it has reference to the financial affairs, commercial affairs, and business relations between these countries. That is the reason why the Secretary of the Treasury, perhaps, is more intimately associated with the work and knows what is being undertaken and personally understands what is to be done, whereas the Secretary of State does not, because he has not been in touch with it. The Secretary of the Treasury has the work thoroughly organized.

One reason I can see why the direction of this work and the expenditure of this money ought to be under the guidance and orders of the Secretary of the Treasury is that more of the work which was outlined at Buenos Aires as the result of the conference there could not be well carried on now, and there has to be some limitation on what was undertaken there because of the inconvenience of getting together and holding conferences and that sort of thing. So that the Secretary of the Treasury has to determine the important things that have to be done and ought to be done, and he is the only man who is really qualified to do that.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if I may put a question to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NORRIS. I would rather the Senator would ask me, but I will offer no objection.

Mr. KENYON. Then I will ask the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well, ask me.

Mr. KENYON. How are the members of the Joint High Commission appointed; who appoints them and what are their terms of office?

Mr. NORRIS. I think they were originally appointed by the President.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, this Joint High Commission was provided for——

Mr. NORRIS. Is the Senator going to answer the question of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. I read from the act approved February 7, 1916, in the Sixty-fourth Congress, entitled "An act to provide for the maintenance of the United States section of the International High Commission." If the Senator desires me to do so I will read from that act.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator can state just who makes the appointment I think that would answer the question.

Mr. OVERMAN. That act begins:

That the appointment of the nine delegates by the Secretary of the Treasury to represent the United States in the proceedings of the International High Commission to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, during the year 1916—

And so forth.

Mr. KENYON. So that they are appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator says they are appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I want to reply briefly to the next objection to this change made by the Senator from Florida. He says that the work of this commission has to do with finance, and he says that really the Secretary of the Treasury is the only man competent to fill this place. From the reading of the letter of the Secretary himself it develops that one of the subjects considered by the commission pertains to patents, which of course is an important matter. If the argument is good that because the commission deals with finance, the Secretary of the Treasury ought to be the man to supervise this expenditure, then, as it deals with patents, the Commissioner of Patents or the Secretary of the Interior, under whose jurisdiction the Commissioner of Patents acts, ought to have something to say about the expenditure. The commission has also to deal with commercial paper in the effort to secure similar laws in relation to it. If that is true, then, according to the argument which has been made, the Attorney General, who knows about such matters and who is a lawyer, ought to be charged with responsibility in this matter. The Secretary of the Treasury is not a lawyer.

So I might go on and take all the other subjects the commission are going to attend to. Every one of them, without exception, will be international in scope; and that brings us right to the door of the Secretary of State. You can not name one thing that the commission has done, or ever will be called on to do, that is not international in character.

I realize, Mr. President, that a motion to change this provision can not prevail, because we have gotten into the habit of doing things according to rules approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I suppose that we will continue to proceed along that line. It seems to me, however, it is a mistake. It seems to me that it is not fair to the Secretary of State; it seems to me we would have a better standing in this international activity if the Secretary of State, he officer of the Government who has charge of foreign matters, were in charge of our part of it. I do not fail to recognize the ability of the Secretary of the Treasury, but I do not agree with the statement of the Senator from Florida that he is the only man in America who is competent to undertake this task. If he is, then the work of this commission will not be successfully carried on, because the Secretary of the Treasury will not be able to give it his personal attention, but will have to act through some one else.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it seems to me that the position which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has taken does not take into consideration the nature of this high commission. It is unquestionable that there has been a desire upon the part of the United States to bring about closer relations with the South American Republics, especially in connection with banking institutions, for the purpose of facilitating commercial relations between those countries and the United States. When the commission went to South America they had that in view, and in their meetings considered the question of adopting a system of branch banks in foreign countries. It is a matter which engaged the Secretary of the Treasury very deeply. In fact, it was of so much importance to him that he spent two months, I think, in visiting the South American countries for the purpose of establishing a financial connection between our banks and the banks of the South American Republics. That is a matter in which he is intensely interested; and to say that any other Cabinet officer would take the interest in this matter that the Secretary of the Treasury would take, it seems to me would not be a correct statement, because the Secretary of the Treasury has already done it. It is a child of his own. He has accomplished great results in it, and it seems to me he has the appointment of these commissioners. He it is who ought to be intrusted with the power to dispose of what should be done and what salaries and compensation should be paid. I do not think there are any salaries connected with it; only the expenses that might be incurred in holding these sessions. For that reason it seems to me eminently proper that the Secretary of the Treasury should be the man to see to the expenditure of this appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Geodetic Association for the Measurement of the Earth," on page 20, after line 12, to strike out:

The duly appointed representative of the United States on the permanent commission of the International Geodetic Association is hereby granted authority to vote with the representatives on the permanent commission from other nations on all matters coming before the association, including the extension of its existence: Provided, That any action of such representative of the United States shall be subject to the approval of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 13, to strike out:

FIFTEENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS AGAINST ALCOHOLISM.

Any unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the Fifteenth International Congress Against Alcoholism are hereby reappropriated and made available until expended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to oppose the amendment made by the committee. I think it is a mistake to cut this out at this time, but those who are interested in the proposition do not desire to involve the Government in any unnecessary expense in these times; so we are willing to allow this matter to go to conference, so that whatever representations may be made on the part of the House that incorporated this provision in the bill can be fully considered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the reason for striking that out was that we could not see how we could have any convention in this country during the next year. That was the only reason why we struck it out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am going just to suggest this: As I understand, this country, upon the invitation of other countries, sent its delegates to an International Congress Against Alcoholism a few years ago. At the conclusion of that congress an invitation was extended upon the part of our Government to these countries to attend an international congress in this country. That invitation was accepted. This was before the war broke out, and we made an appropriation to prepare for this congress. The work was being carried on, and, of course, when the war came on it was not found advisable to hold it; but it is expected that this congress will be held, pursuant to the invitation that we have extended to these countries, when peace conditions come about. As I understand, there is a small amount of money that has been spent simply in making the necessary preparations, probably carrying on some correspondence, and so forth. I understand that very little expenditure is being made at the present time. It has been thought well, and really found necessary by those looking after this matter, to keep a very small organization to hold the matter in shape, so that when peace does come the invitation that has been extended to and accepted by these other countries can be carried out. If this is not continued it will likely cost more to get matters in shape when the congress is to be held, as it will be. As I say, however, those interested in the matter are not disposed to insist upon this provision now if it is thought best to leave it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before we pass by this matter, I want to give notice of reserving for a separate vote in the Senate the amendment, on page 14—the two amendments practically on page 14—under the head of "International Institute of Agriculture." I believe they were both voted on as one.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; as one amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I give notice of reserving that matter for a separate vote in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be recorded by the Secretary. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers," on page 24, line 9, after the word "officers," to strike out "and officers of the United States Court for China" and insert "in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto, including China and the officers at Hongkong, Saigon, Tsingtau, Dairen, and Vladivostok," and in line 14, after the word "assigned," to strike out "$800,000" and insert "$700,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances, during pendency of existing war and for six months after its termination, by way of additional compensation to consular and diplomatic officers in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto, including China and the officers at Hongkong, Saigon, Tsingtau, Dairen, and Vladivostok in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $700,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee for what reason the committee proposes to strike from the House text the words in the ninth and tenth lines, which exclude the judicial officers in China from the possibility of having an allowance made to them by the President, when the consular and diplomatic officers are retained? I know something about the conditions there, and I think it is quite as possible that Judge Lobinger and the various officials, particularly the marshal in China and the various officers, might have additional expense that the President should consider at this time. Frequently there is some clash or other among our representatives in foreign parts. It seems to me the President would know better than anybody else how to harmonize them, and I know of no reason why they should be excluded. I shall be glad if the chairman will kindly inform me why that amendment was made.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is new legislation. These officers get good salaries. The judge gets a good salary. We do not have any post allowances here for ourselves. The cost of living is as high in this country as it is in China, and more so; and why should we provide for these officers, the judge and solicitor and marshal over there, when we do not provide for the judges and solicitors and marshals in this country?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then, if I may ask, Mr. President, why provide for the other officials who are also there?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think they have carried that to an extreme. I do not think it is necessary; but these consular officers, Mr. President, are underpaid. That was the reason. While this judge gets $8,000 a year, these clerks, consular officers, and so forth, get only $1,500 and $2,000, so that there was some reason for allowing the Secretary of State to give them an extra allowance during the war, but we could see no reason for authorizing a judge who gets $8,000 a year to be allowed more money by the Secretary of State. It is a lump sum, and he could allow him $50,000 if he wanted to. Furthermore it is cheaper to live in China than it is here, I understand. But whether that is so or not, we thought that as to those officers whose salaries are fixed, and who are getting the same salaries that similar officers are getting in this country, and even more, we ought not to provide for them, but that we should confine this simply to consular and diplomatic officers.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may say to the chairman of the committee that it used to be very much cheaper to live in China than here. I do not know what the comparison is now. I know the rate of exchange has been very much against us, and in that manner it has decreased the compensation of every one of our employees in China. But I do not think the chairman of the committee answers whether in his opinion it would be improper to entrust to the President the right to make these increases of the judicial officers in China when the same power is granted him with regard to the consular and diplomatic officers. It seems to me that it would be manifestly the proper thing to put all our officials resident in China on the same plane.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the reason why we did that was because the judge there gets $8,000 a year, and we have given him in this bill an extra allowance, which he never had before, of $5 a day for traveling expenses, and we have given the marshal over there $4,000; so they do not really come in the class of these low-paid consular officers. That is the reason why we thought it ought not to apply to them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, of course I do not know why the distinction should be made. It is not a question of Congress appropriating; it is a question of leaving to the Chief Executive the right to determine whether our officials in China are overpaid or underpaid. I do not think a distinction should be made against them; and I have seen enough of the petty jealousies among our officials in foreign parts to think that they ought all to be put on the same plane when it comes to a question of consideration by the State Department or the Executive.

The matter attracted my attention, and I shall vote against the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to state that the salary which is prescribed in this very bill for the judge of the United States Court for China is $2,000 more than the corresponding judge gets in the United States. The district judges, who are of about the same grade as the judge of the United States Court for China, get $6,000 a year. When we allow this man $2,000 extra—and I do not see much reason for allowing that; but, nevertheless, it has been established—it does seem to me that that is a sufficient amount to cover any question of higher amount, when we are not increasing the salaries of the circuit judges or the judges of the district courts of the United States.

For that reason it seems to me that the provision which the committee has recommended should stand.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I only desire to say, in reply to the Senator from Colorado, that the judge of the United States Court for China occupies one of the most eminent positions in the foreign service of the United States. He is located, so far as his main court is concerned, in the greatest port in eastern Asia, which is an international settlement of great importance. He ranks all of the officials we have in China, with the exception of the minister at Peking. He is called upon to maintain a considerable amount of state in going around to his various posts of duty; and it may be realized what that amounts to when we consider that he represents the United States in all judicial proceedings in China in every case where an American citizen is concerned, and that may involve practically his jurisdiction over any one, or as many as he could handle, of the 400,000,000 people in China. No district judge in this country, no circuit judge in this country, has such an immense field of effort as he. I happen to know him personally. He was transferred there from Manila, and is a man of very great ability and of very great industry. I certainly do not think $8,000 is excessive; in fact, I do not think it is enough for the dignity of the position that he there occupies.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to inquire of the Senator from Delaware if the occupant of the bench of this court in China is not a judge of the United States court?

Mr. SAULSBURY. He is the judge of our extraterritorial court for China. That is his title.

Mr. THOMAS. But he is appointed by the State Department, and draws his salary from the United States?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Surely.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to call the Senator's attention to section 1 of Article III of the Constitution—a staid old document which occasionally turns up, either by way of embarrassment or otherwise—which reads as follows:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Does not the Senator think that inasmuch as we are obliged under the Constitution to abstain from diminishing these compensations, there should be morally a similar limitation with regard to increasing the compensation of these judges during their continuance in office?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may say, in reply to the Senator from Colorado, that the United States Court for China is not a constitutional court in the sense that the other courts in this country are, and if he will examine——

Mr. THOMAS. Why——

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator, possibly, had better permit me to refer him to decisions of the United States courts to that effect. He will find several decisions of the United States courts, where writs of habeas corpus or appeals have come to this country from the determination of our extraterritorial courts, to the effect that those courts may be regulated by statute and that many of the provisions of the United States Constitution do not apply to them.

I think the Senator said that the judge for China was appointed by the State Department. I think not. The judge, I think, is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. I imagine, Mr. President, that if we attempted to diminish the salary of this official we would hear a howl from China, and the Constitution would be invoked in his behalf as a prohibition upon our power to diminish his salary. I do not question the decisions to which the Senator refers me; but, at the same time, the judge of that court must be an official of the United States or an official of some other Government. It is an office; it is an inferior court; it is created by law. The appointments are made by the Secretary of State without the necessity of confirmation by the Senate. The jurisdiction of the court is defined by the statutes of the United States; and for the purposes of compensation, independently of other considerations, I do not think any distinction should be made—and certainly not if he is getting the salary we are told by the Senator having charge of the bill—nor should this clause of the bill be applied to any officer, consular or otherwise, who is getting such a salary or anything like it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error about the appointive power. I will not express that too certainly, but I think the President appoints these officials.

Mr. THOMAS. No; the appointment is made by the Secretary of State. I know, because I attempted, unsuccessfully, to get a friend of mine the job. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. Probably the interest shown by the two Senators who have been taking up the time of the Senate just recently is due to the fact that they happened to be in touch with the situation here and not in touch with the situation in Shanghai; but it is not my effort to increase anybody's salary. My inquiry was directed to bringing out the cause for the discrimination in not allowing the President to exercise his discretion with respect to these judicial officers when he was given discretion in regard to the diplomatic and consular officers. Now, I am satisfied that somewhere some opposition arose to treating the highest of our officials at Shanghai—which is the great port of the East, he being recognized as occupying the highest position of any American there—as well as the diplomatic and consular officers; and I believe there is just as much necessity of it.

I shall vote against this provision, and I do not think it ought to be in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that this provision should not be in the bill, but I go further. I do not think the clause should be accepted by the Senate and made a part of this law. I believe—if I am wrong, the Senator having charge of the bill will correct me—that this is new legislation. Now, let us see what it is.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is new legislation. It came over from the House.

Mr. THOMAS (reading)—

To enable the President, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances, during pendency of existing war and for six months after its termination, by way of additional compensation to consular and diplomatic officers and officers of the United States Court for China, in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto, including China and the officers at Hongkong, Saigon, Tsingtau, Dairen, and Vladivostok in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $700,000.

The trifling amount of the appropriation is a matter of little concern to us, but the principle involved in the legislation itself, if I may dignify it as a principle, is extremely dangerous. It is the first appearance of a new appropriation and it will breed similar ones in all appropriation bills, not only at this session but at others, and the precedent once established no man can tell what its ultimate extent will be nor the aggregate amount which the Treasury will be obligated for as a result.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Senator will wait until a vote is had upon the first amendment. They are separate amendments to strike out and to insert. The words in italic form another amendment which will lead to some discussion, and I ask that a vote be taken on the part proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. STONE. Let me get that exactly, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. THOMAS. I have not yielded the floor, but I will yield for the purpose of a vote on this amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to set it right. One Senator desires to be heard on the second amendment, and therefore I ask that a separate vote be taken on the first amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. If there is to be further discussion upon the item now under consideration, I decline to yield the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. I only ask that a vote be taken upon it now.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that this is an amendment to strike out and insert, and that the Senator ought not to ask for a separate vote on the part proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. OVERMAN. They are separate amendments. One is to put back the old law and the other makes the law apply to officers of the United States court in China. It is a different matter, entirely distinct from the other.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for the purpose of a vote on it.

Mr. STONE. I wish to understand distinctly just what vote is to be taken, whether it refers exclusively to the words proposed to be stricken out, namely, "and officers of the United States court for China."

Mr. THOMAS. That is my understanding.

Mr. STONE. If that is as far as the vote is to go, I have nothing to say upon that particular phase of the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason why I suggested that if the Senator wants to be heard as to the matter to be inserted it has no connection whatever with the words stricken out.

Mr. THOMAS. Let the question be put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the question is on the amendment proposed by the committee striking out the words in lines 9 and 10 "and officers of the United States court for China."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after the words just stricken out, to insert "in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto, including China and the officers at Hongkong, Saigon, Tsingtau, Dairen, and Vladivostok."

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate very long. It is a well-known fact that in times like these persons upon fixed salaries are greatly embarrassed in making both ends meet. In times of a shrinking currency, when the value of money is reflected in falling prices, those who enjoy fixed compensation are very happily situated. In times of expanding credit and inflating currency those enjoying fixed compensation are bound to suffer. Hence, those who are officials receiving compensation from the Government very naturally turn to the Government for relief.

The civil service of the United States is so large that if the plea for additional compensation be granted by Congress the addition to our fixed annual expenditures is represented by an enormous amount. It can only be expressed in the hundreds of millions, and while we are expending money by the hundreds of millions and by the billions we nevertheless should avoid as far as possible any added permanent expenditure, which, of course, must come out of the Treasury. We know that the employees of the Government now banded together in unions are asking Congress to increase their salaries, and the reason assigned is the increased cost of living, which makes it difficult for them to survive upon the amount which they now receive for their service.

We owe a duty, Mr. President, or at least I do, to the taxpayers as well as to the tax receivers, and while I sympathize with the movement to which I have referred, I am unable at this time to give it the sanction of my approval. It is for that reason that I am speaking upon this piece of legislation, because I know it will be the entering wedge in the Treasury and will very properly be used as an authority for the additional legislation which is already before us in the shape of bills in committee and which also forms a feature of some of the appropriation bills which will soon come before us.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think I ought to inform the Senator that last year we appropriated for these posts $400,000. They spent $700,000, or $300,000 more than we authorized, and came in for a deficiency of $300,000, and we gave it to them. Now, they come in and want $800,000, and then, when the next deficiency comes, it will be a million, probably. The Senator sees how the thing grows and grows until it will be enormous.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. "We are coming, Father Abraham, 300,000 strong."

Mr. SMOOT. It will be a million strong the next time.

Mr. THOMAS. The next call, as suggested by the Senator from Utah, will be at least a million strong, and I have no reason to believe that the increases will not continue in progressive amounts until the needs of those now holding office may be partially satiated.

Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina reminds me that our annual deficiency bills are growing in amounts so rapidly and so appallingly as to make original appropriations seem comparatively insignificant. The time was when no official dared to expend more money than Congress saw fit to appropriate. In the good old days when it was supposed that the legislative branch controlled the purse and dictated expenditures some reasonable calculation could be made from year to year as to what was necessary for the operation of the Government. We fortified that practice by a statute which forbade the creation of deficiencies. But with that cheerful disregard of statutes and that more than cheerful compliance with custom which requires one to live beyond his means, the limitations which Congress imposes upon appropriations are disregarded with absolute impunity.

The Senator says that last year we appropriated $400,000 for this purpose. The deficiency bill calling for $300,000 more indicates that the department having control of this appropriation spent nearly $2 for every one that it had a right to expend. Hence the attempt to save $80,000 to $100,000 here by inserting $700,000 for this House figure is merely a waste of time and of effort, because when the appropriation is made and the money is drawn from the Treasury the credit which that amount of money carries with it enables the department without any trouble whatever to advance such amounts of money as the beneficiaries think necessary to equalize the difference between what they get.

Mr. President, my salary is $7,500 a year as a Senator. It is practically my entire income. State taxes and national taxes take slightly more than 50 per cent of it. Those I have to pay. I feel the result of the increased cost of living as do many of my brethren, but I wonder if there is a man in the sound of my voice with the moral courage at this time to introduce a bill to increase the salaries of Congressmen.

Some time ago by inadvertence we imposed a tax of 8 per cent upon all incomes of professional men and of the salaried classes in excess of $6,000. Some ingenious gentleman discovered that at the same time we had exempted our salaries from the operation of the law and when Congress met Senators and Representatives fell over each other in breathless haste to secure the repeal of that statute. They were unable to do so, and consequently a very able Commissioner of Internal Revenue so construed the law as to assume that a United States Senator was not a Federal official but a State official, and therefore was not exempted from the operations of the section. But inasmuch as State officers were exempted it was necessary to go a step further and to decide that the exemption did not apply to a man holding a State office, but who was compensated by the United States. With that straddle I suppose we will have to be content and we can certainly go before our constituents and say that while unfortunately we were exempted in the first place we have succeeded in getting the law so juggled as that we are obliged to pay taxes together with our fellow citizens. I am not particularly satisfied with that situation, but I am going to abide by it as a matter of course. I think the salaries of all these gentlemen are exempted from any excess-profit tax to the United States.

The point is that to be just and fair we should enable the President, in his discretion, and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to take care of the whole lot of us, from the Secretary of State down to the official who blackens his boots. They are all in the same boat, financially speaking, including Members of both Houses of Congress.

But the mere statement, Mr. President, of such a suggestion carries with it its own refutation. Inasmuch, however, as the whole is greater than its part, but nevertheless is constituted of its parts, and inasmuch therefore as this section refers to a part of the official service of the United States, why set this precedent?

Mr. President, we are told that work is in great demand everywhere, and the individual who can not get a job and earn his living at the present time is not fit to live. I cheerfully subscribe to that proposition. I think that is the situation. If these ministers and consuls in belligerent countries, including China, can not live upon their salaries, then let them resign, and we will find plenty of anxious individuals who are willing to serve their country in their places and upon the same financial terms that now exist with regard to their compensation.

I do not believe that we should either now or at any other time begin legislation of this sort for anybody. If we had an overflowing Treasury, if, as seems to be the general impression, the United States had more money than it knows what to do with, if it was a vast reservoir of gold which, like the widow's cruse of oil, was incapable of exhaustion, if the more we draw from it the more there would be to draw, if we could smite it, as Moses smote the rock, and make streams gush forth there might perhaps be some reason for an unlimited expenditure of the public money. But unfortunately every dollar which the Treasury of the United States possesses or is to possess must come to it from one of two directions or both. It must either borrow it or it must secure its revenues by taxation.

Mr. President, there are a great many officeholders in this country, perhaps now over 250,000. I do not know how many there are. They are increasing day by day with such rapidity that no computation made for one day is good for the next. But there are 110,000,000 taxpayers, men from whose productive energies are drawn the financial sinews of the Nation. They have got to pay ultimately every dollar that we are appropriating both for the war and for our civil lists.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. It is they, Mr. President, to whom the bills will be presented. It is they who must pay the bills if they are to be paid at all. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to my colleague that I saw a compilation of the number of officers in the United States before the beginning of the war, and the number was 498,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I was very moderate, indeed. There must be now about a million. Certainly the increase of employees must have doubled since the 1st day of April, 1917. For that reason also we should be a little cautious about increasing these salaries, about enabling the President in the exercise of his discretion to take care of our foreign ministers and consuls.

When the Senator interrupted me I was referring to the fact that the great body of taxpayers must meet these bills and ultimately pay them out of their substance. The taxpayers of the United States are a wonderfully patient people. They bear these increasing burdens with a sort of good-natured discontent manifesting itself here and there occasionally. But while he is a very patient animal there is a limit to his patience. Shakespeare said, "Beware the anger of a patient man." I want to say to my colleague and others who are voting away hundreds of thousands and hundreds of millions of dollars, beware the anger of the patient taxpayers of the United States. Sooner or later they are going to review our bills and blue pencil them, and then, if they are dissatisfied, the chances are that the earthquake will occur. The tax eater will take to the woods, and the men who have been legislating in his behalf also.

Mr. President, let us stop these unnecessary expenditures; and by "unnecessary" I mean expenditures which now can be avoided. Let us by all means establish no precedent to justify future appropriations where they can be avoided.

I predict that, if this section becomes a law, next year you will find it in many, if not all, the appropriation bills. Let me go further and say that in all probability our deficiencies will be greater than before, because heads of departments will assume the authority to meet demands like these and charge them to deficiency bills. At the next session afterwards the deficiencies will have to be covered, and, as I said, deficiency bills are now more numerous and far larger than they ought to be.

The reason given in the paragraph for its presence in the bill is that it is in order to adjust official incomes to the ascertained cost of living at the post to which they may be assigned. Mr. President, if the ordinary man knows that there is a fund which is to be used for adjusting the difference between the income and his actual expenses the chances are ten to one that that will encourage the recipient to make that increase as large as his comfort and convenience suggests. For example, if there was a statute giving to the President the power and appropriating money to be used for the purpose to adjust the income of my colleague to the ascertained cost of living at the post to which he is assigned, and that is here in Washington, the chances are that he, like myself and everyone else under similar circumstances, would not be so particular about expenses as now. I know I would not. I have no doubt that the gentlemen in Hongkong and in Saigon and in Vladivostok derive a comfort from this sort of legislation which places but little limit upon their expenditures, and they will send the bills in promptly at the end of the month. If they can do that, then there is not an official unfortunate enough to be compelled to live in Washington who ought not to be provided for in the same way.

We know what the costs of living are here. We know that, every one of us, by our own experiences, and as we see the margin between income and outgo gradually approach a level and the one threatening to overlap the other, we are not only anxious, but angry. We say a great many hard things about those who levy their toll upon us and make a great many threats which, unfortunately, are hard to crystallize into legislation. I have a great deal more sympathy for the $100 a month clerk here in Washington than I have for the consul at Hongkong. I have a great deal more sympathy for the negro janitor in this building upon his modest salary than I have for the ambassador to Russia.

Mr. STONE. Why?

Mr. THOMAS. Because they can take care of themselves better; because they generally have some other sources of income. Just now I would a good deal rather be a bootblack for the Senate than to be a United States ambassador in Petrograd. I had reference entirely to the financial possibilities which distinguished the two officials removed, so far as they are, not only socially but financially, from each other.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any longer. I hope that this clause will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate for a little while to the pending amendment. I have no special interest in this amendment or in any other. It no more concerns me than it does any other Senator, but I think this particular amendment should not be agreed to.

I have listened with interest to the remarks of my friend from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], just concluded. His argument is one we have heard in one way or another frequently through the years I have had the honor to serve in the Senate, although I have rarely, if ever, heard it presented more forcefully or persuasively. Let me say I join no issue in general terms with the Senator from Colorado. But, Mr. President, I ought to say that I have gone over every item in this bill with some of the chief officials of the State Department. Notwithstanding, let it be now understood that there are few Senate amendments that I care to antagonize. There are few things in the bill as reported that I would especially care to change. Taken as a whole, I think the Appropriations Committee have done their work very well. So I have sat here while the bill has been under consideration practically without active participation in the discussions respecting the merits of the various Senate amendments.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] said this morning that he thought the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That also is an old question which has been up and discussed here for years. My own view about that subject in general is—and I have stated it more than once on the floor—that all appropriation bills ought to be concentrated in the hands of one committee, with the possible exception of rivers and harbors, maybe also agriculture, and that wise administration would be better accomplished in that way than by scattering appropriation bills among many committees. That course would prevent duplication and consequent extravagance.

Mr. OVERMAN. And there should be a member of the Foreign Relations Committee on that committee.

Mr. STONE. I think it would be very advisable to have a member of the Foreign Relations Committee on the Appropriations Committee, and likewise members of the Appropriations Committee coming from all the important committees particularly affected by the great appropriations. That has been my attitude in the past, and I do not depart from it now.

I have been a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations for about 10 years and the subject of having this appropriation bill go to that committee has been discussed in the Foreign Relations Committee itself, and I think in the Senate also, time and again; but I for one never seriously sought to take this appropriation bill away from the Committee on Appropriations. However, Mr. President, if the policy now pursued is to be continued—and I hope it will not be—there is no reason why this bill should not go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and many very good reasons could be given why it should go there.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] this morning, in calling attention to a number of practically obsolete conventions, treaties, and international agreements, said that he had asked the committee, or some member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to take the matter up with the State Department or in some other way to get rid of these treaties, conventions, institutes, and so forth, which he regards as useless; but suppose the chairman or subchairman of the Committee on Appropriations did happen to speak to some member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as the Senator has stated, I submit that under present conditions when the Committee on Appropriations has this particular bill under its jurisdiction, it is not improbable that the bill or any part of it would go in any serious way on mere suggestion to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If the Committee on Foreign Relations had control of the bill itself, that committee would give every feature of it close attention; but there is no more reason under the circumstances why the Committee on Appropriations itself should not take such matters up with the State Department or with the President or offer legislation of its own with regard to them, than there is that the Committee on Foreign Relations should undertake to deal with them spasmodically as a junior side partner to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to criticize anybody, but I did say that the matter of consideration of treaties was with the Foreign Relations Committee. We had this matter up a year ago—I do not know whether or not the Senator from Missouri heard the discussion—but I said a year ago, and I say again, that the Committee on Appropriations has nothing to do with the treaty-making power, and that the only way to prevent these appropriations, which we all admit are nonsensical—for really there is absolutely no use for many of them—is by an abrogation of the particular treaties which provide for them. Our committee has nothing to do with the State Department except to consider estimates which are sent down by that department for the appropriation of money.

I did not criticize, nor did I intend to criticize, but I simply desired to call the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to the fact that I, as an individual Senator, thought that this matter ought to be brought to the attention of the State Department or to that of the Committee on Foreign Relations so that something might be done to abrogate or to get rid of those particular treaties.

Mr. STONE. I have been in this body about 16 years, and the same thing has been going on all that time.

Mr. President, if the Committee on Foreign Relations had charge of this bill and the provisions in it appearing here to-day which are criticized were brought under the consideration of that committee directly, the committee would take up all of them singly and collectively, go into the merits of them all, and make its legislative recommendations as to the continuance or the abrogation of them.

Of course the Committee on Foreign Relations can not abrogate a treaty nor give notice to a foreign Government of its intention to do so, nor can the Committee on Appropriations, but a treaty, a convention, an international agreement can be abrogated by legislation. It was not a great while ago that by legislation we abrogated a treaty with Russia.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Committee on Appropriations should bring forward any legislation for the abrogation of a treaty, the Senator from Missouri would, as it would be his duty to do, have such legislation referred to his committee, because that committee would have jurisdiction of it.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I would ask to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, undoubtedly. However, I do not want the Committee on Foreign Relations to be held responsible for sporadic instances or items in bills reported by the Appropriations Committee, such as those concerning some agricultural institute or a sanitary commission. They have nothing to do with it any more than anybody else has to do with it.

Mr. President, I have taken more time now than I had intended altogether. I have spread beyond what I had in mind. I have not so far definitely opposed a single provision in the bill which the Senator from North Carolina has reported, but I now desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina and the Senate to review the action taken on the provision which appears under the head of "Post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers," on page 24 of the bill. An amendment was reported in the text striking out the words "and officers of the United States court for China," and that has been agreed to. I did not oppose that, Mr. President; I said not a word as the arguments pro and con were under way. The arguments in favor of that particular amendment were to me persuasive. I have no more interest in the courts for China than has any other Senator, whatever his view may be about that particular question, whether or not he may be a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. As I see it, the Foreign Relations Committee is not the especial guardian of the people who are holding places abroad any more than they are of others. These officials, like thousands of others, are merely holding public positions. I said nothing about these Chinese court officials while that was being discussed.

But there are two things here now that I ask my friend from North Carolina to recede from, if he will, and allow them to stand as they were written in the House bill. Instead of reducing the appropriation, as it appears in the House bill, from $800,000 to $700,000, I ask that it may stay where it was fixed by the House. I am opposed to that reduction. I am opposed to it because I do not believe that the $800,000 given by the House is excessive in any sense. Mr. President, just a few words about it, and then, so far as I am concerned, the Senate can vote.

I have said that I have gone over all the items of this bill with representatives of the State Department and have discussed many of them with the head of the department. This is the one amendment proposed to the House bill that I especially and strongly feel should not be agreed to. The other proposed amendments I regard as of inferior importance.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] said something about changing the salaries of a consul and a Congressman, and said it well and persuasively. He dwelt on the fact that Congressmen are taxed, that we pay out so much for State and Federal taxes, thus cutting a big hole in our salaries. That is true; but so do the men holding these diplomatic and consular positions. They are as subject to taxes as are Senators and Members of the House. They must make their returns in the same way and must pay in the same way. They must do that or be derelict and subject themselves to penalties. So that argument applies to them in like manner as to us.

Mr. President, the fact is that most of those—not all, perhaps, but very many—I think a considerable majority of those who are serving us in foreign countries—are now subject to most unusual personal expenses; to most unusual exactions upon their salaries. That is the fact. Let me show you. I have here some data furnished by the State Department, which illustrate the enormous increase in the cost of living to our officials serving abroad. In Italy the per cent of increase is 65, in Spain it is 25, in Greece it is 250, in Switzerland it is 97, in Sweden it is 225, in Denmark it is 70, in France it is 57, in the Netherlands it is 60 per cent, and so on.

This certainly shows an enormously increased burden upon the men representing us abroad. Mr. President, let me read just a line or two more:

In Spain and Chile officers suffer a double loss. Not only has the cost of living increased—

I ask Senators who are going to vote upon this question to listen to this. If you have not familiarized yourselves with it, I wish you would listen to it—

Not only has the cost of living increased, but the exchange value of the American dollar has decreased.

Now, listen to this:

On a $10,000 draft from Spain an officer suffers a loss of nearly $2,500. The $5,500 salary of a consular officer in Chile is said to have now a purchasing value of only about $2,500—

Or less than one-half. I could go on and read more, but that is enough. My friend from Iowa, Mr. KENYON, speaking aside sotto voce, tells me that the American ambassador at Paris is paying $50 a cord for wood. That is only another instance——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. I know that a little more than a year ago he was paying $80 a ton for coal.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, we are fair men, and should be just. We have these men employed in our public service in most important capacities, especially at this time, in the various countries of the world.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ought to say, in answer to the Senator from Ohio, that the salaries in many instances have been more than doubled.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator refer to the salaries of ambassadors?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I am not speaking about the ambassadors; I am speaking about the clerks. In consideration of the fact that they have had to pay these high prices for coal and other necessaries, their salaries have been increased. I can give the items in connection with the officers in Paris, if the Senator from Missouri will yield.

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean that the ambassador's salary has been increased?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I do not refer to the ambassador; I am speaking of other diplomatic and consular officers; this does not affect ambassadors.

Mr. STONE. To whom does it apply?

Mr. OVERMAN. It affects all clerks and consular agents. In Paris a clerk at $3,000 was increased——

Mr. STONE. Clerk to what?

Mr. OVERMAN. To the embassy—was increased to $4,400; another one from $3,000 to $3,900; and the clerks in Paris who received $2,000 have been increased to $2,900.

Mr. STONE. In this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; that was under the appropriation in the last bill and in the deficiency bill. The last appropriation in the regular bill for this purpose was $400,000.

Mr. STONE. I know it was; and we want that aggregate sum now increased.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then $300,000 additional was allowed in the deficiency bill, making $700,000 in all, which the department used. The committee now proposes to give the department $700,000, although in the last bill the amount appropriated was $400,000, but the department wants $800,000. We concluded that we would give them just what they had been given in the last year in the regular diplomatic and consular appropriation bill and under the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to be set right if I misunderstood the Senator from North Carolina. The figures he has given, as I understand, refer to clerks in the Diplomatic Service?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir; in the office of the ambassador to France.

Mr. POMERENE. The paragraph which the Senator from Missouri is discussing is one relating to consular and diplomatic officers.

Mr. OVERMAN. The appropriation comes under the heading "Post allowances to diplomatic and consular officers," which means officers under ambassadors and also consular officers.

Mr. STONE. It includes consuls.

Mr. OVERMAN. It includes consuls, but not ambassadors.

Mr. STONE. Now, Mr. President, I wish to conclude. I desire to say that the Diplomatic and Consular Service, upon which these men are engaged at this time, is not exceeded in importance by that upon which any other public officials are employed. I say that at this time especially it is not exceeded in importance by any other.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado said that if some one or another of these officers was not satisfied with his salary he could resign; that there would be others waiting ready to take the job at the salary the incumbent declined. Mr. President, we will not get very far ahead on that line. At this time, in the circumstances of this hour, we can not exchange, we can not swap our experienced diplomatic and consular agents in a day for new and inexperienced men, and hope to have efficiency in the service. You can not put aside an experienced and well-qualified diplomatic or consular agent in an hour during this period of great national peril without danger of resulting consequences. We can not safely say, "If one or another of these—no matter how many—can not live on his salary, let him go and we will get a new, inexperienced man in his place." That would be almost a fatal policy. The men now in service may remain at their posts at a loss out of patriotism; but would that be fair or just to them; and would our Government wish to stand for that sort of thing?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I hope the Senator from Missouri will call attention to the fact, which, I think, has a very decided bearing upon the question, that for the past 12 or 14 years we have encouraged our consular and minor diplomatic officers to take up that line of work as a career. We have placed them under civil service, and it is not the case that they can take a place or leave it, as they may see fit, after they have trained themselves by an examination for the service and have been put into the service and turned their backs on all the other opportunities of life.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to enlarge upon what the Senator has said. The Senator has stated that proposition completely. What the House did was to put $800,000 under the control of the President, to be expended by him in his discretion. This money is put into the hands of the President to meet what? To meet an absolute deficiency, whenever and wherever found, in the compensation of diplomatic and consular officers and to make it possible for them to live. That is what it is for. It is a just provision, and the sum appropriated should be adequate, not inadequate. I think we can trust the President and Secretary of State not to abuse the power to use this money.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what the committee has done—it has put $700,000 in the hands of the President.

Mr. STONE. It has put $700,000 in the hands of the President, but the House of Representatives, which usually is the body—and I say this with all due respect and I hope without intruding upon propriety—said to be the most cheeseparing in appropriations, made the amount $800,000. The House put $800,000 in the bill, which is the amount recommended and officially estimated for as necessary. Why reduce it? Why should we trim and cheesepare in a small way about a matter of this magnitude?

Mr. President, this appropriation for the State Department aggregates about $8,000,000, does it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. About that; yes.

Mr. STONE. About $8,000,000 for the State Department in this great period of stress when the world is at war and when the State Department must deal as it never did before in all history with exigencies of state arising every day and almost every hour of every day. In many ways the State Department is the most important of all in dealing with the tremendous problems of the country and the world at this time. Compare the State Department appropriations with the sums given to other departments to support their activities. It would be like comparing a penny to a dollar.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to be misled. The $8,000,000 covered by this bill is for our agents abroad. The State Department itself is provided for in another bill.

Mr. STONE. How much does this bill carry?

Mr. OVERMAN. About $7,900,000.

Mr. STONE. I said about $8,000,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. But the Senator said it was to provide for the State Department, whereas the State Department itself is provided for in the legislative bill. This is for the service abroad, and the amount appropriated is about $7,900,000.

Mr. STONE. I said it was about $8,000,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill carries $7,900,000 for services rendered by our officers abroad.

Mr. STONE. I am not talking about the service at home; I am talking about the service abroad.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator said the State Department. The State Department itself with all its clerks costs a great deal more.

Mr. STONE. Of course, the salary of the Secretary of State and the salaries of the employees of the State Department are provided for in another bill. I did not have in mind salaries of that kind or salaries of the secret-service agents, or matters of that kind; I had in mind only the great work the State Department is to do with the world at large and with the nations of the world at this time.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Missouri when he makes the statement that it only costs about $8,000,000 under this bill to conduct our Diplomatic and Foreign Service, that practically 50 per cent of that comes back in the way of consular fees—that used to be an accurate percentage—so that it took just about half of the face of the appropriation to run the service.

Mr. STONE. With respect to that the Senator from Pennsylvania, with his experience as Secretary of State, can offhand speak with greater authority than I, and I am glad he has made that contribution. I do not know nor do I suppose he does what the aggregate returns from the fees of consular agents happens to be now.

Mr. KNOX. When the appropriations aggregated about $4,000,000, which was the normal sum prior to the war, returns from consular fees were about $2,000,000, or just about half of the appropriation.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am through. I have said this much in the hope that the appropriation authorized by the House would not be reduced. This is the one item in the bill, I will repeat to my friend from North Carolina, in which I feel that his committee has seriously erred. I urge upon the Senate to let this appropriaton stand as it was fixed by the House.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri has rendered a distinct service to the country by calling attention to this special appropriation; and I join with him in the hope that the $800,000 appropriated by the House bill will be retained in the bill.

The Senate committee has reduced the $800,000 to $700,000. The House committee believed that $800,000 should be spent, and the Senate committee thinks only $700,000 should be spent. I have heard no reason stated that satisfies my mind, at least, why this reduction should be made, except that it is perhaps always a wise thing, or nearly always a wise thing, to reduce appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; the basis upon which the committee acted was that the original appropriation two years ago was $200,000, and then they got a deficiency appropriation of $100,000. The State Department has felt authorized to spend $300,000 more in the way of a deficiency. We have given them that, so that amounts to $700,000. We gave them, therefore, the amount of money they had spent last year, including the amount appropriated and all the deficiencies. That was the basis of our action.

Mr. POMERENE. I am very glad to hear stated the basis for the conclusion reached by the committee; but the expenses of these consular officers continue to mount up. I think everybody must realize, with conditions prevailing as they are in Europe and Asia to-day—and that is where most of these consular officers are serving—the necessity of being very liberal with these men.

It is a fact that the State Department has been encouraging young men to enter this service. I have in mind at the present time a young man who married some six or seven years ago, and he and his wife are in an important city in Great Britain to-day, and through friends I know that they, who are poor in purse and yet a great credit to this country, are not able to make both ends meet; and here we adopt, it seems to me, a penurious policy with reference to this branch of the service.

Some years ago the Consular Service was used as a dumping ground for political hacks. Now, for the most part, the consular officers are high-class young and middle-aged men. They are devoting themselves to this service, and they are doing a real service to the commercial interests of this country, which are growing by leaps and bounds. Of course, they can resign and come home if they are not satisfied with those salaries. Of course, this Government can send men abroad who will serve at the munificent compensation of $1 per year; but I am not willing, as one Senator at least, to adopt a governmental policy the effect of which will be to drive the good, bright, poor young men of this country out of this service.

I think these salaries should be fixed as soon as they reasonably can be fixed; but we are in a period of transition. Any salary that we might attempt to adopt now which was adequate for the present needs might be excessive after peace is restored. I am willing, under the provisions of this paragraph of the bill, to trust the proper administration of this fund to the President and the State Department, and I hope that the House figures will be retained in the bill.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I should feel that I were guilty of lack of appreciation of the value of an important branch of our service with which I happen to have considerable familiarity if I refrained from raising my voice in favor of a more liberal appropriation for the purpose of enabling the President of the United States, as the exigencies of the situation require, to adjust the salaries of our diplomatic and consular officers to the present cost of living in the various countries where they represent us.

I do not believe that the American people realize the character of the talent employed in looking after the interests of this country in foreign lands. It is unfortunately the popular belief that a diplomatic or consular officer goes abroad more for the purpose of enjoying the social life of foreign countries, expanding his own ideas as to life, and having generally a pretty good time. It is unfortunately true that under the rules that prevail between nations we must from time to time assign men to certain points where the labors are not great, but cases of that kind are negligible in this service. All that any Member of the Senate has to do is to glance at the Congressional Directory, beginning on page 361 and ending on page 372, 11 pages of solid printed matter, showing the number of consular and diplomatic officers that we have. They run into hundreds—aye, I believe they run into thousands, not many thousands but surely several thousands—and the locations of the posts of these officers can be ascertained, and you can tell at a glance that many, many hundreds of these men are residing at places in countries and under circumstances that are all but a luxury for them to enjoy.

I had occasion a moment ago to allude to the fact that the Government of the United States a few years ago adopted a new policy in relation to the Consular and Diplomatic Service. The positions in that service had been theretofore let out as rewards for political service. Beginning back in the administration of President McKinley, under Mr. Hay as Secretary of State, the first reform was made in the Consular Service. That reform was that the opportunity should be held out to the bright young men of the United States to specially prepare themselves for consular service; and if they could pass the requisite examination, including the speaking of a foreign language, then the appointment was almost certain; in fact, it was practically certain. Young men, in order to qualify themselves for those positions, took special training at colleges and other schools, and, indeed, schools were established for the express purpose of training young men for this service. That reform finally found lodgment in legislation, and by the acquiescence of the President—from whom, perhaps, we could not constitutionally have taken the right of appointment—that is now the permanent law. Under the Taft administration, by Executive order, the same thing was done for the minor diplomatic officers; so that as the law and the practice stand to-day, no man can enter the Consular or the Diplomatic Service who has not stood a rigid examination, and who has not spent a few of the most valuable years of his life in preparing himself for a special occupation.

Mr. President, let us look at the terms of this bill. It does not appropriate or suggest an appropriation of $700,000 or $800,000 to be divided pro rata or by a certain percentage among the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States. It provides that the President of the United States may use not necessarily all of that sum—although, in my own judgment, I do not believe that the maximum sum named here is at all adequate—but that he may use it, or so much of it as he may find necessary, to adjust the salaries of these men to the actual cost of living in the countries of their posts. Now, what Senator is there here who does not want the salary of a representative of the United States adjusted to the cost to which he is subjected while performing duty for his country?

I join with the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Ohio and other Senators who have expressed themselves upon this subject in the hope that the more liberal provision will remain in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, line 10, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following words: "in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto, including China, and the officers at Hongkong, Saigon, Tsingtau, Dairen, and Vladivostok."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the facts in this particular case. I also wish to call the attention of the Senate to the additional amounts that have already been allowed by the President of the United States to the secretaries in the Diplomatic Service. I point to advances to the secretaries as a class, as showing approximately the rates of increases allowed for all of the other employees in the same service. I do not believe that the charge against the committee that they are niggardly in providing for the salaries of employees of our Diplomatic Service is justified.

A year ago in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill there appeared an item of $200,000 for this purpose. That was what the State Department asked. The House gave what was asked. The Senate did not change it. Before that session of Congress closed, and in the last deficiency bill of the session, the State Department asked for an additional $100,000, and that was appropriated without a question, making a total of $300,000 appropriated for this purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918. Following this bill will be the urgent deficiency bill; and, Senators, there is an item in that bill appropriating $400,000 for this purpose, the amount asked for by the State Department, making for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, a total of $700,000.

Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee have provided for the next fiscal year $700,000 for these allowances. The cost of living is not going to increase during the next year to any considerable amount and it may greatly decrease.

To show Senators just what has happened with the secretaries, I want their attention for just a minute.

There are 14 secretaries of class 1 in the Diplomatic Service. Post allowances were made to nine, amounting to $14,542. For instance, the salary of a secretary of the first class is $3,000; but the secretary at Petrograd was given a post allowance of $3,100, so that his total salary was $6,100. At Copenhagen the post allowance was $1,680; at London, $1,700; at Madrid, $1,000; at Paris, $1,442; at Rome, $1,575; at Stockholm, $2,275; at The Hague, $828.

Senators will notice that there were allowances to 9 of the secretaries and yet there were 14 secretaries in the service. That difference is accounted for by the three secretaries in the department here at Washington, who are not allowed any increase whatever, and one at Mexico City and one at Tokyo.

Take class 2: The salary of a secretary of class 2 is $2,625. We have 16 secretaries of class 2. Eleven of those secretaries were granted post allowances as follows: Buenos Aires, $1,500; Habana, $1,000; at London we have three secretaries, each of whom was allowed $1,200; at Petrograd we have two, and they were allowed $2,500 each; at Rio de Janeiro we have two secretaries, each of whom was allowed $1,500; at Rome, $1,075; at Santiago, $300.

Take class 3: The salary of a secretary of class 3 is $2,000. We have in the service 41 secretaries of class 3. Post allowances were made to 27 of them, and in some cases the allowance was more than the salary—125 per cent more than the salary.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire of the Senator from Utah whether he does not believe that in some cases the actual expenses of the incumbent would be more than doubled under the circumstances?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, it may be in some particular case, but I can not conceive that there are many such.

Mr. KNOX. I can very readily imagine that there are some posts in which the demands of humanity upon a man would almost double his expense. These allowances are not indiscriminately granted. They are not made to men who are occupying positions where there has been no change in the situation. Of course, the Havana case and the Buenos Aires case are in this hemisphere; but everybody knows that the cost of living in the South American countries has increased very much during the last three or four years. I am astonished at the moderation of those post allowances, in view of the situation in Europe.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, allowances have been made in nearly every instance, with the exception of the secretaries in the department here at Washington, at Mexico City, and at Tokio. I want to say to the Senator that the increase in the cost of living here in the District of Columbia, where the secretaries are not granted any post allowance, is almost as great as it is in many of these places in which the allowance has been made.

Take the secretaries of class 4: The salary is $1,500. We have 12 of them, and post allowances have been granted to 7 of them. For instance, at Stockholm the salary was $1,500 and the allowance was $1,775.

Mr. President, the total post allowances for the secretaries alone were $71,526. There are 84 secretaries in the service. There were advances made to only 54; so that, on an average, to each of the secretaries of all four classes who received allowances there was a post allowance made of $1,324.55.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the Senator contend that in spite of those post allowances any of these men have been able to live on the money they have gotten from the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. I should think they would be able to live on the amount they have received from the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I dislike to interrupt the Senator with anything other than a question; but I venture the assertion that even with the post allowances not 10 per cent of the entire number can live on the money they receive from the Government at the posts to which they are assigned. Practically all of them are out of pocket.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I have not heard of any cases of the kind.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I wanted to suggest, along the line of the statement made by the Senator from New York, as illustrating the increase in expense, that I knew a young man who went with the Russian Commission to Petrograd. He took with him a number of suits of clothing. A suit that he probably could buy for $30 here in the United States could have been readily sold in Petrograd for $100 or $150. They were hardly able to get clothing there; hotel bills were increased proportionately; and I do not think even the Senator from Utah will say that he has sufficient knowledge of the details relating to the increase in the cost of living to say that these allowances are abnormally large.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah can say that no one need worry or have any fear but that the advances will be all that are called for. I predict now that whether we put in $700,000 or $800,000 for this item, there will be at least two deficiency bills carrying additional appropriations for this item for the fiscal year 1919. So, Mr. President, why not give what the State Department has asked for the last year for this purpose—$200,000 to begin with, $100,000 in a deficiency appropriation, $400,000 in the bill that we will be considering perhaps this afternoon, making a total to cover everything that they could think of for this purpose of $700,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator think it would be a pretty good idea to readjust the salaries themselves, and do away with the post allowances?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that would be a great deal better than to make a lump-sum appropriation and then have no restriction whatever upon the post allowances that may be made to this man or that man. In my opinion there ought to be a readjustment of the salaries; and I would rather do that than undertake to make these lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. President, I do not know that there is any need of discussing this matter further. Everybody knows that an allowance must be made to these officers; and the committee took the position that they would give them for the coming year every cent that the department has claimed was necessary for the past year.

Mr. President, there is one other reason why we should not increase the appropriation above that amount, and it is this:

If we increase the amount, through urgent deficiency bills, $500,000, as we did for the fiscal year 1918, over and above the amount that was originally appropriated, it will only be an invitation for the head of the State Department—and I do not say that with relation to the Secretary of State, because he knows very little about the details, but with relation to the men who have this matter directly in charge—to spend the money without regard to the appropriation.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KNOX. The man who will have this matter more directly in charge than any other one man is the Director of the Consular Service, Mr. Carr, who has occupied substantially that relation to the department for the last 20 years. I want to say, and I am sure that everyone who has occupied that office would cheerfully say if he had the opportunity, that a more careful and economical officer the Government does not have in any department. He will spend this money as if it were his own and he will spend it with rare judgment and discrimination. The fact is, I discovered while I was in that department as Secretary that I never had enough influence to put anything past Mr. Carr that did not meet his requirements and come up to his standards.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no dispute with the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the splendid qualifications of Mr. Carr. I know him personally. I know he is a splendid gentleman. But, Mr. President, if $700,000 is all that they have required in the last year, and we gave everything asked for, why increase it now? Mr. Carr knows, so does the Secretary of State know, that if there is an absolute necessity for a deficiency they can come to Congress and get it. I know there is a statute against expending more beyond the amount appropriated, but there is not a department of the Government that pays any heed to it whatever. There is not a department of the Government that does not entail deficiencies each year, and they are taken care of not by one deficiency bill but, beginning with the first one that passes, and we have already passed one, until the last deficiency bill that will pass a few days before the closing of this session of Congress.

It was for that reason, Mr. President, that the committee thought they would give the $700,000, and I believe the action of the committee was right.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand the Senator to say the reason is that they would cover it in a deficiency bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not say that. I had reference to what I had stated before the Senator entered the Chamber.

Mr. STONE. I do not believe in deficiencies any more than possible, and I do not believe in the policy of having it said on the floor that if the amount appropriated is not sufficient they would cover it in a deficiency. That is an invitation to a deficiency.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no department of the Government that needs an invitation to create deficiencies. There is not a single one of them that does not already do it. The Senator did not hear what I said before; he was out of the Chamber. I gave the reason and went into the details of this matter showing the amount of increases that have already been made.

Mr. STONE. I do not ask the Senator to repeat it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to repeat it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take occasion to observe that the proposed amendment does not include the matter of appropriation. The question is upon the amendment of the committee.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves to strike out the entire paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 16, to strike out:

ADDITION TO LEGATION BUILDING AT PEKING, CHINA.

For an addition to the chancery building occupied by the American legation at Peking, China, $2,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Whether this amendment is a part of the preceding language from line 5 down I am scarcely prepared to say, and yet in connection with it I wish to call attention to the fact that, in line 8, $60,000 is to be appropriated for the erection of a building at San Salvador and $40,000 for the necessary furniture for the building. The suggestion of $40,000 for furniture in a $60,000 building attracted my eye, and it seemed to me rather startling. Looking into the recommendations of the department, I find that they did not ask for $60,000, and I am sure that $40,000 for the building and $10,000 for the furniture would be sufficient. I do not think the department really asked for more, but the testimony before the committee indicated that some more is necessary. I move to substitute $40,000 for the building and $10,000 for furniture.

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept the amendment, because the language seems to be somewhat involved. I do not know whether they intended that the whole cost should not exceed $60,000. In order to get it into conference and make it as the House intended, I accept the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 8, strike out "$60,000" and insert "$40,000"; on the same page, line 12, strike out "$40,000" and insert "$10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee inserting the matter read after line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now let the amendment passed over be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 20, after the word "State," insert "at the rate of not exceeding 10 cents per mile."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 10, line 21, to strike out "$47,500" and insert "$25,000," under heading "International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we all know that Mexico has been in war for the last four or five years, and yet every Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill during that time has carried an appropriation to enable the commission to continue the work to be performed under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905 between the United States and Mexico.

Mr. President, I know that there is a treaty between the United States and Mexico, as recited in this provision, but the money that has been appropriated for the last four or five years has been paid for salaries and that alone. No work has been done, unless you can call the drawing of a salary work. The border is in no condition to allow the work to proceed, and we are again appropriating money for that very purpose.

I asked how many years it is going to take to find out where the boundary line is between the United States and Mexico? I was answered by one officer in this wise: "Well, the boundary keeps shifting; the river changes its course from one year to another, and every year that the river changes its course the boundary line has to be established." If that be the case, Mr. President, we will never have a boundary line established between the United States and Mexico. It has been suggested that we erect a barbed-wire fence between the two countries and allow that to mark the boundary line, but I suppose the river changes so often that we could not even establish a boundary of that kind.

I am perfectly willing to give this appropriation if Mexico is ready to undertake the work.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator will pardon me, Mexico is ready. President Carranza has appointed a commission, and I understand the commission is now cooperating with our commissioner, Judge Hill, of Tennessee, at El Paso.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that may stand good for 10 days or two weeks. Nobody can tell how soon Mr. Villa will be near the border and drive every Carranza man out of that part of Mexico.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think it would be a good idea to refer the boundary line to Villa?

Mr. SMOOT. I think we would have it settled just as quickly by referring it to him as to keep on appropriating money and appointing officers who draw salaries and do no work.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. From what the Senator said about the testimony of witnesses, I judge that the Rio Grande is continually shifting. Is the Rio Grande the boundary?

Mr. SMOOT. I believe it is the boundary for the greater part of the distance.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the channel shift in that distance?

Mr. SMOOT. As I am told there is but a small portion that does not.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Government representative mean by that that when the Rio Grande is shifted the boundary line between the countries follows the Rio Grande to its new course?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there is an agreement between the two countries to that effect.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is true, will the appropriation have a tendency to stop the shifting of the stream?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that it will keep on shifting as long as we appropriate, and if we stop appropriating the river will remain quiet.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. The difficulty about following the very obvious suggestion is that not long ago it cut itself right through at El Paso and left the best part of El Paso in Mexican territory. That would be Mexican territory under the suggestion the Senator from Texas just made that the river should always be the boundary line.

Mr. SMOOT. I said it had been. I did not say it always would be.

Mr. KNOX. No; the contention of the Government is that it has not always been; and at the time it cut off the best part of El Paso it did not carry the boundary line with it; that the boundary line was just where it had been before, and El Paso was United States territory. That question we arbitrated with rather discouraging results. We selected an arbitrator and Mexico selected an arbitrator, and the two between them selected a third, and we left to the arbitrator the distinct question as to whether the line was here, indicating a place upon the map, or whether it was there, indicating a place upon the map. He decided it was here [indicating], which was not the question left to him at all. So the whole matter is still open, so far as I know.

Mr. THOMAS. I had occasion two or three years ago to examine the circumstances under which the treaty was concluded between this country and Mexico, under which the commission was appointed by which the changes of the river's channel were discussed. River floods frequently create islands or bancos as they are called in Mexico, and the principal question which the commission has been called upon to determine or attempt to determine has been the jurisdiction of the one Republic or the other over these bancos. The creation of the bancos is an opportunity for bandits, and of course the border is infested with criminals of every sort. The difficulty in punishing them is obvious, when crimes are committed in territory which may belong to one of two adjoining countries, but about which there is grave doubt if both claim jurisdiction until the Boundary Commission shall act.

The Senator is correct in his statement that nothing has been done by the commission for some time. I think since the outbreak of disorders in Mexico in 1910—in Mexico it has been practically stationary.

Mr. SMOOT. However, all the money that has been appropriated has been spent.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, we always spend the money that is appropriated, as far as that is concerned. That is a truism. But if it be a fact that the Mexican Government, which we have recognized has appointed the commission there is great need of its doing something at the present time. The Rio Grande River is like the South Platte, of which Artemus Ward once said it was a river of wide circulation and small influence.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mexico, I think, is now making a claim against this Government for a million dollars.

Mr. THOMAS. If Mexico has a claim for only a million dollars we ought to pay it before it gets bigger, because a million amounts to nothing nowadays. The people of my State and the State of New Mexico have much graver claims against both Mexico and the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the claim in your State?

Mr. THOMAS. For interference by this treaty of the right to appropriate the waters of the Rio Grande. The Senator is referring, I think to Elephant Butte Dam, which is not in my State. We have dams, but the adjective which precedes them is not always "elephant." [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. If the Mexican Government has really appointed a commission and they are really going to work, then I shall not move to strike out this provision entirely but will let the $25,000 stand. But I want to say now that most of these other appropriations made on the basis of a treaty ought to go out of the bill, or if they do not go out we ought to appropriate $1 or something like that so that as long as the treaties are in force they will be kept alive; but think of appropriating $1,500 for the international bureau for the publication of customs tariffs, for an international bureau at Brussels for the repression of the African slave trade, and I might go on and enumerate all the others; all just as ridiculous.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think it is about time for Congress to instruct the State Department to cancel these treaties in the method provided by the treaties for their abrogation?

Mr. SMOOT. Congress, I think, can do that. I think it would be well if a bill was introduced by someone to abrogate the specific treaties named. Congress could pass a law the same as Congress did when it abrogated the treaty between the United States and Russia. I really think it ought to be done.

Mr. STONE. That can be done——

Mr. SMOOT. I say it can be done.

Mr. STONE. By congressional enactment; but if a treaty imposes an obligation upon the United States to do a certain thing and the United States refuses to do that thing before the treaty is abrogated, it seems to me the United States is not keeping its faith.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not believe there is any country in the world that would take offense against the United States if we did not make the appropriation for the international bureau at Brussels for the repression of the African slave trade, nor do I think there is any country that would take offense if we failed to appropriate for the international bureau for the publication of customs tariffs, and other items in the bill like those.

Mr. President, I was going to move to strike all these appropriations out and insert the sum of $1, but I think that we have brought this matter now to the attention of Congress, and I hope before another year passes legislation will be passed setting aside the absurd treaties provided for in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not like to let the Senate pass upon this amendment without saying a word. We cut the appropriation down as the House made it under the estimate from $47,000 to $25,000. The Senator from Utah says these people have been doing nothing for years but drawing salaries. The amount appropriated by Congress, the Senator will remember, has been a small amount heretofore—$5,000, $10,000, and $15,000. The report shows that they have surveyed 244 miles on the American side. They could not act with the Mexican commission, although my information is that the Mexican commission has been there all the time representing Mexico, and yet our people would not deal with them because they did not know whom they represented. Carranza now has sent commissioners there, and all the time they are doing work and valuable work. For 244 miles down the river they have made surveys, and they have that mapped, and they are prepared now to go into session with the Mexican commission and try to settle the matter. The Mexicans, of course, will have to survey all of their side I suppose, and it will take some time to settle the question, but the report shows that they have surveyed 244 miles.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is true that they have surveyed two hundred and forty-odd miles, but the first treaty was made in 1884, and since then, with all the appropriations we have made, we have that number of miles surveyed. I think by this time it will all have to be surveyed over again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the amendment that has been reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, strike out lines 20 to 24, and, on page 15, strike out lines 1 to 3, in the following words:

For salary of one member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1919, $3,600;
For the payment of the quota of the United States for the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $5,000;
Total, $16,600.

Mr. STONE. That is the amendment the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] reserved?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the amendment the senior Senator from Florida reserved.

Mr. STONE. I hardly know what to do. Could we have a page go to the room of the Committee on Military Affairs while we go on with something else?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Kellogg	Phelan	Swanson
Colt	Kendrick	Pittman	Thomas
Curtis	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thompson
Dillingham	King	Ransdell	Tillman
Fletcher	Kirby	Reed	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Saulsbury	Trammell
Gallinger	Lewis	Shafroth	Underwood
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Vardaman
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth
Hale	McNary	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Harding	Martin	Smith, Md.	Watson
Hardwick	New	Smith, Mich.	Weeks
Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Smoot	Williams
Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Sterling	Wolcott
Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Stone

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] because of official business, and that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is absent, his absence being occasioned by personal illness.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will state the amendment remaining for concurrence.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out from line 20, on page 14, to line 3, inclusive, on page 15, in the following words:

For salary of one member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1919, $3,600.
For the payment of the quota of the United States for the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $5,000.
Total, $16,600.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate by any further discussion of this matter as far as I am concerned. There are really two amendments embraced in one. We voted on the two together. They could be separated, and perhaps it would be better to separate them, but I would just as soon vote on them together. If one goes out, the other might as well follow. I repeat that I believe it would be a great mistake to cut off this salary to our representative at the International Agricultural Institute in Rome. I think it would be an equally great mistake to fail to appropriate our proportion to the expense of translating the reports into English. I think the committee amendment ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, like the Senator from Florida, I have no disposition to prolong this discussion, but I will venture to suggest that I trust the action taken by the Senate in Committee of the Whole will be adhered to and that the amendment will be concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I have no desire to repeat what I have already said in regard to this matter, but perhaps there are many Senators here who were not present at the time that I spoke, and I will merely advert to the reasons why I think it would be a very great mistake to adopt the amendment as proposed by the committee and strike out these two trifling sums—one amounting to $3,600 and the other amounting to $5,000—in this portion of the bill.

Those who are familiar with the Agricultural Institute at Rome know that it was the conception of a brilliant American citizen—the establishment of a great international institute to perform the functions of an international agricultural clearing house. Of course there are many of us who do not know much about the details of the operation of this institute. It appealed to the King of Italy when it was presented to him, although it had been presented to other Governments. He has shown the greatest personal interest in the workings of the institute. They have erected a splendid building in Rome to house it. Fifty-two nations of the world have cooperated in its maintenance; we among the others. While this bill proposes to continue the appropriation of $8,000 a year to help maintain it, it proposes to withdraw the representative whom the United States has had to represent it in the institute by sriking out the appropriation of $3,600 for his salary. It also proposes to withdraw our contribution made with Great Britain of $10,000 a year to translate the proceedings from the French language to the English language, so that the people of the United States, or those who are interested in the subject, may have access to the proceedings of the institute.

I say to you, Senators, that there are many people who take the keenest interest in the work of this institute. I recall within the last few days reading one of the volumes of H. G. Wells, the modern, brilliant British writer, who has written so eloquently and so clearly upon the war, a most extraordinary encomium of Mr. Lubin, through whose energies, and largely by whose fortune, this institution was established, and who is to-day its beau energes.

I trust Senators will not for the paltry sum of $8,600 allow the United States to turn its back upon those countries with whom it has been cooperating in the past.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and others in expressing the earnest hope that this appropriation will be retained and that Mr. Lubin's salary will be continued. Mr. Lubin conceived the idea of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, an institution the duty of which is to collect agricultural statistics throughout the world, and in that way to give a connected idea of world conditions in agriculture. He is a man of wide vision and comprehensive ability.

This salary will hardly begin to pay his expenses. He is a man of large means, as well as a man of unusual intellectual capacity. He is serving his fellow man at a distinct sacrifice. I do not know of any institution that contributes more materially to the advancement of the world or a feeling of more genuine world brotherhood than this International Institute of Agriculture. I trust that the appropriation will be continued.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think just about 15 or 20 years ago I first talked with Mr. Lubin, and I found out within two or three weeks after I met him that he was a man of no extraordinary ability at all; that he was a man who wanted to figure in the limelight, in which he has figured ever since. If this amendment cuts off the appropriation for Mr. Lubin to represent, or to claim to represent, the United States at Rome in an agricultural institute of some sort I hope it will pass. My own private opinion is that Mr. Lubin furnishes no ability of any description, except a little idealism that amounts to very little.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] says that he is a man of very large means, and all that. I do not know anything about that, but if he is he might volunteer to serve at a dollar a year, like a good many other people of large means without very much ability have already resolved to do and have already engaged themselves for.

I have been watching for a great many years Mr. Lubin's course. The first time that I ever heard of him he came to the Agricultural Committee of the House of Representatives, suggesting that we put a duty on agricultural exports in order to control a great many things. He was so ignorant that he did not know that the Federal Government did not have the power to put a duty upon exports. Then soon after that he suggested a bounty upon agricultural exports. The gentleman from New York, the father of the present Senator from that State [Mr. WADSWORTH], and I had a very careful hearing from Mr. Lubin. Mr. Lubin exploited his two great ideas of rejuvenating the universe, especially on its agricultural side. He did not excite the anticipatory aspirations of either one of us to a very great extent. So far as I am concerned he has not excited mine even yet.

The agricultural institute at Rome is a very important institution and ought to be continued.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was Mr. Lubin's idea.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There ought to be somebody in control and command of it who has practical ideas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Lubin originated the idea of an agricultural institute at Rome.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Texas tells me that Mr. Lubin originated the idea. That I neither deny nor affirm, because the question of an agricultural institute at Rome was very unimportant, provided there was an agricultural institute somewhere. Mr. Lubin preferred to go to Rome and he preferred to have it at Rome.

So far as I know anything about Mr. Lubin, 15 or 20 years ago in the House of Representatives and 3 or 4 years ago, when he came here to Washington and summoned Senators to his room in his apartment down here, amongst whom I was summoned as one, I have never found that Mr. Lubin had ever an approach to a shadow of a shade of an approximation of common sense [laughter], and he has not got it yet, so far as I know.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I want to suggest the fact that Mr. Lubin sent for the Senator from Mississippi as an indication of his unusual ability and knowledge of human nature. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I deny that. That was a mere accidental violation of Lubin's usual performance. [Laughter.] Of course, the fact that the Senator from Mississippi was sent for might have been a tribute to anybody who sent for him on purpose and with the deliberate intent and with a knowledge of what the Senator from Mississippi meant and intended and thought, but Mr. Lubin never even had that much knowledge of the Senator from Mississippi. Of course, he had no knowledge of America, and not much of the world outside. Now he has gone over to Rome——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a moment—at the head of that institute and has sent some very valuable reports back to America, or his institute has sent them. We paid for it all.

He is a man of large means, the Senator from Texas tells me. I never did connect in my mind the idea of intelligence with large means. [Laughter.] Sometimes a man of large means has intelligence, and sometimes a blamed fool has large means [laughter], but I never connected the two ideas together in all my life. I do not think Mr. Lubin is temperamentally or patriotically or otherwise fitted to represent the United States anywhere at any time, from my knowledge of him.

I met him down here at the Raleigh Hotel. He called a meeting there of Senators, of Representatives, and of various other people. I had a very intimate conversation with him. He began to tell me all about what Germany was and what Germany meant. Of course, I knew more in a minute about what Germany was and about what Germany meant, after my course of study over there for a long time, than he knew after his three weeks' travel through the German Empire.

I listened to him very patiently, of course, and very politely and very courteously; but he made the impression upon me at that time of rather being caught with German camouflage. I said nothing about it; I did not prolong the discussion with him; but my private opinion of Mr. Lubin is that he is not worth a snap of the finger to the American Government at any place in the world. He may be worth a dollar a year; and if he is a man of large means and very full of receptivity and very immense idealism, and a few other things of that sort—I will not exhaust the dictionary—if he is all that, let him serve at a dollar a year as a man from the Golden Coast ought to serve the American Republic; but even serving at a dollar a year, let us put somebody else in as the active agent of American agriculture in Europe, and do not let us put Mr. Lubin in, whose original idea was to tax agricultural exports from America and, after that, to put a bounty upon them.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator——

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment. Mr. President, if there is one thing in the world of which I disapprove——

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask what is Mr. Lubin's nationality; and if he is the inventor of Lubin's face powder? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know; but I imagine from what I know of him that he is not the inventor of a face powder. He could have been the inventor of a "faith" powder very naturally from his temperament.

He is a good, honest, straight, square fellow, somewhat of a fanatic about the things he is talking about, a bit of a radical, and all that. He is the sort of a man that one would meet very pleasantly in a hotel room or at a banquet board, but he is of absolutely no utility to anybody anywhere, unless he gets rid of a great many false economic notions that he has. One of them is that he can control the trade of the world by a bounty upon agricultural exports. Of course, a bounty always comes back to plague the farmer at whose expense the bounty is granted. Is he really the inventor of Lubin's face powder?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know; I merely made the inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, he might have needed Lubin's face powder now and then, upon the general principle that people need to save their faces, as the Chinese say, and to camouflage themselves now and then for purposes of disguise.

Mr. Lubin never intended to farm the farmer rather than to farm the farm. He is as far from that as is the Senator from Texas or as I am, and probably farther from it than I am; but, all the same, his general international activities have not, in my opinion, been sufficiently national; they have been largely too international; and I am not putting up right now with any degree of patience with the men who are urging internationalism; I am urging nationalism with all that stands behind it.

Mr. President, I did not intend to make these remarks, and I would not have made them except for the fact that my mind went back to the first time that I ever met Mr. Lubin, when he appeared before the Agricultural Committee of the other House about 30 years ago and made himself absolutely ridiculous in the opinion of the then chairman of the committee, Mr. Wadsworth, who, as I have said, was the father of the present Senator from New York, and in the opinion of, I think, 13 out of the 15 members of that committee at that time by proposing an export duty upon agricultural products. Now, what do you think about a man who has arrived at the age of maturity—and he must then have been about 35 years of age—and who has not sufficient knowledge of American institutions to know that the Federal Government can not put a duty upon exports?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I happen to know the gentleman who has been the subject of the diatribe of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and I have known him during all my life. I would not claim for Mr. David Lubin the perspicacity, or the acumen, or the ability, or the insight, or the logic, or some of the other qualifications or characteristics of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi; but I do say to him and I say to the Senate that David Lubin is a man who has devoted his entire life to philanthropy. It is true he had a very considerable fortune, and that very considerable fortune has been devoted entirely in the endeavor, mistaken though it may be considered by the Senator from Mississippi, to benefit human kind; and Mr. David Lubin to-day is the one man who established the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome.

If there be any virtue or any value in this International Institue of Agriculture, the credit is due to Lubin. Lubin commenced in the face of obstacles that would have deterred any less stout-hearted man; he overcame difficulties that would have rendered the task impossible to any man who was less persevering and less pertinacious. He went forward with unselfishness and devotion to an ideal—however distorted or misplaced the Senator from Mississippi may think it—that was his in relation to the farmers of all the world, until he established by his own unaided efforts the International Institute of Agriculture in the city of Rome. It is true that it is established in the city of Rome, but the United States of America is a part of it, an American is the head of it, and the American who established it and the American who is the head of it is the American who has just been so foully abused upon the floor of the Senate.

If he had done nothing else in the course of his life than to devote it to this one cause of aiding his fellow men, to doing something of good to the farmers of his country and of all the world, as he has done, he would have deserved, if not the praise, at least the silence of those who might not agree with him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield to the Senator; that is, I yield to a question or to any correction that the Senator may desire to make.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I caught the language of the Senator from California, he accuses me of foully abusing Mr. Lubin, and, as I caught——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I will withdraw the adverb.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should further like the Senator from California to withdraw the word "abuse"——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will not, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because I did not abuse Mr. Lubin. I paid a high tribute to him personally as a man of character and honesty.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely took him in his official position and said he was not the man to fill this place.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, on the contrary, the Senator from Mississippi described him as a man without common sense; he described him as a man who had no conception of what he was endeavoring to do. I am not speaking with exactness as to the Senator's language——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But I am speaking of it with substantial accuracy. He described him as camouflaging himself with relation to Germany and German things, unless I misunderstood the language that was employed by the Senator from Mississippi, and I draw but one inference from that sort of language, and that inference, it seems to me, is legitimately covered by the word "abuse."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say that if the imagination of the Senator from California in his general relationship to all questions is to be represented by the degree of his imagination now with regard to what I have said, I leave that to him, and I leave what I have said in the RECORD, and I hope he will leave what he has said in the RECORD, because he has said nothing that at this moment is justified by anything that I have said.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi may rest quite content; I will leave in the RECORD exactly what I have said, exactly as he leaves in the RECORD what he has said, and the RECORD may stand in that regard.

Now, let us see what is suggested here? It is suggested that an appropriation of some $8,000 shall be stricken from a bill which carries $8,000,000, and all this discussion ranges about items involving just $8,000—$8,000 for what is conceded to be a worthy object and what is conceded to be an institution deserving of some sort of consideration at our hands. How small and petty it seems that that $8,000 should be stricken from the bill.

But I want to make plain, Mr. President, that I am not particularly concerned with the appropriation at all; I am concerned as to what was said about a man whom I have known all my life, and who I know does not deserve what has been said about him by the Senator from Mississippi, and I would be wanting indeed—even though it comes from the Senator from Mississippi—if I did not, when I know this man and have known him from my youth and during all my manhood, stand here and say to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate of the United States that David Lubin is a citizen of this country of whom we may well be proud, who represents the highest type that there is of American citizenship, who has devoted his life unselfishly and patriotically to the benefit of humankind and his fellow men, and who has followed his path, expending his fortune, his effort, and his health in endeavoring to do while he is upon this sphere some little of good to those about him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course, any man may make an argument for an appropriation of $8,000 that is presented in any appropriation bill, if he bases his argument upon the fact that $8,000 is a very small percentage of the billions that we are now spending; but, with all due deference to the Senator from California, that is not the question. Nobody is talking about the percentage of Lubin's salary as compared to the millions of money that we are spending to carry on this war and to subsidize our allies. Anybody might, in the case of an ordinary appropriation to increase a salary in the War Department from $100 to $200 a month, argue that it was a very small percentage of the immense amount now being spent by the United States Government; but that would not argue for the maker of it very much intelligence; it would argue a very great mistake of proportion and of viewpoint with regard to the present condition of things throughout the world. The question is as to whether or not Mr. Lubin is worth his salary.

The Senator from California goes on to accuse me of abusing Mr. Lubin. I have not done that; on the contrary, I have said that Mr. Lubin is a most pleasant sort of fellow to meet, and a very nice sort of a man, but is simply in the wrong niche; and is in the wrong niche because he had not studied American institutions enough to know, in the first place, when he first started on this game, that there was no constitutional power resting in the Federal Government to put a duty upon exports. I contend that any man who reaches the age of 30 or 35 who is so absolutely ignorant of the Constitution of his own country as to imagine that Congress has a right to put a duty upon exports, is unfit for public employment anywhere at any time, because of pure, unadulterated ignorance.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. Has the Senator not observed in his own experience that constitutional questions have arisen on the floor of the Senate and also in the other House, involving questions with which Members were not familiar and necessitating reference to sections and provisions of the Constitution of which they had no knowledge? I have heard such confessions time and time again.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, Mr. President, I have witnessed that very frequently, but this is the first time that I have ever known of any man who wanted to be in the limelight as a representative of the United States who did not know that the United States could not put a tax upon exports. I heard here one day upon the floor of the Senate a very learned Senator, who thought himself a great lawyer, and who was thought by several other Senators to be a great lawyer, contending that the United States Government had no right to draft men to go abroad in order to fight for the American Republic. I have heard a great many very absurd propositions propounded upon this floor; but I am not now calling attention to a doubtful question or a quasi-doubtful question or a remotely doubtful question or a dreamily doubtful question or a visionarily doubtful question; I am calling attention to the fact that the first advent of Lubin in public life was in an attempt to fix an export duty upon agricultural products; that is all; and if Lubin did not know any better, all Lubin had to do was to go to the nearest village lawyer and find out.

Now, that is the way Lubin started; and as far as I can learn, Lubin has not gotten over about half a mile beyond where he started.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLETCHER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when Mr. GOFF's name was called). I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent on account of business.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have a pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] on official business.

Mr. GERRY (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. GERRY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I notice that he is not in the Chamber. I voted under a misapprehension, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. KNOX. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] and that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

I have also been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Bankhead	Kenyon	Pomerene	Townsend
Borah	King	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kirby	Smith, Ariz.	Warren

Fernald	Johnson, S. Dak.	Sherman

So the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was nonconcurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to me.

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I desire to make a favorable report from the Committee on the District of Columbia——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes. All in favor of that motion will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed will say "no." [A pause.]

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must decide the question.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, I attempted to obtain recognition before the question was put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was addressed by so many Senators that he could not hear the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wanted to have a House bill, which was sent over this morning, referred to the Military Affairs Committee. It is House bill 9352.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not now in order. The Chair must be enabled to decide a vote, when a question is put, without another motion being made. The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Maryland. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland for the purpose he has indicated.

EXTENSION OF SPUR TRACK IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I desire to make a favorable report (S. Rept. No. 309) from the Committee on the District of Columbia of Senate bill 3476, and I ask for its present consideration. It will take only a minute. The bill has been thoroughly investigated, and the fact is that I want a vote upon it, for the reason that every day that is lost means an expense of $300 to the Government. It is a very short bill, and I hope there will be no opposition.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which has just been laid before the Senate, has precedence, but of course the Senate can change the order. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent, or does he move that that be done?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let the bill be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. From the Committee on the District of Columbia the Senator from Maryland reports favorably the bill (S. 3476) to authorize the extension of a spur track or siding from the existing lines of railroad in the District of Columbia across First Street NE., between L and M Streets, to the buildings occupied by the field medical supply depot of the Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. NEW addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The question of taking up the bill has not been disposed of, and I will say to the Senators that I ask for the disposition of the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. POINDEXTER and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So many Senators are addressing the Chair that it is difficult for the Chair to tell whom to recognize. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not ask the Senator from Maryland to yield to me. The Senator asked for unanimous consent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington was addressing the Chair at the time the Chair made the inquiry.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do ask unanimous consent.

Mr. POINDEXTER (continuing). And I understand that when a Senator asks unanimous consent the Senate has a right to either give or refuse it. Before doing that, I should like to inquire if this is the bill that was introduced by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is a substitute for that bill. I will say to the Senator that the committee made an investigation of the facts connected with this matter and agreed to report a substitute for the bill. It is really a substitute which has been reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There was a bill on the subject covered by this bill to which there were a great many objections on account of the damage it would do to a hospital.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that I think all of those objections are removed in this bill. This track is to be only temporary, during the existence of the war and six months thereafter, and is to be used only for the purpose of transporting medical supplies; and the passage of the bill will result in a saving to the Government of $300 a day. It is very important that the bill should be considered at once in order that the Government may have the benefit of this saving.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Also, as I understand, the cars do not run at night.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. They do not run at night except in extreme emergency, and they do not run within 569 feet of the hospital; and intervening between the track and the Sibley Hospital there are large numbers of houses much higher than the Sibley Hospital.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am exceedingly gratified to know that there is anybody who wants to save the Government $300 a day. It is quite refreshing.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It amounts to at least $100,000 a year. It has been costing the Government $300 a day to truck these supplies from there to the cars in order to be shipped. Not only that, but there was one ship that was delayed on account of inability to get the supplies to the ship.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is this in the interest of the efficient conduct of Government business?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Absolutely. That is the reason why the bill has been reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has stated the distance between these tracks and Sibley Hospital. Is that distance greater than it was in the original bill, concerning which they protested most vigorously?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am not able to say about that. It is 569 feet and 9 inches from the hospital, and the locomotive will be the length of seven or eight cars distant from that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had letters from the hospital authorities protesting against it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Not only that, but this track is to be used only for the transportation of medical supplies by the Government, and it is to be there only during the term of the war and six months thereafter. It is to be removed by the Government, at Government expense, at the expiration of that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to say this word for Sibley Hospital: I am not antagonizing the bill just now, but I want to get the facts. Sibley Hospital is the only hospital in the District of Columbia that has never asked the Government to make an appropriation. The Methodist Church have taken care of it, and they were up in arms against this bill when it was first introduced. I know nothing further than that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the members of the committee who were taking the part of Sibley Hospital have agreed to this unanimously; and there is on record there a statement showing the object of the extension and what will be done with it six months after the war is over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I have received at least a hundred letters of protest in this connection from churches and from individuals in my State.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, how many inches did the Senator from Maryland say the track would be from the hospital?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Five hundred and sixty-nine feet and nine inches. It is only to be used in the daytime and only for the benefit of the Government, and the tracks are to be put down and taken up at the expense of the Medical Department six months after the close of the war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not desire in any way unnecessarily or improperly to interfere with any just arrangement as to the switching or railroad service in the city, but there have been a number of protests in regard to this measure from people whose protests are entitled to consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say to the Senator that we gave them all a hearing. We had a hearing before our committee, and they were heard pro and con.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is very late in the day, Mr. President, and there could not be anything saved by considering the bill to-day. I should be glad if the Senator would allow the bill to go over until Monday morning, so that we may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I can not prevent that, but it will amount to $300 for every day's delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go to the calendar.

CASUALTY LISTS OF AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator for a moment. I know that his motion will encounter objection, and that will dispose of it, so I yield for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 211), as follows:

Whereas it has been stated in the public press of this date that the War Department, in publishing the casualty lists of the American Expeditionary Forces now abroad, will hereafter gives names of soldiers only, withholding announcement of their residence and next of kin: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the War Department be requested to inform the Senate if such an order has been issued, together with the reasons for it, if not inconsistent with the interests of the service.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. NEW addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, does this require unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent has been asked.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The resolution will go over under the rule.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendments, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that will be the order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he proposes to proceed with the consideration of this bill to-night?

Mr. MARTIN. I thought we could make some headway. I have very little hope of making very much, however, as it is about 5 o'clock.

Mr. KENYON. I am quite willing to have that done, but I insist that if we go ahead we must have order. This is an important bill, and some of us would like to know something about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will try to preserve order, but if Senators remain standing he can not even tell who desires to be recognized. The Senate will be in order. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "United States Employees' Compensation Commission," on page 3, line 24, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$37,000," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of the commissioners, assistants, clerks, and other employees; traveling expenses; expenses of medical examinations; reasonable traveling and other expenses and loss of wages payable to employees under section 21; rent in the District of Columbia and equipment of offices; not exceeding $250 for professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, and periodicals; stationery, and other supplies; printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office; and other necessary expenses, $37,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, there is a committee amendment to come in after line 9, on page 2. It is a committee amendment, though it has not been printed in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 9, on page 2, under the heading "Alien Property Custodian," it is proposed to insert the following:

The President is hereby authorized to acquire the title to the docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facilities on the Hudson River now owned by the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Terminal & Navigation Co., two corporations of the State of New Jersey, if he shall deem it necessary for the national security and defense: Provided, That if such property can not be procured by purchase, then the President is authorized and empowered to take over for the United States the immediate possession and title thereof. That if any such property shall be taken over as aforesaid, the United States shall make just compensation therefor, to be determined by the President, and if the amount thereof, so determined by the President, is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to the said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code. Upon the taking over of said property by the President, as aforesaid, the title to all such property so taken over shall immediately vest in the United States: Provided further, That section 355 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to any expenditures herein or hereafter authorized in connection with the property acquired.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to inquire on what page of the bill that amendment comes?

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the Senator that the amendment is not printed in the bill.

Mr. REED. I wish to suggest an amendment to that amendment. I had it marked here. I will ask to have the amendment sent to me.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman why the amendment is not printed in the bill. It is a very important provision.

Mr. MARTIN. It is a very important provision, but it is embraced in a very narrow scope, and it did not reach the attention of the committee until the bill had been printed; but its urgency was such that the committee considered it, and I have been instructed to report it to the Senate as a committee amendment.

Mr. STONE. Would it not be advisable to have it printed and let it go over until Monday?

Mr. MARTIN. I will say in addition, Mr. President, that the President of the United States sent this amendment to me, and made the special request that it be incorporated in this bill and passed as speedily as possible.

Mr. STONE. It can not be passed until the bill is passed. It is offered as a part of the bill. I should like to have an opportunity to examine the amendment, and I should like to have it go over until Monday.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I shall not insist on pressing this matter to-night. Nearly every item in the bill is of urgent importance. I was exceedingly anxious to make some headway with the bill, and especially with this amendment, particularly because every fact and every reason connected with the amendment can be stated in about six minutes. In view of the protests that are being made against its consideration, however, I move that the Senate take a recess until——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I do not wish to be put in the attitude of protesting against the amendment, or objecting to it, or antagonizing it. That is hardly fair. What I say is that an amendment of this importance ought to be printed in some way so that Senators may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator knows all about it.

Mr. STONE. I do not know a thing about it, except as it was read here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I should like to say, in the time of my colleague on the committee, that the amendment has already been printed in amendment form. When it was reported back by the committee, this amendment and a subsequent amendment covering the same subject were both printed, and are available now. It is not printed as a part of the bill, but is printed as a committee amendment, and it is available now if the Senator desires to examine it.

Mr. STONE. I simply wish to submit to the Senator from Alabama that no time will be lost, if we are going to adjourn—it is time for adjournment now—by letting it lie over until Monday morning, so that it can be examined. That is all I ask.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rose for the purpose of suggesting to the chairman of the committee that as there is another amendment of similar import, I would ask if, before adjournment, he would request that that amendment be printed in the RECORD, as well as this one, so that there might be full information on Monday.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest that both the amendment the Senator has offered and another one on the same subject be printed in the RECORD, and also be printed in amendment form, so that we may see them.

Mr. MARTIN. I am glad to adopt the suggestion. I offer the second amendment to which the Senators have referred, and I ask that both of them may be printed in the RECORD, and also in separate form.

Mr. GALLINGER. The other amendment need not be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that course will be taken.

The second amendment submitted by Mr. MARTIN is as follows:

That section 12 of the "Trading with the enemy act" be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That all moneys (including checks and drafts payable on demand) paid to or received by the alien property custodian pursuant to this act shall be deposited forthwith in the Treasury of the United States, and may be invested and reinvested by the Secretary of the Treasury in United States bonds or United States certicates of indebtedness, under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe for such deposit, investment, and sale of securities; and as soon after the end of the war as the President shall deem practicable, such securities shall be sold and the proceeds deposited in the Treasury.

"All other property of an enemy or ally of enemy conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the alien property custodian hereunder shall be safely held and administered by him except as hereinafter provided; and the President is authorized to designate as a depositary or depositaries of property of an enemy or ally of enemy any bank, or banks, or trust company, or trust companies, or other suitable depositary or depositaries located and doing business in the United States. The alien property custodian may deposit with such designated depositary or depositaries, or with the Secretary of the Treasury, any stocks, bonds, notes, time drafts, time bills of exchange, or other securities, or property (except money or checks or drafts payable on demand which are required to be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury) and such depositary or depositaries shall be authorized and empowered to collect any dividends or interest or income that may become due and any maturing obligations held for the account of such custodian. Any moneys collected on said account shall be paid and deposited forthwith by said depositary or by the alien property custodian into the Treasury of the United States as hereinbefore provided.

"The President shall require all such designated depositaries to execute and file bonds sufficient in his judgment to protect property on deposit, such bonds to be conditioned as he may direct.

"The alien-property custodian shall be vested with all of the powers of a common-law trustee in respect of all property other than money, which has been or shall be, or which has been or shall be required to be, conveyed, transferred, delivered, or paid over to him in pursuance of the provisions of this act, and, in addition thereto, acting under the supervision and direction of the President, and under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, shall have power to manage such property and do any act or things in respect thereof or make any disposition thereof or of any part thereof, by sale or otherwise, and exercise any rights or powers which may be or become appurtenant thereto or to the ownership thereof in like manner as though he were the absolute owner thereof. It shall be the duty of every corporation incorporated within the United States and every unincorporated association, or company, or trustee, or trustees within the United States issuing shares or certificates representing beneficial interests to transfer such shares or certificates upon its, his, or their books into the name of the alien-property custodian upon demand, accompanied by the presentation of the certificates which represent such shares or beneficial interests. The alien-property custodian shall forthwith deposit in the Treasury of the United States, as hereinbefore provided, the proceeds of any such property or rights so sold by him.

"Any money or property required or authorized by the provisions of this act to be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to the alien-property custodian shall, if said custodian shall so direct by written order, be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to the Treasurer of the United States with the same effect as if to the alien-property custodian.

"After the end of the war any claim of any enemy or of an ally of enemy to any money or other property received and held by the alien-property custodian or deposited in the United States Treasury shall be settled as Congress shall direct: Provided, however, That on order of the President, as set forth in section 9 hereof, or of the court, as set forth in sections 9 and 10 hereof, the alien-property custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, shall forthwith convey, transfer, assign, and pay to the person to whom the President shall so order, or in whose behalf the court shall enter final judgment or decree, any property of an enemy or ally of enemy held by said custodian or by said Treasurer, so far as may be necessary to comply with said order of the President or said final judgment or decree of the court: And provided further, That the Treasurer of the United States, on order of the alien-property custodian, shall, as provided in section 10 hereof, repay to the licensee any funds deposited by said licensee."

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, before I make the motion for a recess, I will yield to Senators who have matters they desire to dispose of.

FURLOUGHS IN THE ARMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3471) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowances to enlisted men of the Army of the United States, which was, in line 11, after "pursuits," to insert:

Provided, That such furloughs shall be granted only upon the voluntary application of such enlisted men under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask a question of the acting chairman of the committee?

Mr. FLETCHER. The House amendment is indicated at the close of the bill, as the Senator will see. I think there can be no objection to it. It simply provides that the soldier shall make application for transfer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator feel certain that the House amendment would not bind the hands of the Secretary of War to such an extent that he could not grant a furlough to a man even if he wanted to?

Mr. FLETCHER. This simply involves the question of the wish of the enlisted man to be furloughed. It requires him to express himself upon it. If he makes an application it can be granted to him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Please pause just a moment until I read it. [After a pause.] I will have no objection myself to it.

The amendment was concurred in.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HOLLIS, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 9352. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 10477. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WAR IN EUROPE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, comparatively recently there has been borne in on my mind a conviction of the absolute futility of further peace parleying at this time. In reenforcement of that view I have here an editorial from the New York Times of Wednesday, February 27, which I will not ask to be read, but which I ask be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the New York Times.]

FUTILE PARLEYING.

Democratic diplomacy, what Mr. Trotzky would call revolutionary diplomacy, as opposed to secret diplomacy, has degenerated into mere verbal jockeying in which further participation by self-respecting nations is impossible. The German chancellor, as ex-Ambassador Dumba admitted was the case with Count Czernin, is still talking to the peoples, not to the Governments, of the allies. It was evident that Mr. Wilson's most recent address to Congress was intended to have some effect upon the minds of the Austrian people. Further effort in that direction has been made hopeless by the complete triumph of German arms and German intrigues in Russia; and the American people, as well as the peoples of the other allied nations, receive von Hertling's bungling overtures with general contempt. Americans would be glad to see the end of these long-range parleyings.

While Mr. Wilson declared the war aims of the entente allies frankly, with manly straightforwardness, Count von Hertling in every restatement of German policy sinks to yet lower depths of evasion and ignoble trickery. In his latest utterance there is not a thought or a word that honestly responds to the addresses of the President to Congress or the speeches of Mr. Lloyd-George in the House of Commons. What avails it that the German chancellor declares his fundamental agreement "with the four principles" laid down in Mr. Wilson's address of February 11, when not only his other statements are at war with those principles, but the behavior of Germany in Russia shows that she categorically rejects all the principles laid down by President Wilson as fundamental? There is no Alsace-Lorraine question, says Count von Hertling, and withdrawal from Belgium must be upon terms which would leave that country in vassalage to Germany. Further interchanges of this nature with the political authorities of a power that flouts every principle of honor and decent dealing, and meets frank statements with fresh insults, is out of the question.

Mr. Wilson may take note of the German chancellor's words, but it should be only to expose the false and hollow nature of his pretended acceptance of the foundation principles. In his answer to the Pope's note Mr. Wilson declared that the German Government could not be trusted. In his address of February 11 he declared that "the method the German chancellor proposes is the method of the Congress of Vienna. We can not and will not return to that." Upon that occasion he said that America "can not see her way to peace until the causes of this war are removed, its renewals rendered, as nearly as may be, impossible." If he speaks again, it will be necessary for him, for reasons of still greater force, to denounce with increased emphasis the position of Germany. Forestalling the action of any peace congress, Germany seizes upon the western and Baltic territory of Russia, fully intending to control the whole of Russia as a means of fortifying herself to make war again, in her own good time, upon the civilized nations of the earth that entered this war fully resolved to destroy her military power in order that, in the President's words, the renewal of war by her might be made impossible.

There can be no peace, no hope of peace—there should be no talk of peace—until Germany has been compelled to get out of Russia altogether, to withdraw her troops from Belgium and the other lands she has overrun, to restore Alsace-Lorraine to France, and go under bonds of good behavior acceptable to the allies. Those are the unchangeable aims of the war, there can be no assured peace until they have been achieved. To attain them will demand of the allies that they make war in dead earnest. Wars are won by fighting, not by talking.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in furtherance of that same aim I want to put in an editorial from the New York World entitled "Time to end the peace talk." The date I forgot to note upon the margin.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York World.]

TIME TO END THE PEACE TALK.

Let us have an end to this prattle of peace, peace, when there is no peace that free men can accept.

We can have the peace of submission—for a time—by "acknowledging Germany's victory," by leaving the Kaiser supreme on the Continent of Europe and granting his "right" to commit unlimited murder on the sea, by bowing down to his own audacious claim that "nothing must happen anywhere on earth without the consent of the German Emperor."

We can have the peace of dishonor—for a time—by deserting Belgium, deserting France, deserting our own dead, by confessing that treaties are scraps of paper, that frightfulness, when practiced by Germany, is a beautiful thing, that the Kaiser has a perfect right to invade, trample, butcher, and enslave any country which displeases him.

We can have the peace of terror—for a time—waiting eagerly on the Kaiser's smile or frown, watching his slimy spies poison our morale and ruin our preparations without daring to thwart them, piling up taxes and armaments against the new Armageddon, giving up our domestic liberties one after the other to the iron needs of defense, and knowing all the while that that defense may prove in vain.

But we can not have a lasting peace, or one that would leave us free, unafraid, and willing to live with ourselves, until we make it on the ruins of kaiserism.

The task is not too great for our strength. It will not require from us the exertions which Britain and France have made already; it will not demand as great a proportionate sacrifice or effort as the country made for union from 1861 to 1865.

Germany's industrial districts, alone among those of the Continent, are untouched, and her population has not been decimated by such slavery as she has visited on Poland, Belgium, and northern France. But her fighting line has suffered more than that of any other power, save her ally, Austria-Hungary, and her collapsing enemy, Russia. Two million Germans, by the best estimates available, have been killed. Two million more are disabled or prisoners. Her foreign commerce has ceased to exist. Her people have been on rations for nearly three years.

In Berlin each person gets a weekly allowance of not quite 4 pounds of war bread, 13 ounces of fresh meat, 1.8 ounces of butter or oleo, 5.5 pounds of potatoes, a little flour, and an egg every four weeks. Rich Berliners if they want luxuries can have them by paying 95 cents per pound for the neck of a goose, $1.95 per pound for its liver, or $2.81 per pound for its smoked fat.

Germany survives because within her borders there is no business but war and no will but that of the general staff. With all the good fortune that her spies have brought here in the east, our allies in the west have fought her to a standstill and brought her where we can deliver the coup de grâce. An effort by all America as great in proportion as that which the North made to crush Lee will grind Hindenburg to powder. But the job can not be put through with words, and peace talk slackens the muscles which should be braced for conflict. Have done with it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I put these two editorials in the RECORD for Senators to read, because I think in view of the present European condition in Russia and Roumania and in view of the terms demanded by the German Government as to Russia and Roumania no self-respecting citizen of the American Republic, from the humblest man up to the President, can talk about peace any more until we find out who is to be victor.

TIMBER AND TIMBER PRODUCTS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the bill (S. 3426) to empower the President to requisition timber and timber products for war purposes be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock meridian on Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m., Saturday, March 9, 1918) the Senate took a recess until Monday, March 11, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 9, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, in whom all our trust is stayed, from whom cometh all wisdom, strength, and courage, let Thy holy influence be upon the President of the United States and all others in authority, that they may guide our forces on land and sea to the desired goal; that the civilization toward which mankind has been struggling may not be thwarted; though right may be worsted, let the powers of evil at last be subdued; that civilization may have its sway, and the pursuits of peace and righteousness obtain in all the earth, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3994. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. NELSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7998. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village of East Dundee and the village of West Dundee to construct a bridge across the Fox River.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3994. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SIMS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. SIMS. To submit a request for unanimous consent. My request, Mr. Speaker, is that the House have an evening session on next Monday, beginning at 8 o'clock and not continuing further than 10 o'clock, for the purpose of considering the daylight-saving bill. And I want to make a statement before anybody objects, so that everybody will know why I make this request. The bill itself as reported provides that the change of time shall take place the last Sunday in March, and it ought to take place in time for the railroads to adjust whatever is necessary for them to adjust in reference to their time-tables for operating of trains in order to prevent accidents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that next Monday night there may be a session of the House, beginning at 8 o'clock and running not later than 10 o'clock, for the purpose of considering the daylight-saving bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, this bill has been pending here for the last two or three years, and all of a sudden it has developed into importance all out of proportion to what I think its value is. I think the gentleman is overanxious about it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. SIMS. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman says this bill has been pending two or three years. It has not been pending that long. It was only introduced last spring by Senator CALDER.

Mr. MADDEN. I am speaking of the bill for that purpose.

Mr. SIMS. I am speaking of the particular bill before us. The only reason why it was not considered last summer was that the then chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did not think it a war measure and therefore believed it should not be considered, not having been included in our war-legislation program. The committee at this session has acted with dispatch. It is an exceedingly important measure and the whole country is in favor of it, and if the gentleman wants to fly in the face of the whole country, he can do so.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not opposed to the bill; I am rather in favor of it. But the gentleman, since he became chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, attaches too much importance to the position he occupies. He thinks we should set aside all the other legislation pending in Congress so that he may be given the floor. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

Mr. SIMS. This request does not set aside any other legislation or in any way interfere with other legislation.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes on the question of price fixing of tomatoes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects. When objection is made, that is the end of it.

MEMORIAL OF DAVID L. BAUMGARTEN, SR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair refers the memorial of Mr. Baumgarten that was submitted here yesterday to the Committee on Elections No. 3.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 3994, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes, approved July 2, 1917," and for other purposes, passed at the last session, as relates to powder and other explosives.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the matter be brought up on Monday, when we shall have more time for the consideration of such matters than we have to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RAKER, for one day, on account of sickness; and

To Mr. STEVENSON, for one week, on account of business engagements of an important character.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 10358, known as the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I noticed in the newspapers of yesterday that the conferees have agreed on the railroad bill. Will the Chair advise me when that bill will be accessible, so that the House may know what it is?

The SPEAKER. The conference report has never been reported to the House.

Mr. WINGO. Is there any intimation as to when it will be, or will they wait until they get ready to act upon it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. GILLETT. They have to report it a day in advance.

Mr. WINGO. I know, if the rules are observed.

The SPEAKER. There has been no action taken on it, so far as the Chair is advised, and he does not know whether they have agreed upon it or not.

Mr. WINGO. Some of us are very much interested in that measure.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. To make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 314, not voting 114, as follows:

DESTRUCTION OR INJURY OF WAR MATERIAL.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes; that the amendments of the House be insisted upon and the conference requested by the Senate agreed to. This is the bill we passed on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that S. 383 be taken from the Speaker's table, the House amendments insisted upon, and the conference requested by the Senate agreed to. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Messrs. WEBB, CARLIN, and VOLSTEAD.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

In accordance with the vote above taken, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has 17 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] 10 minutes remaining on the pending amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, one of these Subtreasuries is located in the district which I have the honor to represent in this House. Most likely the wishes of the people of the cities where these Subtreasuries are located are in favor of retaining them. It is not uncommon for any community when given something by the Government to want to keep it, and probably I could best serve my own personal interest in this matter by favoring the retention of these Subtreasuries. Many of us do not stop to examine into the question as to the necessity of continuing these offices, as much as we do the question whether or not it would be bad policy for us who come from these cities where these Subtreasuries are located to vote for their retention instead of approving of the recommendation made by the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Chairman, for a number of years I have given a good deal of thought and study to the Subtreasuries located in this country, and especially to the one located in my district, and while I have the greatest regard and esteem for the gentleman who is Assistant Subtreasurer, a former Member of this House and a distinguished gentleman—while I have the greatest respect for him and the employees in that office, there is absolutely no need to-day for the retention of the Subtreasury at St. Louis, and I take it that that is true of all the other cities. [Applause.] We must meet these issues as they come to us, as public servants, as Representatives of the people, and endeavor to conserve the resources of our Government and put them in the places where they are greatly needed.

You are voting day after day for the creation of offices where they are needed; we are voting additional offices for the War Department, and for other departments, and so I say, Mr. Chairman, that where we can retrench, where there is no longer necessity for offices, let us be patriotic enough to do away with them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, if there were any promise of economy in the administration of the finances of the country by the abolition of these Subtreasuries, the speech of my colleague [Mr. DYER] would have some weight. But evidently he has not read the hearings.

Mr. DYER. I have read the hearings.

Mr. MEEKER. If he had he would have discovered many things that the Treasury did not find out.

Mr. DYER. The Treasurer did not say that this office should be retained.

Mr. MEEKER. The so-called Efficiency Bureau—if it makes another break like this it will be called the "Hazard-a-Guess Bureau." Here is an alleged report taken seriously by some gentlemen on the floor of the House from an alleged Efficiency Bureau that announces in the beginning that they have not examined the subject very carefully, and then say in the report that they hazard a guess that it may possibly save money. If that is a report of an Efficiency Bureau, God save us from any more Efficiency Bureau reports. When a board announces that it has not examined the case and then is frank enough to say that it is guessing at the result, I do not see why anybody should take seriously any suggestion made by such a board.

Where the Efficiency Bureau falls down in this report is that they are all the time talking about saving a great sum of money by cutting out the Subtreasuries, but they are going to keep them until after the war. Why do you not stop them now? Why are you proposing to run them six months after the war and at the same time talk about economy? Your proposition is to keep the thing moving and the branches active until six months after the war. If they are a useless appendage to the Government to-day, now is the time to cut out the Subtreasuries. The very fact that they are now being used as never before, as stated by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is very evident that they are not the fifth wheel of a wagon.

In the next place, gentlemen, these branches of the United States Treasury—for that is what they are—are really the only entirely governmental institutions which we have that handle, as I believe, the finances. And the Government should care for its own. We are not so sure yet as to what the final outcome of the Federal Reserve Banking System is going to be. The strange thing about it is in this new psychology that Congress takes a report from the Efficiency Bureau on something that they have not investigated. We want to dispose of the Government finance department six months after the war is ended, but we want to hold on to the railroads forever; we are taking over private property and throwing away Government property as quickly as we can get rid of it. That is very good evidence as to how your minds are working now, but there is no real saving in anything that is not to be abolished until after the war. [Applause.]

As an extension of my remarks I include the following remarks of Mr. R. C. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in the hearing before this committee:

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. The department is not ready to recommend that any be abolished. Since the Secretary made his report of a little over a year ago the condition of the world's affairs and of the United States has been changed by the great war, and the department has been called upon to multiply its activities vastly. The Subtreasuries have had to do more than ever before. I should not have said "than ever before," but, rather, than in recent years. Since the organization of the Federal reserve banks the Subtreasuries have been actually called upon, in the Federal reserve cities, to assume subsidiary labors for the Federal reserve banks, and since my own brief term of office began my principal burden in relation to the Subtreasuries has been to resist the appeals of the assistant treasurers for additional assistance, when I felt that there was real merit in those appeals, because I knew it was the wish of the Secretary and of your committee that there should not be an increase in the activities of the Subtreasuries.

To-day the position is that the Subtreasuries are performing more work than they have in recent years, and that those in the cities where the Federal reserve banks are located are being called upon to perform more work just because the Federal reserve banks are there. In so far as the Subtreasuries are affected by the suggestion that the Federal reserve banks should take over their functions, there are certain points which the Secretary has brought out in his letter of a year ago, and which it seems to me well worth while to repeat. The Federal reserve banks are under governmental observation and under the control and supervision of the Federal Reserve Board. Nevertheless they are private banks and a majority of the directors are elected by the banks themselves. They are in business for themselves. The trust funds of the United States, the gold which the United States holds against its own gold obligations can not be properly turned over to a bank. Nowhere in the world is that done. There is no country where a semiprivate bank takes over the functions of the Treasury. Now, the conditions in the United States are different from those anywhere else. We have a great land, territorially so vast and so different in its general structure, that it is quite impossible that the legitimate and statutory functions of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States can be conducted exclusively at the Capital of the United States, which wisely the fathers placed away from the financial and commercial sections of the country.

Practically the Subtreasuries are branches of the Treasury of the United States. Without undertaking at this moment to say that this Subtreasury or that Subtreasury is ideally located or that a man with perfect wisdom might not be able to select some better spot for this Subtreasury or that Subtreasury, it is the belief of the Secretary that there is an actual necessity for Subtreasuries in important cities of the United States as a part of the functioning of our fiscal system.

I have read the report of the Efficiency Bureau with a great deal of interest. I observe with a great deal of pleasure that they conclude that the Subtreasuries are on the whole well and economically conducted and that, with the exception of the assistant treasurers, they do not include any idle men on their rolls; that their employees have been, on an average, there for many years, are performing their duties well, and are obviously not high-salaried men. I think that the estimate which the bureau makes (and which, by the way, it makes by way of estimate merely, as it says "we hazard a guess" or "we think it is possible"), that a saving of 75 per cent can be made, is unsupported, so far as this report is concerned, by figures. I feel that the estimate is unwarranted. The best information that the Secretary is able to obtain is that the functions which the Subtreasuries are performing are being performed economically.

The suggestion that there can be a saving through transferring those functions to the Federal reserve banks, assuming that the objection which I regard as fundamental to transferring them at all to semiprivate banking institutions has been eliminated, seems to me unjustifiable, unless it be on the theory which is stated in the report that the Federal reserve banks will accept those duties and those burdens without making any charge for them. I have had a great deal to do with the Federal reserve banks, because they have been so active in conducting the fiscal agency operations of the Government in connection with the Liberty loans, and I am sure they would expect to be reimbursed for this additional expense, nor can I see any reason why they should not. If they made no charge, that would simply be paying money out of one pocket into another. The surplus of the Federal reserve bank, after paying 6 per cent dividends, goes one-half to the Government and one-half into a surplus fund which strengthens the credit of the Federal reserve bank and belongs to the Government in case of dissolution. Neither do you save anything by having the functions which are performed by the Subtreasuries performed by the mints and assay offices. The Federal reserve banks are overworked. They are adding to their organization all the time. We are paying for their fiscal agency activities in connection with war loans out of the appropriations provided in connection with the bond bills. The Subtreasuries are all overworked. The Secretary has kept their expenses down to what they were before their work increased. He has used the Federal reserve banks in all the ways that he could, and, notwithstanding this vast growth of the Government's financial business, the expenses of Subtreasuries have been kept down. While our business has gone to $20,000,000,000 a year from one, the Subtreasuries have been kept where they were; but at this time, with these vast operations in hand, with the grave responsibilities that are imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury and upon the Treasurer of the United States growing out of the war, to attempt a reorganization and to transfer the functions of the Subtreasuries to the Federal reserve banks would be little less than a calamity. The suggestion made by the Bureau of Efficiency of determining now to abolish the Subtreasuries six months after the war is one which seems to be contrary to all conceivable theories of efficiency.

If some one will tell us when six months after the war will come about, then we might be able to conduct ourselves in relation to such recommendation wisely and intelligently; but if the war were to last three years and the Congress should say now that the Subtreasuries are to be abolished six months after the war, the effect would be that all of these men would have to look for other ways of doing their business right away while we are trying to expand the Federal reserve banks and all of our organization to the utmost. The suggestion that we transfer certain of the clerks here to Washington finds us in a position where we are beyond measure distressed by the physical limitations of housing here in Washington. There is not any room for these additional people in the Treasury Department in Washington.

Mr. BYRNS. The Treasurer and other bureaus of the department are asking for a great number of additional clerks?

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. We need them, but we have housing problems in connection with that, and to transfer people arbitrarily from business centers to Washington will simply increase our housing problems here and will not be an economy, but involve additional expense.

Mr. BYRNS. On the other hand, if that transfer were brought about, it would seem to me that you would require just that many less clerks from the civil-service register. In other words, it would reduce the number of new clerks that you would require in the Treasurer's office, where necessarily you will have to have a great number of additional clerks, and the same is true of other activities, the War Risk Bureau, for instance, where they will probably have to have 1,200 additional clerks.

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. I, perhaps, have not caught your thought, Congressman. What I had reference to was the suggestion that certain of these functions could be transferred here to Washington and that that would involve the employment of additional clerks here. Those clerks, I assume, would be in addition to whatever additional clerks were required for other purposes.

Mr. BYRNS. Not necessarily, unless the transfer of the functions of the Independent Treasury to the department here would require additional services. Of course, that is a question that I am not prepared to speak of now.

You spoke a moment ago of the importance of retaining the Subtreasuries for the purpose of acting as custodians of the trust funds. Speaking for myself, that is one reason which has always appealed to me, about the only reason I have ever heard, but that really appealed to me very strongly on behalf of the retention of these Subtreasuries. Why is it that provision can not be made for these trust funds here in Washington at the department? Why is it necessary, in other words, to maintain an organization costing more than $600,000 in nine cities of this country—I believe there are nine—merely for the purpose of acting as custodians for these trust funds, the gold and silver that the Government has provided against its obligations?

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. I do not suppose it can be said to be necessary, but it may be said to be highly desirable, because the physical custody of gold and silver presents a physical problem. Gold does not move from one point to another in the United States except by railroad, and on account of the vast extent of the United States it is a great convenience to the Government and to the people of the United States to have points centrally located with reference to the business transacted in the United States where the gold can be safely stored. Take the Federal Reserve System—the Treasurer of the United States, through the Subtreasuries, almost exclusively holds the gold which represents the gold settlement fund, and that gold is used to settle balances between the reserve banks. Obviously that gold could not be put into the custody of one of the reserve banks which represents the settlement between all of them.

Mr. BYRNS. As I understand the report of the Bureau of Efficiency, they agree with you as to the inadvisability of turning these trust funds over to the Federal reserve banks or to any other semiprivate institution, but the suggestion is made that the gold and silver could be stored here and in the mint and assay offices, and also in the assay office in New York, where you have a large building and where considerable space could be found.

Mr. FORT. We have $931,000,000 belonging to the assay office in the Subtreasury in the corridors downstairs.

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. I think the suggestion in this report is that the gold should be left where it is, in the vaults of the Subtreasury in New York, and that some other custodian than the Assistant Treasurer should be named.

Mr. HUGINS. That is simply bullion. It can be kept there in any event.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask not to be interrupted. The question of the abolition of the Subtreasuries is one that has been up before this House on numerous occasions. When the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, was under consideration, it passed with this provision:

> That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and instructed to report to Congress at the beginning of the next session which of the Subtreasuries, if any, should be continued, before the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if, in his opinion, any should be continued, the reasons in full for such continuance.

Strange to say, notwithstanding that legislative mandate, the Secretary of the Treasury refused to report to Congress why the Subtreasuries should be maintained. He made no report to Congress at all. So when the appropriation bill of last year was before this House you adopted a provision that the Bureau of Efficiency was to investigate the work performed by Subtreasuries and report to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Congress at the beginning of the next regular session what part of the work of the Subtreasuries could be transferred to other offices of the Government—the Federal Reserve System or farm-loan banks.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GOOD. No. That report is before Congress, and I venture the assertion that never has there been filed a report to Congress showing greater study and deeper investigation than the report of the Bureau of Efficiency in response to that legislation. It stands out in striking contrast with the information furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury. That report is to the effect that the work of the Subtreasuries has largely already been taken by the Federal reserve banks and the national banks of the country. That report also shows that we are paying out every year $600,000 to maintain these Subtreasuries. Last year when this matter was under discussion the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] was asked the following question, and he made the following reply:

> Mr. GOOD. If Baltimore had a Federal reserve bank, would the gentleman then think they should still have a Subtreasury?
> Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say this: That if Baltimore had a Federal reserve bank, and you are going to do away with the Subtreasuries and give the power which the Subtreasury now has to the Federal reserve bank, and do it in all the cities that have Federal reserve banks, I do not know that we should object.

That is just what we have done. A branch of the Federal reserve bank has been or is being established at Baltimore, so Baltimore can not object. What was Baltimore's claim before the Committee on Appropriations? The only claim that is made by any of the representatives of these nine cities is that the Government, at Government expense, is shipping currency to the Subtreasuries, and the Government is paying the freight. They say that if we abolish the Subtreasury at Baltimore, for example, that it will cost the banks of Baltimore—and the bankers in high standing from Baltimore made the statement—$200,000 per year, and yet it does not cost the banks of Baltimore a single penny more to transport currency from the Treasury to the Subtreasury at Baltimore than it would cost the Government of the United States to transport that currency. Last year when this matter was up before the House our minority leader, Mr. MANN, when Chicago was at stake, made this statement:

> We ought to find nerve enough to abolish some of the useless offices now maintained by the Government, especially when we have created other offices to do the work which they now do.

And Mr. MANN voted in favor of the amendment abolishing the Subtreasury at Chicago. Remember that every one of these nine Subtreasury cities already has, or will have when the present orders are complied with, either a Federal reserve bank or a branch of a Federal reserve bank. Members on this side of the aisle who within the next few months will be going to the country condemning the Democratic Party for its extravagance will be very greatly embarrassed if they vote to retain these useless offices. The retention of the Subtreasuries is absolutely a waste of public money. What are the functions the Subtreasury was called upon to perform? One is to receive Government money for deposit. To-day we have 761 national banks throughout the country, designated as Government depositories, authorized to receive Government funds. It is largely in these banks that the Government funds are deposited. On November 1 last there was deposited of Government funds in those banks almost $200,000,000, not including the $900,000,000 more that had been collected through the sale of liberty bonds. It was in the national banks where the Government is depositing Government funds. Another function is to pay Government checks and warrants. To-day a postal clerk or any Government employee or contractor who has a warrant drawn by the Government of the United States does not take it to the Subtreasury. To require this would work great hardship. He takes it to the national bank or to the State bank, and he gets his money for it just as soon as he lays it on the counter. The other one of the three functions was the sale of Government bonds. When this system was established in 1864 it was thought then that the Subtreasuries should handle in a large measure the sale of Government bonds. Tell me, you gentlemen who are in favor of this amendment and in favor of the retention of these Subtreasuries, what did the nine Subtreasuries do in the sale of the liberty bonds? Practically nothing. That work was turned over, as you know, to the Federal reserve banks, and the Federal reserve banks called to their service all the banks of the country, both National and State, and the manner in which they responded is to their great credit. When legislation was under consideration creating that system it was stated on the floor of this House time and time again that the Federal reserve banks would, as fiscal agents for the Government of the United States, take over all the work of the Subtreasuries, and so we wrote right into the law that whenever the Secretary of the Treasury should require it the Federal reserve banks should act as the fiscal agents of the United States. That is all Subtreasuries were ever authorized to do. A Subtreasury is a fiscal agent of the United States. Following out that legislation, we have largely already taken over most of the functions of the Subtreasury. If these Subtreasuries are necessary, then it is important to have more of them. Do gentlemen realize that only two of these nine Subtreasuries are west of the Mississippi River, and but one of the nine Subtreasuries is west of the Missouri River? If it is necessary that these Subtreasury cities have the Government pay the freight and expense of shipping coin to them, then I say to you that in every city in the United States of any size the Government should establish a Subtreasury. If you are to pay the freight on coin from here to Philadelphia, why not pay the freight on coin from Washington to other cities in Pennsylvania. That is the only city in Pennsylvania where the Government will ship coin at the expense of the Government. In all other cities in Pennsylvania the banks in them must pay charges for shipping currency, but the bankers of Philadelphia passes the expense over to the Government. I believe that this amendment should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I speak in support of the proposed amendment because of my observation and information of the much more than local benefit of the Subtreasury at Cincinnati.

The city is a most important one, and industrially and commercially it represents in every way the most progressive features of our national life.

In the Subtreasury jurisdiction of this city are very many plants of the highest industrial efficiency now affording their utmost endeavor to the assistance of the United States in the manufacture of munitions of war, and a most fertile and productive agricultural region adds its resources in this same territory.

Illustrative in just a sentence of the business done by this Subtreasury at Cincinnati, I beg leave to quote the figures of the closing balance in August, 1917, at Cincinnati at $37,863,651.52, and the balance on December 31, 1917, was $41,184,145.19.

The work of this Subtreasury will fully appear in a statement I herewith append.

Discussing the matter of the abolition of the nine Subtreasuries of the United States generally, it is said that this work should be done by the Federal reserve banks.

It must be borne in mind that the Federal reserve bank is a private corporation not bound to transact any Government business and probably would not unless paid for.

It is in this connection that I submit the information that the reserve bank at Cleveland, Ohio, has indicated that it has a tremendous amount of business and that it does not care to take on the new business incident to an abolition of the Subtreasury at Cincinnati, and that the work at Cincinnati is being done well and that it could not be done as cheaply as it is now done by the Subtreasury.

The Federal reserve branch banks are depositories now and fiscal agents for the Government and have public funds deposited for which they give no security and pay no interest.

Remembering, always, that the Federal reserve banks are private corporations, we must consider that there are 840 national banks doing much of this same class of business, and that each of these national banks is required to deposit bonds as security for public funds and to pay interest therefor.

The duties of the Subtreasury can not, without legislative amendment, be performed by the Federal reserve banks.

First. The Federal reserve banks can not hold trust funds—gold and silver to secure issuance of circulating notes.

Second. The law prohibits the Federal reserve banks from keeping on deposit the 5 per cent redemption fund. This must be carried by the Treasurer or Assistant Treasurer.

Third. The gold settlement fund, carried as a means of settlement between Federal reserve banks, must be carried in the Treasury and, for necessary convenience, is carried in the independent Subtreasuries.

It may be readily seen that this most important gold settlement fund, which would seek to settle balances between Federal reserve banks, should not be carried by these banks themselves but by an entirely independent agency such as is now required.

When I spoke of my knowledge of the benefit being more than local I referred to the fact that a man living in Kentucky or Tennessee or West Virginia or Indiana, Alabama, Georgia, and a number of other States, buying goods in a town in which there is a Subtreasury, makes payments for merchandise purchased through his local bank, and this local bank must have a correspondent bank in the town in which there is a Subtreasury, and in such territory the local bank is provided through the correspondent bank with exchange through the city in which the Subtreasury is.

There are few correspondent banks in the city of Washington for the reason that there is little or no wholesale commercial business here, and in the event of the abolition of the nine Subtreasuries the local bank would have to send money to Washington and then have it sent directly back to the city in which the purchase of merchandise was made and where it was to be paid for.

The same obstacle would arise in the requirements of change of denomination of currency or of mutilated currency, or it would mean, to the vast inconvenience of nearly all the business men in the United States, that requests for required denomination of currency should be made to Washington and then sent to remote points throughout the country, whereas now this very important branch of public service is made through the Subtreasuries situate, as they are, in convenient parts of our territory for the accommodation of our people.

All of these things are matters of law which have been acted upon and understood for many years, and the process of abolition would mean, not alone a disturbance of a present efficient organization, but a substitution by agreement only for what is now accomplished by law.

Therefore, with these Subtreasuries performing an efficient public work of benefit resulting to all persons within their territorial jurisdiction, I submit that the present proposition to abolish them should not be sustained. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, for many years, even before the passage of the Federal reserve bank act, I favored the abolishment of these Subtreasuries. I can not argue the question in one minute. I want to say to both sides of the House that if I had the power I would cut them off by severing the Subtreasury head from the body, and I would do it at once. Here is an illustration of the cohesive power of public plunder, knowing that it is postponed until after the war is over.

"Oh," it is said on this side, "we are coming in in 1920." Let us come in without being tempted, you know, to fill these Subtreasuries with employees. There is no use for the Subtreasuries. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time is yielded, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is yielded three minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to my colleague, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, for this allotment of time, for I am surprised that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would cut off the heads of the Subtreasuries so soon. The gentleman from Illinois, a distinguished Member of this House, honored by all, who has been a Member longer than any other man living, knows these Subtreasuries have been in existence since 1846. Why were not these heads cut off at some prior time? [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Because of fellows like the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield. It is rather late for the gentleman from Illinois to become a reformer on this question. As Speaker of this House he had it in his power at any time to bring in legislation abolishing these Subtreasuries if he desired to do it. So much for that. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] seemed to indicate that this business ought to be transferred to the Federal reserve banks. Why, if Andrew Jackson knew that any Democrat living favored that practice he would turn in his grave. He battered down the centralization of banks through the destruction of the United States Bank, which occupied the very building in Philadelphia where the Subtreasury now is. When the Subtreasuries were established it was for the purpose of enabling the Government to distribute its valuable funds, its bullion, and its coin. They did not believe in those days, any more than we ought to believe now, in keeping all our eggs in one basket. Gentlemen have suggested that all the Subtreasury money should come to Washington. We have got enough to do in Washington now, and it would not be wise to thus centralize our resources. There should be a distribution of our funds through many depositories. There is some very high testimony upon that point. I call it to the attention of some enthusiastic Democrats who have been yelling for the heads of the subtreasurers of the country. The Secretary of the Treasury is not in favor of this proposition. He would vote, if he were a Member of this House, as I shall vote, to strike out this offending paragraph. Why? Because, in the first place, he does not believe that all the business of the United States should be concentrated in Washington, and evidently he does not believe that it should all be concentrated in the Subtreasury at New York. Moreover, on the question of the reserve bank control, the Secretary of the Treasury—I have his letter in my hand, but I can not read it in three minutes—holds that whereas the Federal Reserve System is a private institution, a private corporation, there would have to be guards provided by the Government to safeguard the Federal funds. You are going to hear a good deal about Wall Street when the bill to organize the War Finance Corporation comes in. You are going to hear a good deal about the centralization and concentration of funds. In the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury it would be unwise to adopt the committee's suggestion. He thinks it better to keep the bullion and the coin of the United States in the possession of the United States officials and not transfer it to the Federal reserve bank. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks I append the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, to which I referred. It was addressed to the Speaker of the House December 16, 1916:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 16, 1916.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 10, 1916, it is provided that—

"The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session which of the Subtreasuries, if any, should be continued after the end of the fiscal year 1917, and if, in his opinion, any should be continued the reasons in full for such continuance; also, if any or all of said Subtreasuries may be discontinued, what legislation will be necessary in order to transfer their duties and functions to some other branch of the public service or to the Federal reserve banks."

In accordance with the above authorization and direction, I have the honor to report as follows:

There are nine Subtreasuries located, respectively, in the cities of Boston, Mass.; New York City, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; St. Louis, Mo.; New Orleans, La.; and San Francisco, Cal. The Subtreasury system was authorized by the act of August 6, 1846, and subsequent acts amendatory thereof.

The duties and functions of the Subtreasuries may be stated generally as follows:

Issue of gold order certificates on gold deposits.
Acceptance of gold coins for exchange.
Acceptance of standard silver dollars for exchange.
Acceptance of fractional silver for redemption.
Acceptance of minor coins for redemption.
Acceptance of United States notes for redemption.
Acceptance of Treasury notes for redemption.
Acceptance of gold and silver certificates for redemption.
Cancellation (before shipment to Washington) of unfit currency.
Laundering of unfit currency which permits of this process.
Exchange of various kinds of money for other kinds that may be requested.
Remittances from United States depositary banks or their surplus deposits of internal-revenue, customs, money-order, postal, and similar funds.
Deposits of postal-savings funds direct.
Deposit of money-order funds direct and indirect.
Deposits of post-office funds direct and indirect.
Deposits on account of 5 per cent redemption fund.
Deposits of interest on public deposits.
Deposits of funds belonging to disbursing officers.
Funds deposited for transfer to some other point through a payment by a Subtreasury located thereat.
Encashment of checks, warrants, and drafts drawn against the Treasurer of the United States and presented at the Subtreasury for payment.
The payment of United States coupons and interest checks.

In addition to the foregoing the Subtreasuries have the custody of a large part of the reserve and trust funds, consisting of the gold coin and bullion and silver dollars deposited to secure gold and silver certificates and greenbacks.

The receiving of deposits and payment of checks has been assumed to a large extent since the establishment of the Federal Reserve System by the designation of Federal reserve banks as Government depositaries in those Subtreasury cities where Federal reserve banks are located. Federal reserve banks are located in the Subtreasury cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and San Francisco. New Orleans has a branch of the Federal reserve bank of Atlanta, while neither Baltimore nor Cincinnati has a Federal reserve bank.

It has always been deemed advisable to deposit the gold reserve and trust funds of the Government in several places rather than to concentrate them in one, for reasons of security as well as public convenience.

The Federal reserve act does not expressly, or by implication, contemplate the substitution of the Federal reserve banks for the Subtreasuries, nor would it, in my opinion, be possible, or advisable if possible, to attempt such a substitution. While the general or current fund of the Treasury may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be deposited in the Federal reserve banks, the reserve and trust funds of the Government, viz. gold coin and bullion and silver dollars held in trust by the Government against outstanding gold and silver certificates and greenbacks, are not included in this authorization. The gold coin and bullion held against gold certificates, amounting at present to more than $2,000,000,000, a considerable part of which is deposited in the Subtreasuries, should not, in my opinion, be committed to the custody of any private corporations—and the Federal reserve banks are private corporations—but should be in the physical control of the Government itself. This applies with equal force to the $152,979,025 of gold reserve held against United States notes and Treasury notes of 1890 and the silver dollars held against silver certificates. If, however, it should be deemed advisable to transfer the custody of these trust funds to Federal reserve banks or to any other private corporation or corporations, it would be necessary to make a special deposit of such funds in vaults especially constructed for the purpose and to maintain a Federal guard or some form of adequate Government control over such vaults.

Since the Federal reserve banks are, as I have already stated, private corporations, just as are the national banks, the duty of providing the necessary storage vaults and of assuming the custody and control of these trust funds could not be imposed upon the Federal reserve banks by legislation. It could only be accomplished by negotiation and agreement, involving, necessarily, compensation for the service performed. Whether or not arrangements could be made with Federal reserve banks, or any private institutions, for the custody of these trust funds upon terms and under conditions satisfactory to the Government, and at a saving in cost over the Subtreasury methods, while, at the same time, providing all of the conveniences in handling these funds and the same measure of security as now afforded by the Subtreasury system, is a matter upon which I am unable to express an opinion. I desire to repeat, however, my earnest conviction that it would be unwise to commit the custody of these trust funds to any private institution or institutions. The custody of these trust funds, their maintenance, direction, control, and administration are distinctly a governmental function and should be exercised only by the Government.

Aside from the custody of the trust funds of the Government, the Subtreasuries perform a highly useful service to the public in making exchanges of money, supplying money and coin where needed, and reducing the cost and expense of shipments of money and coin from a common center. It is necessary to maintain the facilities and conveniences provided by the Subtreasuries in the large centers of business in the country, such as the cities in which the Subtreasuries are now located. Even if these particular functions could be transferred to Federal reserve banks where they exist, the services rendered by the substituted agencies would have to be compensated for. This would involve expenses to the Government, while, at the same time, the facilities provided might not be as thorough and satisfactory as those supplied by the Subtreasuries themselves.

It has been suggested that the Subtreasuries are merely conveniences and not necessities, and that their duties might be performed entirely by the Treasury in Washington. This is in a sense true, but the cost of handling all the business from a common center, in a country so extensive as the United States, might be greater than the expense of the Subtreasury system, whereas the delays and inconveniences which the public would have to suffer might prove a very serious handicap upon business. It could with equal force be argued that internal-revenue offices throughout the United States could be abolished and all of the work done at Washington, and, in like manner, that many of the customs offices throughout the country could be abolished and all of the work done from Washington. It is the duty of the Government to provide adequate facilities to meet the convenience and necessities of the public in all parts of the country, and the problem must be considered as a whole and not merely in detail.

It may be possible to reduce the expense of administration of some, or all, of the Subtreasuries. It has been only one year since the Federal reserve banks were made Government depositaries and fiscal agencies and the current or general funds of the Government in such cities transferred to Federal reserve banks. About that time I appointed an improvement committee (described in my annual report of 1915) to make a careful study of departmental methods in all directions and to report upon the best means of improving the general administration of the Treasury service in its various important branches. The administration of the Subtreasuries is one of the subjects for investigation, and I sincerely hope that within another year it may be found possible to reduce the expense of operating these institutions in some, if not in all, of the cities where they are now located.

The amount of the Government funds in each Subtreasury, the volume of the total transactions annually performed by them, and the cost of maintaining these institutions are set forth in the following table:

Subtreasury.	Government funds held June 30, 1916.	Total transactions, fiscal year 1916.	Expense of maintenance, fiscal year 1916.
Baltimore	$12,573,371.07	$108,215,675.59	$33,749.53
Boston	34,452,695.24	217,020,680.17	52,051.29
Chicago	120,537,589.79	597,365,032.95	84,325.04
Cincinnati	31,388,654.90	105,703,081.30	28,819.14
New Orleans	31,917,751.13	73,990,519.44	27,481.22
New York	329,402,485.45	2,464,715,492.12	187,587.75
Philadelphia	26,183,266.27	473,623,903.18	57,792.76
St. Louis	48,629,847.19	193,370,692.54	37,385.63
San Francisco	99,088,010.01	291,058,033.53	25,812.27
Total	734,173,671.05	4,525,063,111.82	535,004.63

It will be seen that the cost of maintaining these institutions, treating the Subtreasury system as a whole, is only one one-hundredth of 1 per cent, approximately, on the total transactions involved—an insignificant sum compared with business done, the important service performed, and the conveniences afforded to the public. Aside from New York, the cost of maintaining the other eight Subtreasuries is $347,416.88, which is a comparatively small sum to pay for the service and convenience they provide. If these institutions were abolished the total cost of operating them would not be saved, as a counter expenditure by the office of the Treasurer in Washington, resulting from the increased work that would be thrown upon that office, would be entailed.

I am of the opinion that it would be inadvisable at this time to abolish all, or any, of the Subtreasuries. It is an important matter and should be considered deliberately. With the test of further experience it may develop that the functions of the Subtreasuries, or some of them, may be transferred to Washington, or to some other agency, but action should not be taken hastily or inadvisedly.

I regret exceedingly that my necessary absence from Washington, in connection with the establishment of the Federal farm-loan banks and other public business, made it impossible for me to submit this report to the Congress at an earlier date.

Respectfully, W. G. McADOO, Secretary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is a plain, simple question of whether or not the House desires to continue nine Subtreasuries at an expense of $450,000 a year, at least, as shown clearly by the Bureau of Efficiency, for the benefit of the business men and the bankers located in these particular nine cities——

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not yield. I have not the time. I have only five minutes.

A privilege which is not shared by any other city or any other section of this entire country. Now, as has been stated, Mr. Chairman, these Subtreasuries perform only three fiscal functions in behalf of this Government, and those are, first, they receive deposits of the Government, they cash checks drawn upon the Treasury, and they are charged with the cashing of coupons and bonds of the United States Government. Every single one of those functions is now being performed by other agencies. For instance, we have now 761 national banks which have been made Government depositories of this country, and those banks receive the deposits from post offices and all other Government establishments in the section in which they are located. And, as said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], those banks cash checks drawn upon the Treasurer. In addition to that, they cash the coupon and interest checks, as you gentlemen know. So, as I say, there is not a single function now performed by these Subtreasuries which is not being performed by other agencies of this country to-day. Why, as a matter of fact, these Subtreasuries have cashed only 17 per cent of the checks drawn upon the Treasurer during the last year. Why, gentlemen speak of the fact that they serve as a great place of storage for the bullion and the coin of this country. Do you know, gentlemen, that the nine Subtreasuries contain to-day only 17 per cent of the entire amount of gold? They contain only 32 per cent of the silver, and, as the Bureau of Efficiency in their very able report shows, it is entirely feasible and practicable for all that gold and silver to be stored either here in the city of Washington or in the mints and assay offices located throughout the country.

So I repeat there is not one single plea, gentlemen, which can be confidently relied upon by those who oppose their abolishment and in support of their arguments. It is simply a question as to whether we, representing the people and representing the Treasury, shall vote $450,000 a year to maintain Subtreasuries, which became of no use, particularly after the establishment of the Federal Reserve System.

Why, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] why he has not favored the abolishment of these Subtreasuries during the past years. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that since the passage of the Federal reserve banking act, only two or three years ago, the necessity for these Subtreasuries ceased, and the gentleman from Illinois has stood for their discontinuance since that time. As a matter of fact, the Government now relies upon the banks of this country to assist in floating its bonds. And they have done so with splendid success and without disturbing interest rates or causing the least economic disturbance. No gentleman has claimed that any of these Subtreasuries rendered any service in the floating of the liberty bonds of the past. The only real claim insisted upon by those who favor the maintenance of these Subtreasuries is, I repeat, that they serve as a convenience to the business men of the cities in which they are located; and I for one am not willing, gentlemen, to stand here and by my vote undertake to tax the people I represent and the people of the entire country in order to give a special privilege to nine cities in this country to the exclusion of the others. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the plain proposition. Why, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury came before the committee and, as I read these hearings, the only real insistence he made and the only real point which he pressed was that these Subtreasuries should not be abolished during the war.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has referred to a letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury a year or two ago. These hearings disclose that the only person who appeared before this committee in support of the maintenance of these Subtreasuries was the newly appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Leffingwell. I hope that this House, in the interest of economy, will vote down this amendment to strike out the paragraph. [Applause.]

These Subtreasuries could be immediately abolished without the least injury or loss; but, to meet the objection of the Assistant Secretary and also to deprive the opposition of the cry that nothing of the kind should be undertaken while the war is in progress, the committee has recommended that they be continued until six months after the war. The nine cities in which these Subtreasuries are located are already peculiarly favored. All of them either have a Federal reserve bank or a branch bank. Every one of the Representatives from those cities, with one or two notable exceptions, have very earnestly urged their retention because they afford some convenience to the bankers of those cities, who have already been so highly favored by the Government. But why should we gentlemen representing equally important sections, which do not share their benefits and which do not even have a branch of the Federal reserve bank, vote to retain them at a cost of $450,000 a year to the people of the entire country? They served a useful purpose in 1846, when they were established, but under our advanced and splendid present banking system their usefulness has entirely disappeared, and we ought to have the courage of our convictions and abolish them in the interest of economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DYER. I have an amendment that I wish to offer in order to perfect the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 63, line 20, after the words "San Francisco," strike out all down to and including the word "Germany," in line 23, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on or before January 1, 1919."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now comes on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. IGOE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 92.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. VARE took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 99.

So the motion to strike out the paragraph was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of workmen and other employees, $440,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LINTHICUM). The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I do so to inquire the reason for this quite considerable increase for wages of workmen. I would like to know whether it includes the employment of additional workmen or simply an increase of the wages of those already employed?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It does not provide for an increase of wages. The increase is made in order to take care of three shifts which they are running now on account of the great mass of coin.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of War, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; assistant and chief clerk, who shall sign such official papers and documents as the Secretary may direct, $4,000; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; clerk to the Secretary, $2,000; stenographer to the Secretary, $2,000; clerk to the Assistant Secretary, $2,400; assistant chief clerk, $2,400; disbursing clerk, $2,750; appointment clerk, $2,250; four chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; superintendent of buildings outside of State, War, and Navy Department Building, in addition to compensation as chief of division, $500; chief telegrapher, $1,800; clerks—6 of class 4, 7 of class 3, 15 of class 2, 20 of class 1, 5 at $1,000 each, 2 at $900 each; foreman, $1,200; carpenters—1 $1,200, 1 $1,080; chief messenger, $1,000; skilled laborer, $1,080; 6 messengers; 9 assistant messengers; 2 telephone switchboard operators; engineer, $900; assistant engineer, $720; fireman; 6 watchmen; 3 watchmen, at $660 each; eight laborers; hostlers—1 $660, 1 $540; 4 charwomen; in all, $155,940.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Subtreasuries.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUCKER). The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Temporary employees: For the temporary employment of such additional force of clerks and other employees as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be proper and necessary to the prompt, efficient, and accurate dispatch of official business in the War Department and its bureaus, to be allotted by the Secretary of War to such bureaus and offices as the exigencies of the existing situation may demand, $10,277,250: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall submit to Congress on the first day of its next regular session a statement showing by bureaus or offices the number and designation of the persons employed hereunder and the annual rate of compensation paid to each: Provided further, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation in excess of $2,400 per annum, and not more than 30 persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation in excess of $1,800 each per annum.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the committee has any detailed information on what this $10,277,250 is to be expended?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is to be expended for extra clerical help deemed necessary to continue the force of clerks now employed in the War Department and to provide additional clerks.

Mr. MADDEN. How many of them are there?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are 9,006 employees. They are paid an average salary of $1,006.

Mr. MADDEN. How long have they had 9,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have been putting these clerks on, I will say to the gentleman, from time to time since the war began. This roll was submitted to the committee on January 19, 1918, and I may say I have no doubt but that they have increased the number of clerks since that time. They are constantly adding to the number of clerks down there.

Mr. MADDEN. Who fixes the compensation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The compensation is fixed by the Secretary of War under the limitation provided in this paragraph.

Mr. MADDEN. This has nothing to do with the War-Risk Bureau, has it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It has nothing to do with the War-Risk Bureau.

Mr. MADDEN. This is in addition to that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The War-Risk Bureau is in the Treasury Department. This belongs to the War Department. The gentleman will notice that not more than 30 shall receive compensation more than $1,800, and none shall receive compensation more than $2,400.

Mr. MADDEN. I notice that. Do the civil-service rules apply to these?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; the civil-service rules apply to them.

Mr. MADDEN. Before appointment they pass the civil-service examination?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Civil Service Commission states that it can now furnish eligible lists to all the departments. There was a time shortly after the great necessity came up for putting on so many clerks when they did not have a sufficient eligible list. At that time appointments were made temporarily, pending an examination.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not that the case to-day?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think not, from the statement made by the Civil Service Commission to the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the employing heads of the bureaus pay no attention to the civil-service rules. In most cases, I think, they send for the people they want and put them in.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MADDEN. I know of several cases where they sent for them and put them in—not anybody I was interested in—but I know the cases, and they were told they would be given ample time to pass the civil-service examination, and all that would be necessary was that they should pass it some time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They were put on with the understanding that they would stand examination within 60 or 90 days, and if they do not stand it and secure a grade entitling them under the law to an appointment they lose their positions.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is easy to secure the grade. I think the civil-service examinations are merely perfunctory now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the examination is sufficient to determine their fitness.

Mr. MADDEN. To enable them to get under the wire. The highest compensation paid out of this appropriation is $2,400, and the number in that grade is limited?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; to 30.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, how do they reach the average compensation paid to those who are below $1,800?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The salary is fixed ultimately by the Secretary of War. I understand that stenographers are now being put on at $1,100 and $1,200, and some at $1,000, possibly.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose the Secretary of War never has anything to do with any of these things except to approve what some subordinate does. Is there not a good deal of likelihood that favoritism can be displayed in fixing these salaries by subordinate officers in direct charge?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true; and, of course, there is no sure way to remedy such a situation. The only way it can be partially remedied is to give the very small margin that is given in this bill for an increase. Of course, there is no way to fix the salaries of these clerks who are put on temporarily on account of the war.

Mr. MADDEN. I wonder if the committee has made any investigation as to whether more people are employed in these bureaus than they need? I ask this question for this reason: I was told by a person whom I consider reliable only two or three days ago that an allotment of 200 clerks was made out of appropriations already granted or to be granted to a certain bureau in the War Department; that out of that allotment they had already made 100 appointments; that one of the Efficiency Bureau men was to be in this particular office on a certain day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall have to object.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about the temporary clerks in the departments.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me so that I can tell this?

Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment. Then I will yield to the gentleman.

I want to say a word in regard to these temporary clerks in the War Department. It is true, and it is necessarily true that if you have at the head of any particular branch of the War Department a man who is not himself careful in checking up the matter of additional clerical help, you may have more men employed than ought to be, and I think one of the situations that is inevitable, growing out of an expansion such as we have had, is that you will have in some departments more clerks than can possibly be used, who are in the way, whereas you have other departments where there are fewer clerks than are actually needed. But I know no way of correcting that abuse legislatively under conditions such as now confront the Government and confront the country, where you must go forward, and I am taking occasion to make this statement in order to emphasize the responsibility that rests upon the various administrative officers in the War Department and in the other departments of the Government. Upon them must rest the responsibility of checking any abuse where abuse may arise.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. What I have said has not been said in any captious spirit, of course, but only for the purpose of getting the information into the RECORD, and I wanted to give to the committee the information which I had obtained from the source that I was endeavoring to describe. I should like to finish that statement. The statement came that one of the men from the Efficiency Bureau would be in that office on a certain day, and that they had not work for the 100 clerks already appointed. The man in charge of the office went to the clerks, or some of them, and said, "Now, the efficiency man is coming through. This office is allotted 200 clerks. If you do not seem to be busy when he comes through, we are not going to be able to get them." I do not know how you are going to overcome that except by emphasizing the need of the head of the bureau assuming responsibility for proper conduct of the work.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the answer to the gentleman's statement is this: Assuming it to be true, if the person who made such a statement to the clerks is identified, he should be separated from the service in just as short a time as it takes to issue an order to that effect.

Mr. MADDEN. I am going to try to identify him.

Mr. SHERLEY. I repeat that upon the administrative officers must rest the responsibility for the efficient administration of these departments, because we can not make that inquiry which would enable Congress as such to determine how many clerks are needed in particular offices.

Mr. MADDEN. I think you are right.

Mr. SHERLEY. This ought to be said in justice to some of these situations: Naturally men who see in advance a very great increase of activities in their bureaus hesitate to reduce the number of clerks, either that they have or that they have asked for, out of the fear that they will get in a jam and be unable to get additional clerks allotted to them and then be censured for not getting the work done, which is so important to be done. So there is a tendency on the part of the administrative officers to play safe in connection with the number of clerks and employees that they have and need. Now, the committee has tried to give sums that did not represent the full demand of the department——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for two minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LINTHICUM). The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. We did this with the idea that we would thereby compel the departments to make efficient use of the clerks that they have and get. Then if they need a greater number subsequently they can come to Congress and prove their case. It has been one of the most difficult problems confronting the Committee on Appropriations. There is no absolute solution of the problem, except that when cases of manifest abuse arise they should be brought to the attention of the responsible heads, and I feel warranted in saying that they will gladly act to prevent the continuation of such abuses.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say in this connection, if I may, that I am sure the gentleman and his associates on the committee will do everything within their power. I do not know of anybody who is more anxious to accomplish the best results than is the gentleman from Kentucky, and he has the confidence of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. The committee have tried to deal with this matter, which is so important, but there are limitations upon the committee, and I am glad of the opportunity to call attention again in this public way to the duty that rests upon administrative officers of taking up the slack in their respective offices and holding down, as far as possible, the need of additional clerks. There is no more patriotic service that can be rendered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Surgeon General: Chief clerk, $2,250; principal assistant librarian, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; chemist, $2,100; assistant chemist, $1,600; pathologist, $1,800; microscopist, $1,800; assistant librarian, $1,800; anatomist, $1,600; entomologist, $1,600; photographer, $1,500; 2 translators at $1,800 each; clerks—14 of class 4, 13 of class 3, 26 of class 2, 36 of class 1, 13 at $1,000 each; 2 at $900 each; engineer, $1,400; skilled mechanic, $1,000; 2 messengers; 11 assistant messengers; 3 firemen; 3 watchmen; superintendent of building (Army Medical Museum and Library), $200; 6 laborers; 4 charwomen; in all, $185,740.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] if there are any changes in this bill, so far as this particular office is concerned?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; there are two—the position of entomologist at $1,600 and a photographer at $1,500.

Mr. DYER. Can the gentleman state with reference to the library? I see there is a principal assistant librarian, and then there is another assistant librarian. Is one of those positions new?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no change in the library service. The only changes in this paragraph are the two that I have indicated.

Mr. DYER. Are these two assistant librarians located in the Medical Museum library?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does this bill carry the appropriation for the library itself?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Nothing except the force.

Mr. DYER. Nothing for the purchase of books?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The expenses of the library are appropriated for in the Army bill. This bill carries simply the force necessary for the maintenance of the work of the library.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I feel that Congress has not of late years been giving the necessary consideration to the Surgeon General's Office. The work that that office has done during the past two years, and is doing now, is of the greatest consequence. Wherever Congress can help to make it more efficient we ought to do so. The young men of America go to the Army in good physical condition, and if they are injured or become ill while in the service they should receive all needed attention. One of the greatest drawbacks to genuine efficiency in the Medical Department of the Army is the lack of rank for officers of the Medical Corps and the Medical Reserve Corps. There is now a bill pending before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House to remedy this condition. According to the present law the ranks for officers in the Medical Reserve Corps are first lieutenant, captain, and major. Legislation now pending provides for ranks in addition to the ones mentioned, of lieutenant colonel, colonel, brigadier general, and major general. There is a genuine demand from the medical profession of the country for a law that will permit promotions along the lines indicated in this bill on account of the great value it will be to the health and welfare of soldiers. A recommendation involving the efficiency of the Army, because health is necessary to efficiency, given by a medical officer to a line officer of superior rank fails to carry weight necessary for such an important recommendation. This has been the experience of many officers in the past and has been responsible for this demand for advanced rank. The number in the Regular Medical Corps now on active duty is 775. Volunteer physicians in the Medical Officers' Reserve Corps to the number of 12,855 are now on active duty. As you well know, physicians of the highest standing in the profession are now in the military service with the rank of major, the Army, therefore, losing the benefit of their experience and knowledge because of a lack of power to enforce their recommendations. Advanced rank carries with it this power.

Recently Dr. Franklin Martin, member of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, sent a letter to Hon. WILLIAM J. FIELDS, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, with reference to this legislation, and I am including a copy of this letter and the exhibits which he attached to same. I believe that it will be of great value in making the Members acquainted with the needs and importance of this legislation pertaining to the Surgeon General's Office. The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 27, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM J. FIELDS,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The executive committee of the General Medical Board of the Council of National Defense, after careful consideration, unanimously recommends that Senate bill No. 3748, introduced by Senator OWEN, and House resolution No. 9563, introduced by Representative DYER, be passed. Those present and voting at the executive committee meeting were as follows: Surg. Gen. William C. Gorgas, United States Army; Surg. Gen. William C. Braisted, United States Navy; Dr. Charles H. Mayo; Dr. William H. Welch; Dr. Victor C. Vaughan; Dr. F. F. Simpson; and Dr. Franklin Martin.

We believe that the medical profession of America would stand squarely back of these bills and request that they be enacted into law, and when the importance of this legislation is appreciated by the laymen we believe they will demand that there be no discrimination against the doctors.

As this bill introduced by Mr. DYER will be brought before your Committee on Military Affairs, of which, I understand, you are a member, I am inclosing the following memoranda for your information:

Exhibit A, the bill with explanations.

Exhibit B, details comparing Medical Corps, United States Army, existing and proposed, with same corps of principal foreign armies.

Exhibit C, statement of Secretary of War Baker asking that the Army be given equal rank to that of the Navy.

Exhibit D, other statements.

Yours, very truly,

FRANKLIN MARTIN,
Member of the Advisory Commission.

EXHIBIT A.

A bill (H. R. 9563) fixing the grades of the commissioned officers of the Medical Corps and of the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army on active duty, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the commissioned officers of the Medical Corps and of the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army on active duty shall be distributed in the several grades in the same ratios heretofore established by law in the Medical Corps of the United States Navy.

The Surgeon General shall have authority to designate as "consultants" officers of either corps and relieve them as the interests of the service may require.

Explanation of Senate bill 3748, introduced by Senator Owen, and House bill 9563, introduced by Representative Dyer, in the Senate and House, respectively, on February 5, 1918.

RATIOS OF COMMISSIONED OFFICERS IN MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF NAVY AS AT PRESENT EXISTING.

EXHIBIT C.

Secretary of War Baker demonstrated that he desires recognition for the Medical Department of the Army when, on January 16, 1917, he stated to Congress:

"I wish to strongly emphasize that without legislation giving the Army equalization of rank in the higher grades with that of the Navy the branch of the Government of which I am in charge will be done an obvious injustice, the detrimental effect of which to the Army is too clear to require more than a statement. All the reasons which have been urged for the creation of these grades in the Navy so as to efficiently handle the units properly composing a command to be under the direction of such officers of the Navy are present in at least an equal degree in the Army. As Congress, after a full consideration of the subject, wisely decided on the advisability of giving the Navy these grades in order that it may be properly and efficiently officered, for similar reasons it should now provide similar grades for the Army.

"The embarrassment which arises in every branch of the service when brought in contact with other officers of foreign service of superior grade but not existing in our service is identical.

"But the constant embarrassment arising between the two services in the disparity of rank is too apparent to call for any more mention.

"If in all those joint matters in which the Army and Navy are concerned, the Navy, by reason of the position of the superior grade, is entitled to outrank the Army, the Army must, perforce, regard itself and be looked upon as a subordinate branch, and this is too inequitable."

EXHIBIT D.

STATEMENT OF DR. WILLIAM J. MAYO.

The Medical Reserve Corps asks for increased rank in order to increase its efficiency. The members of the Medical Reserve Corps have made great sacrifices financially and professionally on entering the service. They are men, as a rule, beyond the draft age. They have obligations and duties of a civic and social character which require a high percentage of their incomes while in practice. The most desirable of these men between the ages of 35 and 50 have, in the majority of cases, family obligations such as the care of dependents, insurance, paying for a home, etc. When the war is over they will go back to meet competition intrenched against them during their absence.

In spite of these handicaps, the medical profession has risen to the occasion. Its members have made the sacrifice. They only ask that during the time they are in service they shall have working conditions which justify the sacrifices. In the Army military rank is essential. A man is judged not according to his personal ability, but according to the rank conferred upon him. A man of low military rank with high professional attainments has the authority and influence only which accompanies his military rank. Our men serving abroad have no standing in military conferences because of lack of rank.

It is the desire and intention of the medical profession to put the best men in the Medical Reserve Corps regardless of personal consideration. There are now nearly 15,000 under orders. I am frank in saying that with or without increased rank the medical profession will bear its burden, but it looks to Congress to treat the Medical Reserve Corps as well as the other branches of the service and to uphold the dignity of the medical profession.

EXHIBIT E.

GREAT BRITAIN'S EXPERIENCE.

Lord Esher, who in 1904 was chairman of the committee which reorganized the English war office, then was opposed to what the medical profession deemed adequate authority and rank. But on February 3, 1917, just 13 years later, he wrote:

"How much of the suffering undergone by our soldiers since the war began has been due to the shortsightedness of my committee, and notably of myself, will never be known. Certainly the control of the adjutant general's branch over the royal army medical corps was and is responsible not only for the early failure to grip the medical factors of the war, but they hampered conditions under which the surgeon general has worked. His triumphs and those of the royal army medical corps have been achieved in spite of obstacles that the subordination of science to ignorance and of elasticity to military discipline explains but can not justify."

A MEDICAL OFFICER'S EXPERIENCE DURING THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

On July 17, 1898, the chief medical officer at Chickamauga made nine recommendations concerning improvements of sanitary conditions in that camp which were ignored. Later on, during an investigation of these conditions, the commanding officer spoke of the letter containing these recommendations as follows:

"I did not regard his [the medical officer's] letter in a very serious sense. I do not know how he came to write it. There was much complaint in that camp from men of his own profession as to his action. He caused me more trouble and annoyance than anyone ever did."

This statement was made by an officer who had been repeatedly mentioned in orders for his bravery and skill as a line officer. Had the recommendations contained in the letter which annoyed this senior line officer been taken seriously in July, the fearful harvest of sickness and death in August might have been averted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Chief of Ordnance: Chief clerk, $2,250; chief of division, $2,000; principal clerk, $2,000; clerks—8 of class 4, 10 of class three, 17 of class 2, 36 of class 1, 12 at $1,000 each, 5 at $900 each; 2 messengers; assistant messenger; messengers—2 at $780 each, 2 at $720 each; laborer; in all, $126,210.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, in the next paragraph I notice it is provided that the entire expenditures for the purpose stated in that paragraph for next year shall not exceed $800,000. To whom is this amount to be paid? Does it include, for example, the payment of the gentlemen from the Ordnance Department, whom I see on the streets and around in the hotels wearing uniforms and spurs?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; this applies only to draftsmen and civilian employees. It does not apply to the men in the Army, either officers or privates.

Mr. LITTLE. Those clerks in uniform, and wearing spurs, who are in the Ordnance Department, are in the Army, are they?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are no clerks in uniform.

Mr. LITTLE. What are they? There are men in uniform who work in the departments, at desks.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I take it they are officers or privates in the Army, who have come into the Army in the regular way, either by commissions or enlistments.

Mr. LITTLE. I am informed that they are doing clerical work and holding desk positions there.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are a considerable number of very high officers who are doing work of that nature.

Mr. HAYES. Are there not some yeomen, too?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In the Navy, yes; yeomen employed as clerks, doing clerical work.

Mr. LITTLE. I notice gentlemen in officers' uniforms who, I take it, have had very little or no military experience in war, and I wished to find out whether they are included in this bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are not included in this bill. There are, of course, a great many officers who have been commissioned and brought here, who are assigned to work in the department, doing necessary office work.

Mr. LITTLE. That depends on what you mean by necessary. Better methods might make many unnecessary. It is not necessary to keep soldiers in Washington to do civilian's work. War is a soldier's business. Wars are not won in swivel chairs. Can the gentleman tell us whether it is essential that they should wear spurs?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is governed by the Army Regulations.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will yield.

Mr. HICKS. I want to say to my friend from Kansas that I think that the men to whom he refers are reservists, brought into the service in that way. In investigating the conditions of the Navy we found that these reservists are performing a splendid work, and I have no doubt that they are in the Army.

Mr. LITTLE. Do they have to wear spurs?

Mr. HICKS. They do not wear spurs in the Navy.

Mr. FOSTER. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LITTLE. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. These clerks in the department that are wearing uniforms as officers, put on the pay roll, are doing civilian duties purely as clerks and only doing that kind of duty. They are nothing but paid clerks and yet are wearing the uniforms of officers.

Mr. LITTLE. That is it.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask if these men are ever ordered into the service?

Mr. HICKS. They are subject to orders in the Navy Department to be ordered anywhere the department requires.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman know whether these officers, who are performing no duties as officers, but wearing the uniforms, drawing the pay and emoluments that go with it, on the pay rolls as clerks, never had a minute of training as military officers in their lives, are these men expected to go out and do any kind of duty as a soldier or are they to remain in the service as clerks and draw pay as officers?

Mr. HICKS. I can say to the gentleman that yeomen are enlisted in that special service, and if they are sent out of the country they do similar work abroad.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; as I understand, the yeomen are assigned to a battleship and are put in the offices here to do clerical work. Of course the young ladies working in the department would not be assigned to a battleship, but young men are assigned to a battleship and then put in the position as a department clerk. They may get an assignment to a battleship; but what I was getting at is that these clerks, or many of them—I do not know how many—are there only as clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, if the gentleman will yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. What I was getting at was, What in the world is the use of making these men officers with no intention of their doing anything but clerical work? I do not understand it. There may be some mysterious "hocus pocus, elecampane, e pluribus unum," about it, something that I know nothing about. [Laughter.] But I would like some information as to why it should exist.

Mr. MADDEN. Most of these men that come in here are men that have technical knowledge, a mechanical knowledge, which the Ordnance Department must have and which men in the service have not got. They have to have a technical knowledge in order to get the appointment. They need men with this technical knowledge who can make plans, who can give the technical terms to things that the department needs to buy. All of these men are preparing for the successful conduct of the war all along the line. They are subject to be ordered to the front and are ordered to the front as soon as they get through the particular work which they are doing.

Mr. FOSTER. I can see so far that my colleague is right on that proposition, that there are many men throughout the country having technical knowledge that are called here to get additional training or do special work in some line in which they are specially adapted and may render special and very valuable service to the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. They come here to give training and not to get training.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not apply to those who are only clerks.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It applies to all the officers.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it does; but what I am getting at is in the line of suggestion made by the gentleman from Kansas, why a man that comes here and does purely clerical work, knows nothing about mechanical technicalities, or specially fitted for certain work, and who knows nothing but the clerical, routine part of the work—why should he be an officer in uniform?

Mr. MADDEN. Let me answer that. If that was true, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] would be right, and so would my colleague; but how can you prove that it is true by casual observations? The way to find out what they are doing is to go down and investigate the technical work that they have to do. I want to say that if the gentleman does do so, and spends a day or two, he will be amazed at the technical knowledge that they possess and which they are giving to the Government of the United States for nothing. I know a man that gave up $50,000 a year income to come down here and take a clerical job. He did not want any clerical job, but he wanted to give his services to the Government. He did not come here looking for a place; he came here to give his experience, and he is giving it. If in giving his experience he is required to sit at a desk, give up all he has in the world, he ought not to be condemned for it.

Mr. FOSTER. He will not be condemned for it and should not be. He should be commended for giving to the Government the benefit of his knowledge with much less pay than he had been receiving in civil life. I also agree that there are many of these young men who may be in the service now who will later be sent to France to do this technical work for the Government, but it seems to me that men who never expect to do anything but clerical work and have no other knowledge could serve just as well without being made officers.

Mr. LITTLE. The men I referred to did not come here with any technical knowledge. I happen to have in mind a man who came here because he was out of a job, and he got a good job in the department as an officer at a good salary. He did not bring any technical knowledge, and very few I have observed down there did bring any technical knowledge. They are just a lot of good fellows, good men, that got jobs. I have no objection to it. It seems to me that West Point and the Naval Academy, however, ought to be able to turn out enough of these people to handle these technical jobs without going out into civil life. Is it possible that we have to go to the other colleges to get our technical information for the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I promised first to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS].

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I think the class of men that the gentleman from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, referred to were the clerks——

Mr. FOSTER. Purely clerks.

Mr. KEARNS. That have been clerks in the War and Navy Departments for the last 10 or 12 years. I happen to know of two or three instances where boys—one of them in the Navy Department, two others in the War Department—had been working on salaries of $1,000 or $1,200 a year for the last three or four years in these departments, but when this war was declared were commissioned as first lieutenants. The work they do now is no different at all from the work they were doing before. They are working at the same character of employment, and the only difference is in the amount of salary that they receive now and the clothes that they wear. They are dressed in the uniform of the Army or the Navy and their pay has been increased to that of a first lieutenant or captain, and they are doing the same kind of work that they have been doing ever since they have had their positions, which has been now four or five years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman still yields to me?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. What I want to know is how these clerks got into these uniforms and the consequent increases of salary that go with the uniform. There are other clerks working down there at the same jobs they had who went in, possibly, at the same time and at the same salary of $1,000 or $1,200 a year. Some of the clerks get a uniform and a title and an increase of salary, which eliminates them from any other kind of military duty, while the clerk working alongside, getting the same salary, is still subject to military service elsewhere. I would like to know how these fortunate clerks got their appointments.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this before somebody else asks me another question that is longer than my speech, that the principal business of the American Army is to win the war. This war is not going to be won in Washington, and gentlemen better get over that idea if they have it at all. It is going to be won on the firing line. As far as I am concerned, I would like to see an order made to-morrow that every man with a uniform on in Washington be sent to the front, where they ought to be. This is not the place for soldiers. I see a vast army of men running around with pretty uniforms and spurs. They are needed elsewhere. I said nothing so long as they stuck to uniforms, but when a man gets such a martial spirit that a clerk down in a department has got to wear spurs, I think it is time to send him to the firing line. He is entirely too bold and brave a man to be kept here in Washington.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Just a moment. I will be through in a minute. I do not say this in any unkind spirit, but this war has become a tremendous enterprise, and every man who can shoot ought to be where he can do so. The first instruction I ever got in the service that I had, from a Regular Army officer, after he had looked at my skirmish line of 1,000 men which I took out to show him at Camp Merritt, in San Francisco, was to the effect that I had too many men behind the firing line, too many sergeants and corporals, and that I had better put them in the firing line, as I had too many sergeants and corporals for the number of privates I had. They should all be put on the firing line, where they can shoot. If these fellows are clerks, let them take off their uniforms. If they are clerks, let them quit wearing spurs and ruining the ladies' dresses at the hotel dances. If they are soldiers, for God's sake send them to the front, where they can fight for their country like the other brave fellows over there. If they are civilians, let them so dress. We must get our eye on the ball.

Gentlemen, no man ever learned to be a soldier or a sailor in a department.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] asked a question a moment ago as to why Annapolis and West Point could not turn out a sufficient number of officers to take these men's places. The great need in the Navy at the present time is for line officers for active sea duty. We have not enough for our ships, let alone putting them in the departments. My friend must realize that the work these men are doing is of vital importance behind the lines, as vital as if they were at the front. They are highly skilled men, and I know the Navy Department greatly appreciates their services. One reason why they wear the uniform is as a matter of discipline. I found from close investigation that it was the opinion of those in the department that these men are under better discipline if they have the uniform than if they have not, and they are just as patriotic, just as enthusiastic about winning the war in these departments, wearing the uniform, as they would be wearing those uniforms at the front.

Mr. LITTLE. Then, for God's sake let them go to the front and give them a chance to fight. There is no discipline necessary for a man to walk from his hotel down to the department and back. Discipline the gentleman has in mind is to handle large bodies of men in large bodies. There was sound of revelry by night at Brussels, but Waterloo was only a mile or two away. The strength of this great giant Republic must not be wasted on half immaterial things. Every nerve should be strained to get fighting men on the firing line. This war is not to be won by men laying their jawbones on the altar of their country, who never did or would respond to the bugle call. Samson was the only man who ever licked anybody with such a weapon. The battle will not be fought on rostrums or at desks by civilians in Army clothes or by rhetoricals. This is a soldier's war.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the gentleman thinks of an order that has been promulgated that no person from civil life can get a commission under the Government. Now, if this is to be the rule, how will you fill positions of which you are speaking if all these men are taken out of the department and sent to the war front?

Mr. LITTLE. Fill them with other clerks who do not wear uniforms.

Mr. ROSE. Is the gentleman opposed to having commissions given to men in civil life who are specially qualified for the work required of them?

Mr. LITTLE. No; but why should men have a commission to sit at a desk at the War Department just the same as officers who command men? That is what an officer is for; not to sit at a desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the logic of the position of the gentleman from Kansas is just this: He would send all officers and all soldiers to the firing line, as he says, and have them absolutely at the mercy of a lot of civilians in the department who know nothing about war here, but who are charged with its administration.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. Does not the gentleman realize the people I am talking about are nothing but civilians down here who are wearing uniforms and know nothing about war? That is the kind I am talking about.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman made the statement they should be sent to the front, and that those places in the War Department ought to be filled entirely by civilians. Now, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said, those men are brought here and given commissions because they possess technical and expert knowledge about various subjects, men who understand saddlery, men who understand metals——

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think I can cite him to concrete cases where persons on the House pay roll, appointed by Members, were given commissions down in the War Department as first and second lieutenants.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If that was true I venture——

Mr. HAMLIN. I know it is true.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman states it is a fact of his own knowledge, I also know it is true, but I will say to the gentleman that I venture the assertion that in those cases they were required to go through the training camp——

Mr. HAMLIN. No, not at all; that is exactly the point.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee (continuing). Before they could get a commission, or to stand the prescribed examination.

Mr. HAMLIN. No; that is exactly my complaint. They go down there and without going through camp training or any kind of preparation, except a little conference, perhaps, which they may have with some official in the department, they are given a commission, putting them on an equal rank with the boys who went through three months of intense, hard training, and I say that it is not right.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know anything of the individual cases to which the gentleman referred, but I happen to know that the secretary of a very prominent, influential Member of this House went through three months' hard training and did not get his commission except as a result of the training that he received in the training camp at Fort Myer.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. KEARNS. The only complaint that is being made here, I will say to the chairman, is this: That there have been a lot of clerks—I do not know how many, possibly hundreds of them—who have been acting as clerks in the War Department and Navy Department in Washington, and immediately when war was declared lost their identity as clerks and they were put into a uniform and were called officers and now get an officer's pay. That is the complaint that is being made here. It is not about some men who have come here from Chicago or New York, who have given up positions where they were making $50,000 a year to come here; it is not that class of persons complained about at all. Many of this latter class are doing much useful and patriotic work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know any specific case where clerks in a department have been granted commissions without the necessity of taking the training prescribed in a training camp or standing an examination?

Mr. KEARNS. Absolutely so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know any of such cases?

Mr. KEARNS. I know three cases personally—I know this. I know further I was in the habit of going to the War Department and the Navy Department before this war was declared, and in a very few weeks after—their faces there were not missed—the same clerks you had seen sitting at their desks were at the same places, doing the same kind of work, and they were dressed in a uniform and I suppose getting a lieutenant's or captain's pay.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And every one, I will say to the gentleman, is subject to orders to be called to active duty at any time.

Mr. KEARNS. They ought not to be subject to call, because they are not competent, because they have never had any experience. They have not had any military training.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Let me say this to the gentleman: I venture this assertion, and I make the assertion upon a general statement made by a prominent officer of the War Department, that in the cases to which the gentleman refers those clerks are not drawing pay as officers. They are probably on the reserve list and are now receiving the compensation they received as civilian clerks, and when necessity arises for their being called to active duty then they will receive the pay of an officer and be placed upon the active list.

Mr. KEARNS. I do not want to be inaccurate——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to make a correction there if I am in error, because I do not want it to appear that I made any false or careless statement. I said I know this to be true. I know they are there; I know they wear uniforms; I know they have had no military training and that they do the same work that they did as clerks before the war; but I have no means of knowing what salary they are drawing, and I would not stand here and say that they are drawing the salary of officers when I do not know what salary they are getting; but I do know that they have been dressed in uniforms, and that they are captains or first lieutenants, as disclosed by their shoulder straps or insignia; but I have been told that they now draw these officers' salaries.

I can not, of my own knowledge, say what salary they are getting. I do know that the other part of the statement is absolutely true.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand the gentleman, and I fully agree with him on this point, I think it is no complaint against the kind of men that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] spoke of, who have technical knowledge, and who have come here and given up their business to serve for practically nothing, and who are rendering valuable services to the Government—many of them. Those are not the men we have been talking about.

Mr. KEARNS. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. And what I wanted to find out was if these men who were here expected to be assigned to work in the Army later on or whether they were simply clerical men who expected to stay here; not men of technical knowledge, not men who know about matters of the Quartermaster Corps, not men who know anything about the Ordnance Department, but men who are simply doing the clerical work. What is to become of them and why is it necessary to put a uniform on them?

Mr. MADDEN. All of these men are begging to go to the front, I will say.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, no.

Mr. KEARNS. That is the character of men about whom this complaint is being made this afternoon, and it is not the class of men as referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] a short while ago. We are merely talking about these clerks in the departments that have been promoted to lieutenants and captains, when they are doing identically the same character of work that they have been doing ever since they have held their positions in Washington.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman asked a while ago whether the pay they received was the pay of the rank which they were given in the Army.

Mr. KEARNS. I do not know.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have one man in mind whom I know went from a position under this House. He was not even a clerk here. He went down to the War Department and was given a commission, put on the uniform and insignia of his rank, and went into the employ of the Government as a full-fledged officer. Now, unquestionably he draws the pay of the rank given him. He did not know anything about military matters, and could not be ordered to the front to take charge of men, as it would be criminal to put that kind of man in charge of men to command them.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I was speaking to a naval officer the other day, and in the office there were 18 clerks, and 17 of them were ordinary clerks wearing the uniform of the seamen in the Navy. One was a young woman, who did not wear the uniform, but was a clerk the same as the rest. There are 17 alleged private seamen. They tell us they need officers for the Navy and they need seamen, too. There is where they could get 17 of them, and I would refer my friend from New York to that place, although I do not want to give the boys away.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman permit me just a moment? I want to say to my friend from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] that at the present time the Navy needs officers, but they have stopped enlisting seamen, because we do not need any more seamen.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to strike out the last word. I would like to finish this thing. I could suggest to the gentleman that there are a lot of chief petty officers in the Navy that were employees of the City National Bank of New York, that were appointed down here to hold clerical jobs. I am told we have nearly twice the clerical force London has, and their army three times as great as ours.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in response to a question asked by the gentleman from Ohio in reference to pay, that these commissioned officers here in town in this "safety-first" brigade draw not only the pay of an officer of equal rank who is out with the soldiers, but in addition to that they draw commutation for quarters and for light and heat. For instance, take a second lieutenant—I mean a real lieutenant—who is with the Army, he gets about $140, I think it is, or $141, a month as salary. Now, take a second lieutenant here in Washington City, who did not have to go to the training camp to get his commission, but was commissioned and assigned to duty here in Washington, and he gets $141 plus about $32. And as soon as you take him out of Washington City, out of this perfectly safe billet, and send him off with the troops—which is not going to happen with many of these, in my opinion, in spite of their desire to go to the front, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]—as soon as he is put in the Army to render service as a real soldier his salary is reduced.

A second lieutenant, $32; a first lieutenant, still more; and a captain, still more, and so forth. Of course, nobody thinks that is right. Now, I believe there is an injustice——

Mr. FESS. Why is it done?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was the law before the war came on that when an officer was taken away from his command and sent to Washington they allowed him, if second lieutenant, as I recall, $12 each for two rooms, plus commutation for heat and light; a first lieutenant, three rooms, and a captain four rooms, and so on up. We find ourselves now with just as many commissioned officers away from the troops as with the troops; that is, out of 125,000, approximately, of commissioned officers about 62,000, approximately, are staff officers; that is, like the young men you see here in Washington, many of them, I was about to say most of them, majors. I tremble sometimes for the Kaiser when I think what will happen to him when all of these innumerable majors we see in town are sent across and turned loose on him. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. That is what I want to do.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman evidently intends to prosecute a campaign of frightfulness. [Laughter.]

There is no justification for it, and none can be had. There are about 62,000 commissioned officers, staff officers, and there are only about 62,000 line officers, that is approximately true, as I understand it, with the troops in France and in the cantonments. I have been told that it was stated on high authority that the reason that many of these gentlemen were given these staff commissions was because they would accept positions here in Washington if they were commissioned as officers of the various grade, at less pay than they could be had if they were not commisioned into the Army and permitted to wear the uniform of the rank that was given to them.

Now, I think that undoubtedly when the proper time comes this House will correct this, and will see to it that the men with the troops are paid as much as the men who are assigned to duty here in Washington of equal rank and that they alone will be permitted to wear the uniform. I am not questioning the patriotism of these young men here, nor the efficiency of the service they are rendering. I sometimes question, however, the fact that they are real soldiers.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They are rendering just as good service as I am to the Government or as many other people in the Food Administration or in the Fuel Administration or in any other administration. They are rendering efficient and effective service, I may admit. I am not questioning that. But they are not soldiers, and certainly they are not entitled to draw more pay from the Government as lieutenants and captains and majors than men of equal rank who are in the Army.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If I have time, I will yield.

Mr. BORLAND. I just want to ask the gentleman if he is advocating the doing away with this commutation of quarters and the special allowances? If he is, I think I am quite in agreement with him.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The thing I have in mind is that if we make a distinction and give commutation to one man and withhold it from another, it should be given to the soldier with the troops, and it should be taken away from those assigned to billets in this city.

Mr. BORLAND. We have it in the foreign service.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If there is any distinction, it should be in favor of the soldier with the troops.

Mr. BORLAND. It seems to me the gentleman is right about taking that commutation away in the case of officers who are on detail.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move a pro forma amendment to strike out the last two words. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, it seems to me it might be well for me to say just a word along this line.

The situation is very much as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has just stated it. In other words, while he has made a somewhat humorous statement, still I can not say that he has not made a quite accurate statement of the situation as it stands. By a construction of the law that was passed many years ago for a good purpose it has come about that an Army officer here in Washington or elsewhere not with troops draws the same pay as in the field, and in addition to that he draws his commutation for quarters. If an officer here in Washington is transferred out to Camp Meade, he leaves his family here in Washington or somewhere else, as he must, for he can not take them with him to the camp, and he loses his commutation of quarters on the theory that he is furnished quarters in the field, which consist of a tent or a cubby hole in an officers' barracks. At any rate, he loses his commutation of quarters.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me just for a moment?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. He is supplied quarters when he is with the troops in theory, or given a tent. When he is in Washington City he has two, three, four, five, or six rooms, according to his rank, on the theory that he needs those to take care of his family.

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Now, when he goes to his troops there is no provision whatever made for his family.

Mr. TILSON. That is just what I was trying to say. The gentleman has stated it accurately.

Now, that is not right. It ought to be corrected. The committee of which I am a member is now considering a bill which it is believed will correct it.

There are three plans that have been proposed. One is to cut off all commutation of quarters and put every officer on the same level in this regard, wherever he may be. Another is to give every officer commutation of quarters, wherever he may be, in the city, in the field, or anywhere else; that is, give all officers either the actual quarters for themselves and their families in a post where there are proper quarters erected for them, or give them commutation of quarters.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Why does the gentleman make a distinction between the officer and the enlisted man? If the officer should have commutation of quarters for his family, why should not the enlisted man?

Mr. TILSON. The enlisted man does have commutation, and comparatively high commutation.

Mr. RUCKER. For his family?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. He has commutation that will take care of his family in a way.

Mr. RUCKER. That is interesting, and I confess I am ignorant of it. As I understand it, the enlisted man's compensation or pay is $30 a month.

Mr. TILSON. It is. But suppose a man is sent in from Camp Meade to do some work in Washington. His pay at Camp Meade is $30 a month. In Washington it is about $80 a month, in all. The commutation puts it up. The enlisted man is not specially militated against as compared with the officer. It is the officer in the field who is discriminated against as compared with officers not with troops.

Mr. RUCKER. I did not know that the enlisted man had those allowances.

Mr. TILSON. I was stating the different plans that had been proposed by different individuals to correct this injustice. Some propose dispensing with commutation entirely. It is thought that would not be well in time of war, and that when the enlisted man's pay has been increased it would not do to lessen the commutation and thereby the compensation of the officers. Still, I say, there are those in favor of abolishing it altogether. Still others favor making a distinction in favor of the officer who has a family. If a man has a wife and children, so much in the way of quarters or commutation should be provided for them: while if a man is without a family, none would be provided if this plan were adopted. All these things have been and are being considered, as the committee now has a bill on that subject under consideration. When the bill comes before the House you will have in mind the different plans proposed to meet the injustice and be prepared to aid in its correction.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. NOLAN. A discussion took place a while ago on the indiscriminate issuance of commissions to men who were not doing actual military service. I have this in mind—the Army transport service in connection with the Quartermaster's Department. Prior to the war the superintendent of the Army transport dock at San Francisco was superintending engineer with civilian employees. That is one instance. Then you go into the Signal Corps, and you find that commissions have been issued to timber cruisers and loggers and other men engaged in the production of spruce timber for aviation work.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman object to it?

Mr. NOLAN. I was wanting to know if your committee had under consideration an idea of keeping those men as civilians and giving them proper compensation and if it was necessary to issue commissions to men who are not actually identified in the fighting branch of the service? If it is good in time of peace to have those men as civilian employees, is there any particular reason why they should be commissioned in time of war?

Mr. TILSON. There are a good many reasons on both sides of that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to ask him a question, too.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, which I am not going to do, this discussion is all out of order. There is nothing in this bill bearing on commissioned officers or having anything to do with the subject under discussion. I am not going to object to this, but I do ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. TILSON. I shall not use any time except to answer questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KEARNS. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I shall have to insist on the point of order that the discussion be confined to the subject matter of the bill. We are frittering away the whole afternoon in discussing something that ought to be discussed in consideration of the military bill.

Mr. KEARNS. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have one minute to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I want to get some information on this subject.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I must say to the gentleman that I do not profess to have the information which the gentleman wants, unless it has something to do with the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. KEARNS. It has everything to do with the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. TILSON. I am not asking any more time, but I am at the service of Members if I can answer any questions.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no objection to the gentleman having five minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, I understand there is a portion of this bill which relates to commutation of officers' quarters.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not in this bill. It is in the military bill. There is nothing in this bill having to do with this subject matter.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. TILSON. I do not understand that I have been granted the time to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. No action was taken by the committee. There was a reservation of objection made.

Mr. LONERGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] be permitted to address the committee for an additional five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask that my request be submitted, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the expiration of five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first submit the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] which is that his colleague [Mr. TILSON] may have five minutes to address the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. We appreciate that the gentleman has had a great deal to do with military matters and is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and has special knowledge with reference to that matter. Let me say to him that I have had a good deal of complaint from officers out in the field that they can not buy their clothing through the Quartermaster Department but that they have to buy it through private individuals, and that an overcoat costs them four or five times as much as it would if they were permitted to buy it through the Quartermaster's Department, and that a uniform costs three or four or five times as much as it would if they could buy it through the Quartermaster Department, and other things in proportion. I want to ask the gentleman if the Military Committee is considering a bill that will give any relief to these officers in the field, so as to permit them to buy uniforms and overcoats and things of that kind through the Quartermaster Department.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, so far as I know, there is no law forbidding officers to buy their clothes through the Quartermaster's Department. I can speak somewhat from personal experience, for during a service in 1916 of five months in the field I think I bought from the Quartermaster's Department everything I needed that the Quartermaster's Department had.

Mr. HASTINGS. Has the gentleman the same information I have, that they are not permitted to do that now?

Mr. TILSON. As I understand, there has been a lack of quartermaster's supplies, and that they have been issued first to the enlisted men, just as they should be. As a matter of fact, there are a number of things that an officer wears that are not sold by the Quartermaster's Department at all. The Quartermaster's Department does not have them on hand. For instance, those parts of officers' uniforms which differ from the uniforms of enlisted men are not kept on sale by the Quartermaster's Department at all, for, as you know, there is no provision in law for paying for officers' uniforms, except by the officer himself.

Mr. HAMLIN. Perhaps I may be able to give a little information to the gentleman from Oklahoma on that point.

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have received this information almost at first hand. I understand that, just as the gentleman from Connecticut has stated, there is no regulation to prevent the purchase of these things through the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. TILSON. I never heard of any.

Mr. HAMLIN. A few days ago an officer told me there was none, but the trouble is that the Quartermaster's Department does not have these things and can not get them.

Mr. TILSON. That is correct; at least it has been so during the rapid expansion of the Army.

Mr. HAMLIN. Because the privates must first be served.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Right there may I make an inquiry of the gentleman? The gentleman says the Quartermaster's Department can not get them. I understand the fault for the high cost of officers' uniforms lies in the fact that the manufacturers of cloth put the price up about 300 per cent when the war started.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no doubt that is true.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is the sole cause of the trouble. If the retail tailor can buy cloth, of course the Quartermaster's Department can buy it.

Mr. TILSON. After all, the cloth is not the chief cost, any more than it is in the suit of clothes which the gentleman has on this minute. The cost of the cloth as sold by the manufacturer is a very small proportion of what he paid for that suit.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman is not correctly informed about that as far as the officers' uniforms are concerned, for the cloth is so enormously high that it has come to be a serious element. It is a scandal.

Mr. HAMLIN. I know that there is a great difference in the cost between the charge for uniforms through the Quartermaster's Department and the private store. My son is an officer in the Army, and I went with him when he bought an overcoat down town. For a coat that he could buy at the Quartermaster's Department, if they had it, for $20, he had to pay $50.

Mr. TILSON. I have an overcoat that I wore occasionally while serving on the Mexican border two years ago that was made as an enlisted man's coat. I bought it through the Quartermaster's Department and paid $22 for it. By slight changes it was made into an officer's overcoat. As good an overcoat made by a military tailor would have cost me twice as much.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The services of skilled draftsmen and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary may be employed only in the office of the Chief of Ordnance to carry into effect the various appropriations for the armament of fortifications and for the arming and equipping of the National Guard, to be paid from such appropriations, in addition to the amount specifically appropriated for draftsmen in the Army Ordnance Bureau: Provided, That the entire expenditures for this purpose for the fiscal year 1919 shall not exceed $800,000, and the Secretary of War shall each year in the annual estimates report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that paragraph was read and debate closed on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] asked about the $800,000 appropriation in it.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to take this occasion to discuss the question of officers' uniforms.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not start a discussion on officers' uniforms, for it has absolutely nothing to do with this bill. This is for clerical services in the department.

Mr. KEARNS. If it has nothing to do with it, I want to ask the gentleman a question about the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would be glad to allow the gentleman to talk about uniforms if I could have a guaranty that it would not start a general discussion.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the discussion on the uniforms be confined to five minutes and that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to use the five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this discussion on uniforms be confined to five minutes and that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to use the five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, through the kindness of the gentleman from Illinois I will proceed to discuss the question of uniforms for officers in the Army. Prior to the declaration of war officers could get through the Quartermaster Department uniforms at cost to the Government.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman only refers to the cloth?

Mr. KEARNS. No; many officers have told me the uniforms were obtainable. Uniforms that at one time could be had for $20 through the Quartermaster Department are now costing at cantonments from $60 to $90, as testified to by numerous officers.

I have a letter which I received from a young officer now located at Camp Sheridan, in Alabama, who says that the same uniform that could be bought by a lieutenant for $20 at the beginning of the war now costs $60 to $90 at Camp Sheridan. They are required to go out to the various merchant tailors in the city and buy the uniforms at exorbitant prices.

The city council of Montgomery, since the location of the cantonment there, I am told on authority that I believe is reliable, has passed an ordinance requiring the payment of an exorbitant amount of money by way of a license fee by any tailor who comes into that town and sets up a tailor shop after the passage of the ordinance. That is done so that the tailors in Montgomery, Ala., can continue to pick the pockets of the officers located in that cantonment. Even the city council seems to fear any newcomer might refuse to join the trust organized by the old profiteering gang. It seems to me that if the Committee on Military Affairs is at this time getting up a bill to regulate conditions prevalent in the Army, it ought to have a clause in it providing that the officers can buy at cost to the Government their uniforms, because I want to say that there are by far too many people in the United States, where there is a cantonment located, as far as my advice goes, who are busily engaged every day, not only in picking the pockets of the officers but of every man who wears the uniform of the United States.

I was told that an officer—I am not going to disclose his name or cantonment—was in a store when 8 or 10 privates entered to purchase some article that all the soldiers need and which on the market was worth about 10 cents. When the company of soldiers went into this store they were asked by the clerk a dollar for the article. There was only one clerk in the store and the officer took him in the back part, engaged him in conversation, and I suspect gave orders to the men to help themselves. However this may be, they got what they wanted, and I am told paid nothing for it. If the officer gave such an order

I think he ought to be complimented for it by all patriotic and honest and honorable men. [Laughter.]

When any man or any merchant in the United States will take advantage of the men who are wearing the uniform of their country, these boys that are soon to go to France fighting that man's battles, and fighting yours and mine, when these merchants undertake to pick the pockets and rob these men who are going to fight for their homes, I think it is time that somebody interfered. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the War Department, $75,000.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. This is an item for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the War Department, $75,000. Is that an increase over the amount heretofore carried in the bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; it is a decrease of $10,500.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is what I thought.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then, I will state further, that the pending deficiency bill carries about $250,000. That is now pending in the Senate.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Which would be about $240,000 increase. If this bill carries $75,000, a reduction of $10,500 over that which has heretofore been carried, and the deficiency bill carries an appropriaton of $250,000, there would be a net increase of $240,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In that bill; but a very considerable decrease in this bill for the next fiscal year.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What I am trying to get at is this: Is there any portion of the $250,000 or the $75,000 being expended for buildings that ought to be permanently owned and occupied by the War Department, or is it all for temporary quarters during the war?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. These are for rented quarters in various parts of the city.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. When the war is over will they be needed?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That will depend on whatever force is needed. I take it that if the building program in the deficiency bill, which was adopted by the House, goes through, that practically all of the space required by both the War and the Navy Departments will be supplied in these temporary buildings to be erected in Potomac Park.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. When the war is over they will be torn down, of course?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the general understanding.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am informed a rule is soon to be brought in, when this bill is concluded, to make it in order to pass a bill for the acquisition of the old Arlington Hotel site and the completion of a building thereon for the use of the Navy Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Treasury Department.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have heard it both for the Treasury and for the Navy Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My understanding is that it is for the War-Risk Bureau and the Internal-Revenue Office.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Of course, that is not in harmony with the Fine Arts Commission and is not in harmony with any plan for beautifying Washington, not in harmony with anything commonly decent in the matter of public buildings. It is a temporizing and reaching out and taking hold of buildings for temporary purposes, and that is practically all it is. I was wondering if there is a sentiment in the Committee on Appropriations of the same kind that apparently has actuated the committee that is going to bring in that rule? I think it will be a standing disgrace to Congress if we construct a patchwork of buildings like that throughout the city.

Mr. BORLAND. These parties seemed to have a site for sale. That seems to be the idea.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And at a price about three times as much as it was sold for originally. I do not want to take up further time here, but it seems to me this is a matter of the deepest concern, and if it is the disposition to bring in bills to construct some sort of permanent buildings for the Navy Department and the War Department, and this measure having come in for the Treasury Department, where are we going to stop?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course, the gentleman understands that the buildings authorized in the deficiency bill are purely temporary in character?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is all right, and I agree to that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the Arlington site, which I understand has been recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, is for permanent use by the Government.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman inform us whether it is the disposition of his committee to support that proposition?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is not before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is there in the gentleman's mind any reason why the Treasury Department can not be accommodated by temporary structures as well as the War Department?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That would be entirely possible, if it is thought feasible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Navy, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,000; private secretary to Secretary, $2,500; clerk to Secretary, $2,250; private secretary to Assistant Secretary, $2,400; clerk to Assistant Secretary, $2,000; disbursing clerk, $2,250; appointment clerk, $2,000; estimate clerk, $1,800; stenographers—1 $1,800, 1 $1,200, 1 $1,000; clerks—1 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 5 of class 2, 5 of class 1, 1 $1,100, 6 at $1,000 each, 1 $900; 3 copyists; carpenter, $900; 4 messengers; 4 assistant messengers; 4 laborers; messenger boys—4 at $600 each, 1 $420, 1 $400, 1 $360; in all, $82,860.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the committee, if he will permit. Was there any testimony before the committee in regard to an extra Assistant Secretary of the Navy? I know that matter has been discussed, and I was wondering whether any appeal had been made for an increase there.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; no such suggestion was made to the committee.

Mr. HICKS. I would like to ask one other question with respect to the next item. I understand that in the War Department about 9,000 temporary employees have been arranged for. About how many does this item provide for, roughly?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. While that information is being looked up, I will say to the gentleman that, as he knows, there is hardly an office in the Navy that has not a great number of yeomen in it——

Mr. HICKS. Yes; I know.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Who perform clerical services. I think there are some of those bureaus down there that have as many as 200 of these yeomen.

Mr. HICKS. Yes; I was just wondering about how many extra temporary employees are carried in this bill in its entirety.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I shall endeavor to get the gentleman the information, if I can put my hands on it.

Mr. HICKS. I do not want the gentleman to take the time if he has not it there, as I do not want to unduly interrupt the reading of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will furnish it to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the pro forma amendment I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, in view of the fact that this bill is almost entirely confined to work here in the District of Columbia——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Altogether, so far as these particular departments are concerned.

Mr. FESS. I noticed in the paper this morning that at least 30,000 new people will come to the city within the next few months to satisfy the demands of the various departments, and we all know that already so many have come that the question of lodging them has come to be quite serious. We have not yet any law providing for extra housing facilities here in the District, have we?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not for the lodging of employees of the Government, no; but there is a bill, I understand, which has been introduced and which is before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds providing for $50,000,000 for housing—no, I beg the gentleman's pardon, that, I believe, is in reference to shipyards.

Mr. FESS. This House passed that, the shipyard bill, some time ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe that bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and is now on the calendar.

Mr. FESS. Does that work a relief to the present congested conditions, which will increase in the near future? That is, may we expect such expedition as will meet these increased demands?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That looks, as I understand, to a relief of the present congested conditions, and also anticipates the future in so far as the housing of Government employees is concerned.

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend that in conversation with a gentleman only last night he said that he doubted whether there was a single vacant house in the District of Columbia, and he also said that he was notified when his lease would expire that it would be necessary for him to vacate the house he now lives in or purchase it, and, I might say, he is a man in uniform, brought here by the Government at a greatly decreased salary over what he was receiving when he came, and he came as many another, simply as a matter of devotion to the Government. The reason I asked the present chairman was not so much the general housing proposition as whether the Navy item in this bill which we are now discussing was satisfied in accommodations.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, they are no more satisfied than the other departments, I may say.

In so far as these new clerical employees are concerned, I agree with the gentleman it is a very serious question, and I think this Government must take the matter up in the future and do something to provide for these clerical employees. I do not think the trouble arises so much on account of the situation in which commissioned officers find themselves. It is the clerks who come here at these salaries of eleven and twelve hundred dollars, many of them girls, who ought to be looked after and provided with suitable and comfortable quarters. As the gentleman has just said, that seems to be something they can not secure here now on account of the great number who are coming here from day to day.

Mr. FESS. If the commissioned officers are without quarters and thus embarrassed, it goes without saying that quarters for the clerical force would be still more embarrassing to find.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Precisely.

Mr. FESS. My concern is whether there is any legislation sufficiently speedy by which we can reach the present situation, which will be cumulative, according to our best information.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has just stated that the Committeee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported——

Mr. STAFFORD. They have either reported or are considering a bill for the housing of employees in the District of Columbia. I am not certain whether it has been reported or not.

Mr. BORLAND. Will these clerks want to live in barracks, even if we build them?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will pardon me further, I believe it has been suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that to meet the pressing need that will arise as the months go by to house the clerks that are coming to the District of Columbia in such large numbers it would be feasible to erect buildings facing the Plaza, and after the war is over and there is no further need of those buildings for housing the clerks they could be sold, to be utilized for hotel purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I would ask for five more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman from Ohio think that these clerks would be willing to live in barrack-like quarters that would be provided by the Federal Government, some very plain structure that would be simply a question of a roof over their heads? Does the gentleman think they would come and accept the service and payment under those conditions?

Mr. FESS. I think there would be a great number who are coming in connection with the war work, which must be merely temporary, who will be willing to accept such conditions as the emergency demanded. I do not believe that the Government ought to go into the business of housing permanently without at least an exhausted investigation by commission or otherwise; but temporarily we have no choice, we are compelled to do something; it is quite apparent, and probably nothing better can be done than a system of barracks. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to say it is my judgment that if the authorities of the Government would enter upon some definite policy to be of a permanent character, and go out in selected portions of the District and select additions where can be erected detached houses with a little yard and garden spot, and then make arrangements to sell to the permanent clerks upon the installment plan, something like the loan associations, and make the places accessible, if necessary by the construction of transportation lines, it would be a real improvement on the part of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. FESS. I think that can be done, and I would prefer that plan to housing in barracks for temporary purposes. However, I agree that such a plan would not meet the immediate needs owing to the time it would take to make it effective.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That provision is in the bill providing for the housing of the Emergency Fleet Corporation employees.

Mr. FESS. Detached houses and payments on easy terms?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Making provision for the housing of the employees and to enable them to buy their homes upon the installment plan, with long-term payments and at a low rate of interest.

Mr. FESS. That is the important feature I had in mind. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman should take into consideration in solving this problem that the Government is confronted with the need of providing facilities for unmarried persons who are not seeking dwelling houses, but quarters for lodging. I would suggest it would be far better to meet the pressing need for housing facilities for these clerks, most of them young women, who are coming to the District, and will come in the next six months, possibly to the number of 16,000, that there should be buildings erected on the order of the buildings in Chicago, New York, and in all the large cities, by the Young Women's Christian Association.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Supervised by some Government official; and that would provide for home life more or less on the order of college dormitories. If the gentleman is acquainted with the dormitories at Smith College, or Wellesley, or Mount Holyoke, or Vassar, or Bryn Mawr, he has noticed that the quarters there would be a model for the Government to provide suitable quarters for these temporary employees that are coming here to aid the Government in the war exigency, but not with the idea of making it their permanent home. It is to provide buildings, with many rooms, along the lines of dormitories, rather than separate homes, as suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. What I had in mind about the separate homes was to give opportunity to those permanently employed here to secure their own homes upon payments that they could meet.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would not meet the pressing need for the accommodation of those clerks that are coming and will come here at the rate of a thousand or more a month. We will be obliged to find accommodation for them if the work of the Government is going to increase.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the gentleman. I would like to add in this connection that I have never been favorable of Government construction, such as I referred to a moment ago, and ordinarily I would still much prefer to leave it with private enterprise. But the present situation has been compelling in its results upon Government services. The immense demands placed upon housing facilities here by war requirements enable the residents to demand their own prices and exact their own figures. Perhaps we should not find fault. But I am persuaded that the only way to reach the real estate requirements is for the Government to take this step as a permanent policy. In that case I would prefer the character of house I mention.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and wish to say something just along the line suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The other Governments have done that very thing. In England, particularly, they have spent enormous sums, nearly a billion dollars so far, in providing houses and housing facilities and what they call the amenities that go with it. That is particularly true for the young women who are unmarried and who go away from home to those centers of activity where various materials are being manufactured for war purposes. They have these housing facilities, which are fairly comfortable. They are chaperoned by some woman who is experienced in welfare work, with a large corps of assistants; and they make the employees not only comfortable, but make them thoroughly happy. They do not stop merely at building a house to keep the rain off of them, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], but they do a great deal more than that; and there is no reason why that can not be done in this country just as it has been done abroad. There are many reasons why we might have difficulty in inducing a number of efficient clerks to come here, and if the war continues we will necessarily have to increase the proportion of female clerks in these establishments. Now, if we are to bring them away from their homes, it is the duty of the Government to surround them with proper environment.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Could that plan of housing be consummated soon enough to meet the pressing needs now?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I think so. I do not see why it could not. I understand it is very likely there will be a general housing bill reported to this Congress shortly with that in view.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman that I will supply him with the information about the estimated number of employees in the Navy Department.

Mr. HICKS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The number of temporary employees is in the neighborhod of 700. There are 1,339 reservists and a thousand on the regular force. In other words, there are 3,000, including the regular force, the temporary force, and the reservists, exclusive of officers.

Mr. HICKS. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I merely want to say a word in regard to the matter that my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] and my friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS] have brought up, the question of housing of Government employees in temporary quarters.

While in England last fall I had occasion to observe the method empolyed there of housing unmarried women employees of the Government. It was at Gretna Green, where there are some 20,000 people employed in the great explosives works. Ten thousand of them are women, a majority of whom are unmarried and without families. They have erected dormitories, which they call "cubicles," one-story buildings, accommodating 96 women each. The front part of the building, which was, I suppose 80 feet or 100 feet in length, had an assembly room where the girls could meet socially. Then there was a room for the matron and one for the assistant matron, who look after the girls. There was a kitchen where the girls could be supplied with their simplest wants, like tea and possibly breakfast. They go out for their main meals to community dining rooms. Behind that large assembly hall, built at right angles to it, three one-story wings projected, and each one of these wings accommodates 32 girls. They are built in the dormitory style, the partitions separating the little rooms or cubicles extending only part way to the ceiling, which allows free ventilation and light throughout the dormitory. These little cubicles are about 6 by 8 feet and are furnished with a bed, a little bureau, and a chair, and each is decorated according to the taste of the occupant. The matron told us that at first the girls, who, by the way, take care of their own rooms, did not decorate their walls. This was always true of the newcomer, but as they met other girls pictures, pillows, and knickknacks would appear. The roof was of tarred paper, and, as I remember, the siding consisted of ordinary siding boards nailed upright to the frames with cleats to keep the weather out, and the building was heated by coal stoves, as I recall. These cubicles were extremely comfortable and homelike, and they made a great impression upon all of us to see how expeditiously the housing problem was handled and how quickly the buildings could be erected and how many people were housed there in perfect comfort and contentment. I do not see why our Government can not do the same thing for our employees here. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and printing of nautical books, charts, and sailing directions; copperplates, steel plates, chart paper, packing boxes, chart portfolios, electrotyping copperplates, cleaning copperplates; tools, instruments, power, and materials for drawing, engraving, and printing; materials for and mounting charts; reduction of charts by photography; photolithographic charts for immediate use; transfer of photolithographic and other charts to copper; purchase of equipment for the storage of plates used in making charts and for the storage of Hydrographic Office charts and publications; care and repairs to printing presses, furniture, instruments, and tools, including the purchase of a hand press; extra drawing and engraving; translating from foreign languages; telegrams on public business; preparation of pilot charts and their supplements, and printing and mailing same; purchase of data for charts and sailing directions and other nautical publications; books of reference and works and periodicals relating to hydrography, marine meteorology, navigation, surveying, oceanography, and terrestrial magnetism, and to other professional and technical subjects connected with the work of the Hydrographic Office, $90,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. What is the reason for increasing this appropriation threefold? It would seem as though this particular activity of the Hydrographic Office would not be increased by reason of the war emergency to any such extent as that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is on account of the very great increase in the number of ships.

Mr. WALSH. In the number of ships in the Navy?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Ships in the Navy, and also in the merchant marine. This office furnishes navigation charts without cost to the Navy, Army transports, and Government vessels; and inasmuch as they are being increased in number to such a very great extent, it will require more money.

Mr. WALSH. I was not aware that the merchant marine had been increased to any such extent as that, or that it would be during the coming year, nor that there had been any such great increase in the Navy. Of course, they have put to work a lot of these little scout patrols, but they do not all require many charts.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The ships which have been taken over by the Government, as the gentleman knows, represents a very great number.

Mr. WALSH. But they all had to have charts before being taken over by the Navy in order to navigate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. These charts have to be corrected from time to time. This item also involves an increased expenditure for copper plates and chart paper. There has been an increase of 30 or 40 per cent in the cost of chart paper. Then there has been great increase in the cost of necessary tools and instruments. That is a considerable item. For instance, the Chief of the Hydrographic Office stated that he expected to expend $20,000 for tools and instruments this year and next year, as compared with an expenditure of $11,000 in 1917.

Then, there is another fact that I will state to the gentleman: Formerly the office secured foreign charts from the British Admiralty; but that practice is not pursued now, and it becomes necessary for the office to furnish those charts at its own expense.

I repeat that these charts are furnished to the Navy and to the Army transports and all Government vessels free of charge. They are sold to private shipowners, but I do not know at what price.

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that those charts are sold to private shipowners at 50 cents apiece.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman; and last year those sales amounted to $22,356.10. In peace times they would have been sold for $10,000. That shows a greater activity on the part of this office.

Mr. WALSH. This does not include any contingent expenses, of course. There is a separate item for that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This item is for the actual printing of the charts. It also includes purchase of chart paper, copper plates, tools of all kinds; in fact, all of the equipment, including a multitude of items. The gentleman will find all of them enumerated in the paragraph. I will state to the gentleman that Admiral Schroeder stated that the former supply of foreign charts was stopped during the war. He said:

During the war that was stopped. We received notice from the British Admiralty, which, of course, is a great seagoing nation, that they could not any longer furnish us with charts. Up to the time of the war the chart dealers in the seaports bought almost all their foreign charts from the British Admiralty and sold them. When we received word that the British Admiralty would not sell them any more charts, then we proceeded to make them ourselves. In the first half of 1917 there were 207 new charts, not copies of charts, but 207 new charts prepared in our Hydrographic Office, and in the last half 455 new charts were produced in order to supply the demand that had been supplied from the British Admiralty before.

Mr. WALSH. Were those charts of foreign waters?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They were.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. I would like to make a statement in regard to this item which I think may be interesting to the House, although I am not sure whether the appropriation covers it or not. A short time ago I was in the office of the Geodetic Survey and was very much impressed with an invention which had been perfected by an employee of that office, developing a new device for deep-sea sounding. Of course, gentlemen know that the application of the principle of Lord Kelvin made it possible to take soundings at enormous depths without the actual measuring of the distance. A glass tube, coated on its inner surface and incased in a heavy weight, measures the sounding. The principle involved is the increase of water pressure with increase of depth; the distance which the water forces itself up into the tube, being translated into pressure, records the depth. By this method ships can take soundings without reducing their speed.

The employee in the Hydrographic Office developed a method whereby, instead of using the colored glass on which the water made its mark, and which was both expensive and liable to breakage, it was possible to measure the quantity of water that would force itself up into the tube. Of course, the greater the depth, with the resultant greater pressure of the water, the larger the amount of water which will force itself up into the tube.

That invention was perfected, as I say, by an employee of this department, and I think that perhaps some of this money is going to be used in the perfection of that device, which will effect a great saving to the Navy of the United States and produce a very valuable deep-sea device at less expense to mariners than those now on the market.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, referring to the augmented amount of money required in marine meteorology, on page 87, and terrestrial magnetism and oceanography, and so on, the condition of war makes it necessary, because the hazards and dangers to vessels on the ocean require a better charting of all these dangerous places, and our Government seems to have been called upon to do a good deal of that work, so that the increase to me is not strange. Indeed, it is strange that no greater increase has been occasioned by the war. That situation has been dealt with for about three years.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to my friend from Ohio that the U. S. S. Bear was wrecked on the coast of California because of the failure to chart a submarine valley in the ocean. The Government in that case suffered a loss of about a million dollars because of the lack of a proper chart.

Mr. FESS. Is it not also because of the hazards of following defective charting that our vessels are required to take a new course?

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will permit right there, the British Government provides what are called Blue Back Charts, and I think they have sold them privately at $3 apiece, whereas ours are sold at 50 cents apiece. The British charts are marked with red or yellow spots to designate lighthouses and lightships, thus making these aids to navigation more easily discernible. Ours have no distinguishing marks at all, but I think our charts are now considered to be at least the equal of the best charts in existence at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Observatory: Astronomer, $2,800; assistant astronomers—1 $2,400, 1 $2,000, 1 $1,800; assistant in department of nautical instruments, $1,600; clerks—1 of class 4, one of class 2; instrument maker, $1,500; electrician, $1,500; librarian, $1,800; assistants—3 at $1,600 each, 3 at $1,400 each, 2 at $1,200 each; stenographer and typewriter, $900; foreman and captain of the watch, $1,000; carpenter, $1,000; engineer, $1,000; 3 firemen; 6 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; 9 laborers; in all, $47,040.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations a short while ago had some very interesting hearings on this subject. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee something about it. It was developed in those hearings that this was the most expensive observatory in the world. It costs a great deal more than the observatory at Greenwich, or any of the observatories in this country or any other country, perhaps twice as much. As I am advised from these hearings, about nine-tenths of the activities of this bureau and nine-tenths of the money expended are for astronomical observations and calculations of various kinds that have no particular relation to the Navy. The rating of chronometers and the inspecting of nautical instruments is done at the observatory, but this requires no very high degree of scientific knowledge or expertness. The committee had some of the most distinguished, perhaps the most distinguished astronomers in this country either before them or communicated with them by letter, and there was no controversy among them on the proposition that that bureau should not be under the Navy Department. The records and observations of this observatory have never been of any particular use to the astronomers of the country or of the world, because they do not stand particularly high in that special branch of scientific research. The reason for it is patent. Under the law a naval officer is detailed there as the superintendent. He is usually a man who does not necessarily have, and in fact almost necessarily does not have, that degree of learning and expertness that ought to be possessed by the man in charge of the best equipped and most expensively maintained observatory on the face of the earth. I noticed in a letter, I think from the professor of mathematics, Prof. Eichelberger, of the Naval Academy, the statement that the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, established in 1675, was at that time—1913—being presided over by the ninth superintendent—nine in 243 years, an average of about 27 years for each superintendent, whereas here the average is perhaps less than 2 years. It occurs to me that there can be no question that this observatory ought to be presided over by some civilian, some distinguished astronomer who could pursue his observations through the years, so that the world would get the benefit of this very large expenditure of money both for equipment and for maintenance.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose the reason why the period of service here at our observatory is so short is that generally some naval officer whose term of service has nearly expired on account of age is assigned to this position.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Unquestionably there have been some very efficient astronomers developed there, but that is very rare. The professors at Harvard, at the University of Wisconsin, at Chicago University, and various other astronomical observatories in this country all coincided in that opinion; and having read the testimony in the hearings, the matter having been called to my attention sometime ago—and I took occasion to look it over again the other day—I was wondering what induced the committee, after that hearing, to take no action on the matter. Nobody testified to the contrary. All the scientific men of the country agreed that it ought to be taken from the Navy and put in charge of some civilian astronomer of high standing. I would like to ask the gentleman why the committee took no action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I ask five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that the hearing to which he refers was held before the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill. As a matter of fact, the Appropriations Committee has no authority to make any such changes as the gentleman suggests. It is a matter that would require legislation by Congress.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; but the gentleman realizes that his committee does frequently make suggestions at any rate touching legislation in the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But I submit that there is never any suggestion of legislation of such very grave importance as that to which the gentleman refers. Now, this Naval Observatory, referred to by the gentleman as being the most expensive in the world, is, as he has stated, something more than an observatory; it is a great workshop. It furnishes to all the ships in the Navy their chronometers, their sextants, their compasses, their binoculars, and all of their navigating instruments.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It does that same thing at Mare Island for all the ships on the Pacific Ocean. According to the testimony, a very inexpensive establishment somewhere along on the coast could attend to all that at very slight expense. As it is these chronometers which are rated here and the various nautical instruments which are inspected here have to be shipped across the country to be tested and adjusted to a nicety and then shipped back to the port where they are to be used. That all suggests the desirability of having this particular work done on the seacoast.

But that is not more than one-tenth of the work. At least 90 per cent of the work they do there relates to astronomical observations, which ought to be under the direction of some highly skilled and scientific observer, who could pursue his observations without interruption through a long course of years, so as to give this establishment, which is a national establishment, the standing in the scientific world that it ought to have. As it is now it is not very highly regarded by scientific men—certainly nothing like as highly as the observations, calculations, and so forth, that emanate from other observatories in the United States—and I was wondering if the chairman of the committee could give us some reason, aside from the fact that this is an appropriation bill, why this observatory should not be removed from the Navy Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am frank to say to the gentleman that I can not, because I did not participate in the hearings to which the gentleman has referred. The only reason I can give to the gentleman as to why the matter has not been considered in connection with this bill is because it is beyond the jurisdiction of this committee and is a matter that ought to be very carefully considered by the proper legislative committee.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The chairman of the committee at the time, Mr. Fitzgerald, considered it, and I assume that he considered it with a view to taking some legislative action. He wrote the University of Wisconsin, to the director of the Washburn Observatory there, Dr. Comstock, and to the Dudley Observatory, in Albany, N. Y., Dr. Boss, and he also wrote to Admiral or Capt. Eichelberger, professor of the Naval Academy and director of the Nautical Almanac, and to other distinguished astronomers throughout the country. I assumed that he had in mind at the time when he solicited all this information the taking of some legislative action.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand that that was done in connection with the suggestion that the Astrophysical Observatory, which is under the Smithsonian, be transferred to the National Observatory.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is just the other way—that this be transferred to the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. At any rate, it was a question of consolidation, and when it came to making the consolidation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Navy Department insisted that it should not be deprived of the control and jurisdiction of the Naval Observatory, since it has to do with the supplying and correcting of chronometers, sextants, and other nautical instruments.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; and that is but a very small part of the activities of this bureau, which do not require the supervision of any distinguished astronomer. Dr. Comstock divides the activities in his letter into three heads—the preparation of the Nautical Almanac—and I understand the tables for that almanac have been prepared for the rest of the twentieth century; second, those things technical to the Navy; and, third, the astronomical research. He says that nine-tenths of the observatory plant is useless or has only remote relationship to services (a) and (b)—that is, the preparation of the Nautical Almanac and the Navy. There is no question but that it ought to be transferred, and I took this time to see if any reason against it could be suggested.

Mr. FESS. I take it that the letters addressed to the then chairman of the committee, Mr. Fitzgerald, brought back definite answers.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Unquestionably, and very illuminating ones.

Mr. FESS. And the general trend of those answers were what?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The unanimous opinion of all those was that this observatory should be taken away from the Navy Department, gotten out from under the Navy Department altogether, except that they might have a little establishment or laboratory somewhere or other on the seacoast to look after the rating of chronometers and inspection of instruments, so as to not make it necessary after they were adjusted to ship them on a railroad train across the country, and that the rest of it ought to be under some civilian astronomer of such standing as would be a credit to the United States Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We have a number of civilian astronomers of very great reputation now connected with the Naval Observatory.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; but under the direction of a naval officer who is not necessarily very well versed in it, and who is assigned a year and a half or two years perhaps; but the gentleman will certainly understand how much better it would be if we had a great astronomer assigned here with a salary commensurate with his learning and skill, to remain there as they do in every great observatory in the world, through a sufficient period of time to carry on some definite and continued line of study.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask, in response to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], to insert the letters from the various scientists in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Did I understand the gentleman from Tennessee, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi in regard to the failure of the committee to act on the subject, to say that it was its reluctance to load an appropriation bill with new legislation? [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Naturally the Appropriations Committee does not like to make legislation of this character.

Mr. DUPRÉ. It does it when it feels like it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. When the necessities are very great. I have no criticism of the committee, and I do not want the chairman of the committee to understand that I share the suggested criticism.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, perhaps the gentleman from Louisiana is as badly mistaken in the statement he just made as he was on yesterday, when he attempted to show without success that the committee had reported legislation on an appropriation bill which sought to abolish the Subtreasury located in the gentleman's home city at a great saving to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the letters which he referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I think it is extremely appropriate that this discussion should have arisen in regard to the Nautical Almanac and other distant points in the future, because the gentleman from Tennessee has earned for himself an everlasting reputation as a prophet in indicating the particular time when the war will come to an end. [Laughter.]

The letters referred to by Mr. HUMPHREYS are as follows:

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN,
Madison, March 27, 1912.

Hon. J. J. FITZGERALD, M. C.,
Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of March 25 relative to the United States Naval Observatory, permit me to urge upon the committee my judgment that the observatory ought, with all convenient dispatch, to be transferred to some civilian department of the Government. Whether that department be the Smithsonian Institution or some other is of minor concern to the professional astronomer.

The basis for the judgment thus expressed may be inferred from the following summary statement of major elements of dissatisfaction with the existing status: The institution is, I believe, the most expensively maintained observatory in the world, and it is pertinent to inquire what service it renders to the public in return for such maintenance. It does make some return and this may be set forth under three heads, viz:

(a) The preparation of the Nautical Almanac.
(b) Technical aid to the Navy.
(c) Astronomical research.

Nine-tenths of the observatory plant is either useless or has only remote relationship to the service above designated (a) and (b). The preparation of the almanac is intrusted to a special bureau housed at the observatory and under command of its superintendent, but having little real relationship to the observatory. It is not my purpose to criticize the administration of this bureau.

By far the larger part of the permanent plant and of the annual appropriations made to the observatory have relationship only to the form of service above designated (c) and they must be justified, if at all, by the results obtained in this line. I affirm that the great majority of astronomers, both American and foreign, will agree with me in the statement that no adequate justification is forthcoming; that the Naval Observatory is far from holding the position and repute that it should command in view of the liberal support accorded it. Beyond question it is much inferior in standing and repute to the national observatories of England, France, and Russia, and to such institutions as are maintained, for the most part under private auspices, at Berlin, Leiden, Cape of Good Hope, and in this country by Harvard University, Chicago University, the University of California, and the Carnegie Foundation of Washington.

This inferiority in scientific productiveness and public esteem is a direct consequence of the statute requiring that the head of the observatory shall be a line officer of the Navy. Owing to the short terms of naval assignment to duty, the statute effectually secures that the responsible administration of the observatory shall, in general, be intrusted to a person ignorant of its purpose, needs, and opportunities. Its real work must be intrusted to subordinates who, in too many cases, put their best energies into intrigue to secure the ear of each new superintendent that his inexperience may be manipulated for their personal advantage. It is needless to say that men of high ability and professional standing will not, as a rule, accept service under such conditions, and the necessary consequence of these conditions is found in the statute above outlined.

To justify the continued maintenance of the observatory upon the current scale of expenditure, the conditions of service within it must be changed. The most imperative change is the installation of a responsible head with reasonably secure tenure of office, who shall understand the work of an observatory, be capable of guiding it and of securing a proper measure of diligence and continuity of effort in its work. A need scarcely less imperative is that the administration cease to be military in character and become scientific, i. e., the observatory should be transferred out of the Navy Department. Other national observatories render service to both Army and Navy, but are never under military administration.

I expect to be in Washington on April 16 and 17, at which time I should be pleased to appear before your committee or any of its members for such other exposition or conference as you may desire in the matter.

Very respectfully,

GEO. C. COMSTOCK,
Director Washburn Observatory.

DUDLEY OBSERVATORY,
Albany, N. Y., April 2, 1912.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My father, Prof. Lewis Boss, is recovering from a long illness, and as there is some question as to his feeling equal to answering your letter, I will undertake to answer for him.

There have been several attempts made to place a civilian astronomer at the head of the Naval Observatory, and every time the measure has been hung up by the stipulation that the observatory still remains under the Navy Department. No first-class astronomer cares to take a position as head of the observatory when at any moment the observatory and some other portion of the Navy Department may be thrown together under the direction of a naval officer.

It is not that we hold anything against naval officers, for we have the greatest respect for them in their chosen fields. But astronomy is a highly technical science with which a naval officer can not be familiar, and therefore he can not be competent to run an astronomical observatory.

It is claimed by the Navy that as the superintendent of the Naval Observatory is only expected to attend to the administrative duties, a naval officer who has had considerable experience in that line is perfectly fitted for the position. Unfortunately for this view, the superintendent should be a man who not only possesses some administrative ability, but he it is who should outline the policies of the institution and be the final court of appeal for all technical questions. An illustration of the practical working out of the system may give you a better idea of my views.

An excellent administrative officer might save a thousand or two thousand dollars per year (although I think even this excessive in the case in hand), but at the same time, because of his inability to direct the astronomical work, some $10,000 might be lost through misdirected efforts. A naval officer is no more fitted to run an astronomical observatory than an astronomer is to run a man-of-war. Again, in the majority of cases the astronomer who would be appointed to such a position has been in charge of a large observatory, where he has, through experience, acquired a considerable amount of administrative ability. And it is very probable that his greater familiarity with the necessary equipment of an observatory would enable him to administer its affairs far more economically than the naval officer could. Under the Smithsonian Institution the observatory would be connected with other scientific branches of the Government service, which would not only give its superintendent the freedom of action necessary to the success of the observatory, but would be liable to breed in the individual members of the force an esprit du corps which they seem to utterly lack at present.

It is well known that in the eyes of the astronomical world the Naval Observatory has been a failure when one considers the amount of its appropriations.

In point of reputation it ranks well down in the list of the principal observatories of the world, whereas it should occupy one of the leading positions.

A complete reorganization is necessary. In order to make it thorough, there must be an astronomer in charge and the observatory should be transferred to the Smithsonian Institution, so that its superintendent shall be at liberty to make the required changes, subject only to the oversight of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, a scientific man. Lest the word reorganization scare you, because of its frequent association with expenditure, I ought to say that the equipment in most regards seems to be excellent. The reorganization must come in the work itself.

In conclusion I would say that since the naval observatory has not been a success in the hands of the Navy it should be transferred to the Smithsonian Institution, where it would become a national observatory, operated by astronomers, a scientific institution, under scientific management.

Very respectfully, BENJAMAN BOSS.

UNITED STATES NAVAL OBSERVATORY,
NAUTICAL ALMANAC OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1912.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: 1. In reply to your letter of March 25, stating that the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives would greatly appreciate from me an expression of opinion on the subject of the transfer of the Naval (astronomical) Observatory at Washington from the direction and control of the Navy Department to that of the Smithsonian Institution, I would simply state that to get the best results from an astronomical observatory the active management of the astronomical work should be in the hands of a professional astronomer, and his term of office should be from 10 to 20 years whenever possible—the longer the better. Frequently a single piece of work will require from 5 to 10 years for its execution, and sometimes much longer.

2. Probably the two most prominent observatories of the world are the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, England, and the Imperial Observatory at Pulkowa, Russia. The first was established in 1675, and is now (since 1910) presided over by its ninth director (Astronomer Royal). The second was established in 1839, and has at present its fourth director. The Royal Observatory at Greenwich is under the Admiralty, and the Imperial Observatory at Pulkowa under the minister of public instruction.

Very respectfully, W. S. EICHELBERGER,
Professor of Mathematics, United States Navy,
Director Nautical Almanac.

LICK OBSERVATORY, UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,
Mount Hamilton, April 3, 1912.

The Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying with your request of March 25. At various times in the past 21 years I have considered the conditions which exist in the United States Naval Observatory, and I hold the definite opinion that the government of the observatory is indefensible from both the astronomical and naval points of view.

There have always been some well-trained and able astronomers on the staff of the Naval Observatory; but the institution will not take a creditable position until it has an astronomical head. There should be a director highly skilled in the practice of his profession. He should comprehend the great astronomical problems of the day and coordinate the efforts of the astronomers to the end that the observatory take a leading part in solving these problems; he should be the first to foresee the problems of the future, and have the resources of the institution organized for efficient attack upon those problems; and most important of all, he should create within the institution an atmosphere of encouragement and enthusiasm in carrying the plans to a successful conclusion.

Examining the form of government prevailing in the highly successful larger observatories of our country, we find Harvard College Observatory, the Yerkes Observatory, the Carnegie Institution Solar Observatory, and others, each with a director of great astronomical experience, serving not for a three-year period, as in the case of the Naval Observatory superintendents but continuously, and responsible to the president and governing board of the university or greater institution of which the individual observatory forms a part. I see no objection to the proposal.

In years when I was somewhat familiar with the details of Naval Observatory administration, its annual budget was more than threefold that of the Lick Observatory, and nearly twice that of the Harvard College Observatory. The Naval Observatory was, in fact, by far the most expensively administered observatory in the world; and it should have taken a correspondingly creditable and commanding position in the astronomical profession. If the observatory is given the best obtainable astronomical director and a suitable governing board, and, further, if its financial resources keep pace with advancing prices, there is no reason why it should not take its proper place as a leading astronomical institution within a period of five years. I should like to see the name changed to the National Observatory or Washington Observatory.

I have a very friendly feeling for the United States Navy, especially as I have had the opportunity to admire its efficiency in a line of duty to which the Navy is trained; and I hold it as unfair to the Navy Department to expect it to make a success of the administration of the Naval Observatory. I see no more reason why a naval officer, untrained in modern astronomy beyond the mere A B C of the subject, should be expected to administer the observatory successfully than that an astronomer who has never been on the ocean should be expected to command successfully a battleship squadron in action. If I were Secretary of the Navy I should strive to free the Navy Department from responsibility for the observatory.

Yours, respectfully,

W. W. CAMPBELL.

HARVARD COLLEGE OBSERVATORY,
Cambridge, Mass., March 28, 1912.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of March 25 is received. It will give me pleasure if in any way I can aid the plan of transferring the direction of the United States Naval Observatory from the Navy Department to the Smithsonian Institution. Such a plan would commend itself, not only to all the astronomers of the country but to all who are anxious that the best scientific returns should be obtained from an institution for which Congress has made such liberal appropriations. The past history of the Naval Observatory has been very unsatisfactory as regards scientific output. Although it has been claimed that it produced Simon Newcomb, the greatest American astronomer, yet no one felt more bitterly than he did that his work was hampered by the restrictions due to naval management. When dying, one of his last efforts was to see the President of the United States with the result, as you know, of the recommendation by the President in his annual message to Congress, of November, 1910, that the administration should be unchanged. President Taft expressed himself still more strongly last December in his address to the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Numerous efforts have been made during the last 30 years by the astronomers of the country to improve conditions. In 1899 the Hon. John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy, became strongly impressed with the importance of the principle that an astronomical observatory should be directed by an astronomer. Three boards of visitors were appointed, of each of which I was a member. The first and most efficient of these boards included Senator William E. Chandler, a former Secretary of the Navy, chairman, and Representative Dayton, then on the Committee of Naval Affairs and now judge in West Virginia. The three astronomers had no difficulty in persuading these men that radical changes in administration were greatly needed, although they satisfied us that it was practically impossible at that time to take the observatory out of the Navy Department. The principal argument was that a civilian superintendent would be unable to secure the same support from Congress as a high naval officer. I hope that you will obtain the present views of Messrs. Long, Chandler, and Dayton in regard to the unsatisfactory condition of the Naval Observatory. The report of this board is published in Senate Document No. 19, first session of Fifty-sixth Congress, December 11, 1899. A discussion of this report is also given in Science for January 4, 1901. An excellent speech on the subject was also made by Mr. Chandler and will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 11, 1900, volume 33, page 4300. The principal conclusions which I believe would be accepted by nearly all the astronomers of the country are:

1. The administration of the Naval Observatory, so far as the attainment of scientific results is concerned, is very unsatisfactory.

2. The absence of a fixed policy. Such a policy would be to undertake the work desired by the profession and now neglected at other observatories.

3. The short term of office of the superintendent. The first superintendent had a term of 17 years—from 1844 to 1861. From 1861 to 1898 there were 20 superintendents in 37 years, an average of less than 2 years each. The Greenwich Observatory from 1675 to 1910 had 8 astronomers royal during 235 years—an average term of 29 years, including 1 whose term was only 2 years. All astronomers would agree that the work of the Greenwich Observatory has proven far more valuable than that of the Naval Observatory during the same time.

4. The assignment of the work to the members of the corps in order of seniority. As soon as a man has become familiar and acquired skill with one instrument he is sometimes assigned to another for which his past experience is of no use. Years of practice are often needed to obtain the best results with any instrument.

5. The absolute necessity that astronomical work should be superintended by an astronomer. An admiral in charge of an observatory is like an astronomer in charge of a battleship.

6. The Smithsonian Institution has shown that it can administer in a very satisfactory way the scientific departments placed in its care. For several years an astrophysical observatory has been conducted successfully under its direction. If there is no practical objection, which might affect its income, it is probable that the best place for the observatory would be under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, and that all the objections mentioned above would be remedied.

The present appropriations to the Naval Observatory greatly exceed those made to any other observatory in the world. If properly administered, they should lead to results of the greatest value to astronomical science.

Will you allow me to call your attention to the efficient manner in which the present superintendent, Capt. Jayne, has undertaken the management of the observatory? He has expressed much greater interest in the scientific work of the observatory than has been the case with many of his predecessors and should the proposed transfer be made I hope that in justice to him his work may be in some way recognized.

On April 16 the National Academy of Science meets in Washington, and I am sure that any of the astronomical members would be glad to appear before your committee in person should you desire it.

Yours, very respectfully,

EDWARD C. PICKERING.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have no doubt that he got that information from this Nautical Almanac to which the gentleman from Mississippi refers.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The observations that have been made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] are rather an eye opener to me. I mean by that, his statement concerning the control of an observatory which should be abreast in its field is astonishing. My attention had been called to this item, but I did not have time to go into an investigation of it, and from the statement of facts given by the gentleman from Mississippi, and the answers from the chairman of the committee, I take it that the only argument for retaining this observatory under the present control, admittedly unfortunate from the standpoint of best possible achievement, is because there is a sort of workshop connected with the observatory which would be disturbed if it were disconnected from present control. To start with, I think that is a very embarrassing statement to make, coming from this source, as an argument for retaining a naval or astronomical observatory of any sort under any particular management, and, of course, if it is for the Navy, it is in the main astronomical. It ought not to be a workshop, except as a laboratory in advancing the science of astronomy. Its chief concern should be the purpose of surveying the heavens and furthering the knowledge of that yet unknown region which has ever been the chief speculation of ancient and modern science. Of course, these do not pertain to the workshop in which the Navy may be concerned. Such shops should be located at more convenient places for the purpose they wish to serve. If the workshop, no matter how important, is just an addendum or a side issue, merely attached to the observatory, it would seem to be a poor policy that we should cripple a very extensive and widely important institution by retaining it under a management of this or that department of government in order that this workshop might be identified with it. A naval observatory or any other observatory is designed as a place for making observations of facts well known, on the one hand, and discovering the things that are not yet known, on the other—in a word, for finding out new things of value to the activity for which the institution was created—and we ought to have the best talent that the world can supply. Washington should stand for the greatest ability in research in the world. Not only that, but it would seem to me that the management of it, from whatever angle considered, should not be used as a sort of cemetery and retiring place for those who may be dropped out of position somewhere else, that they might serve just a little while longer under the service of the Government, as I thought was suggested by some observations made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. This is the one fear we all must have felt in connection with Government management. Great possibilities are frequently retarded by such policy. I am deeply concerned about the research agencies of the Government, for they give us the new knowledge for which the world strives, and are thus the vanguard of all progress in all science and art, and I would not withhold any necessary appropriations for that sort of work; but to appropriate, as in this case, large sums for that work, so great in its scope, and then cripple it by manning it with any kind of inefficiency, on the ground that you want to keep a workshop connected with it, which does not necessarily belong to it at all, seems to me a very striking comment upon our governmental work and it ought not to be allowed. Note the astonishing statement that this institution has a new head every two or three years. It seems incredible that this source of knowledge would thus become a convenient stopping place for superannuates.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. I understood the gentleman to say that certain statements had been an eye opener to him. In view of the gentleman's well-known position on certain questions there is some confusion upon this side of the House as to what he had reference to when he spoke of an eye opener.

Mr. FESS. Not being from Missouri, I sympathize with a man who is from Missouri when such revelations as have just been made come to our attention. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. This argument is very entertaining and elucidating, and I am not sure but what it will serve a valuable purpose in a few days in view of the bill introduced in the Senate recently by Senator OVERMAN giving to the President the power to reorganize the various departments of the Government by Executive order. In a few pages farther on in the bill we will find a provision for commercial attachés. Those men may be important. They may be worth the money, and at this time I am not complaining about them, but I do not believe they have any place at all in the Department of Commerce. I think they belong exclusively to the Department of State, where every great government on earth has its commercial attachés. The controversy between these two departments simply demonstrates the struggle for power on the part of a bureau, whether it is divided or consolidated power, one party refusing to give up to the other, no matter whether it is right or wrong, and so the fight wages. I take this opportunity to compliment ex-President Taft for some reorganization work that he did in this country that had been needed for 50 years.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. President Taft, in a message to Congress, urged very strongly that this bureau be taken away from the Naval Department.

Mr. COX. I do not remember that, but I am sure he was right when he did it. I think every Member of the House who has looked into the question of the reorganization of the various customs ports of the country for the last 25 years has recognized the necessity of their reorganization. There were about 129 of them along the Atlantic Ocean and down on the Gulf of Mexico. Trade had stopped going in there. Many of them were costing from $3,500 to $4,000 a year and yet did not take in a dollar of customs revenue. I know whereof I speak, because I investigated it in 1910, when I was chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. They were jobs, pure and simple. Finally this House passed a provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill which gave Mr. Taft the power to reorganize that branch of the work by Executive order. I doubt very much whether Congress ever in the world could have gotten through that as a piece of general legislation. As a result of that Executive order, which President Taft finally put into effect on the morning of the 4th of March, 1913, if I remember correctly, there was a saving to this country of $700,000 a year.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that while that order did abolish the offices of several collectors of internal revenue——

Mr. COX. Customs revenue.

Mr. GOOD. Internal revenue.

Mr. COX. I am talking about the reorganization of the customs districts.

Mr. GOOD. It also permitted him to reorganize the Internal-Revenue System.

Mr. COX. That was at a time before.

Mr. GOOD. And this administration had no more than got seated in office than it reestablished those same offices that had been abolished, with one exception, and appointed these collectors of internal revenue.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is talking about one thing and I am talking about another. Not one of these offices abolished under the reorganization affected by his act of March 4, 1913, has ever been reestablished. President Taft was given authority to reorganize not only the Customs Service but the Internal-Revenue Service, and abolished quite a number of internal-revenue offices, one in Pennsylvania. I am not talking about that.

Mr. GOOD. Well, I am.

Mr. COX. I will reach that in a moment. I am giving President Taft due credit for his Executive order, for I know the pressure that was brought to bear on him, not only by the Republican Party but by Democrats on this side, to prevent that order going into effect; and I firmly believe if it had not been for the work of Mr. Ebenezer Hill, now deceased, and myself he never would have put it over; and I know the pressure that was brought to bear upon him from the 1st to the 4th of March, 1913, to prevent him putting that over; and, as I said a moment ago, I doubt very much whether Congress could ever have forced a bill through proposing the abolition of 129 jobs which, I think, approximated $700,000 a year. I commend him for it. At the same time I do not agree with the gentleman from Iowa at all. A few years prior to that time President Taft, by an Executive order, did revise the internal-revenue districts of the country, and if I am correct—and I think I am—there has not been but one of those places reestablished, and that was over in the State of Pennsylvania; and that revision of the internal-revenue districts of this country abolished scores and scores of political jobs. I give Mr. Taft credit for that, and I am making this statement in view of the fact, I hope, the Senate will send over here what is known as the Overman bill and will give to the President the power to consolidate these various bureaus and put them where they belong——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Because if he does not get the power in his hands Congress will never do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was it not customs districts and not internal-revenue districts?

Mr. COX. They were both. I know something about customs districts, because I had a little hand in it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery, furniture, newspapers, plans, drawings, and drawing materials; not exceeding $4,000 for the purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle for official use of the Secretary of the Navy; purchase and exchange of motor trucks or motor delivery wagons; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor trucks or motor delivery wagons, and one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, to be used only for official purposes; garage rent; street car tickets not exceeding $500; freight, expressage, postage, typewriters, and computing machines; necessary traveling expenses for collection of records not exceeding $100; and other absolutely necessary expenses of the Navy Department and its various bureaus and offices, $270,000. It shall not be lawful to expend, for any of the offices or bureaus of the Navy Department at Washington, any sum out of appropriations made for the Naval Establishment for any of the purposes mentioned or authorized in this paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the reason for the great increase in this item here from $60,000 to $270,000 for this character of expenses under the Division of Naval Militia Affairs? Has that division furnished any considerable number of men in this emergency?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That item is for the entire Navy Department, I will say to the gentleman. It is for contingent expense for the purposes indicated of the entire Navy Department, including all the bureaus. The gentleman will notice that the Navy Department had for the current year $60,000 in the original appropriation bill and $168,300 in the deficiency act, making a total of $228,300. This appropriation carries $270,000, which is a reduction of $30,000 from the estimate submitted. It arises by reason of the increased cost of stationery and all other such supplies.

Mr. WALSH. And this is for the entire Naval Establishment; but several of the other bureaus have appropriations for similar items, like newspapers, plans, furniture, and so forth?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not recall any except for the Naval Observatory. The Hydrographic Office has an appropriation for the purchase of copper plates, books, charts, and things of that sort. Then the Division of Naval Militia Affairs has a very small authorization for miscellaneous expenses. Now, the reason that is done is because that particular expense is paid out of the regular appropriation carried in the naval bill for the Naval Militia.

Mr. WALSH. And this authorization here covers all the furniture that the Navy is likely to require, except with the two or three exceptions which the gentleman has noted?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman give any information as to how the Navy Department secures its furniture?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Through the General Supply Committee, just as other departments do. As the gentleman knows, there is a General Supply Committee which consists of a representative from each department, and all these supplies are purchased through that committee.

Mr. WALSH. I have been informed that the Navy Department when it requires furniture makes out its requisition and its specifications for furniture that is readily procured on the market, and that some of the other departments put in specifications for furniture that can not be procured on the open market, and that in some instances only two or three furniture firms have been able to submit bids on account of the peculiar dimensions required for desks or other office furniture. Has the gentleman any information as to whether there has been any standardization adopted for the procurement of furniture?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The General Supply Committee provides a schedule for all of the various supplies needed for the departments. One of the reasons for the establishment of the General Supply Committee was to meet the very objection urged by the gentleman—that is, to provide a standard schedule for all the different supplies. Now, those schedules are made from the open market for all supplies that are needed by the departments, and the departments purchase through this General Supply Committee and from their schedule of prices.

Mr. WALSH. And the departments can not fix dimensions or specifications of furniture which they need——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I take it that it could be done if they secure consent of the General Supply Committee and possibly the Secretary of the Treasury, under whose direction the General Supply Committee acts; but unless that were done, they can not do it.

Mr. WALSH. Was this appropriation, or that part which is to be applied to furniture, to be expended under the direction or in accordance with the regulations imposed by the General Supply Committee?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; it would be purchased through them.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course the gentleman understands that if it should happen there were no articles on the schedule they might be purchased from the outside; but they are purchased through the General Supply Committee so long as the articles needed are on the schedules.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem at not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence to six inspectors and while remaining at the seat of government under orders of the Secretary, not to exceed 20 days, transportation and sleeping-car fare, incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing, $12,800.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether or not there has been an increase in this per diem allowance, as mentioned in lines 14 to 19, page 101?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There has been no change in this item, I will say to the gentleman. It is in this bill as in the current law.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Office: Commissioner, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,750; financial clerk, $2,250; chiefs of divisions—1 $2,250, 1 $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; private secretary, $1,800; examiner of irrigation accounts, $1,800; draftsmen—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200; clerks—20 of class 4, 31 of class 3, 38 of class 2, 2 at $1,500 each, 68 of class 1 (including 1 stenographer), 32 at $1,000 each (including 1 stenographer), 34 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each; messenger; 4 assistant messengers; 4 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $320,790.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In this very important office I notice there has been a saving of several hundred dollars, and I wondered whether that was a mistake or whether there was some reason for the appropriation being less.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That arises, I will say to the gentleman, in this way: An accountant at $2,000 was transferred to the Secretary's office, and then there was an increase of four messenger boys from $360 to $420.

Mr. WALSH. It is the correct total then for the paragraph as set forth?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For the paragraph; yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appointment shall not be made to any of the positions herein appropriated for in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions not actually filled June 30, 1918, nor shall more than 25 per cent of other vacancies actually occurring in any grade in the classified service of that bureau during the fiscal year 1919 be filled by original appointment or promotion. The salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as hereinabove provided for shall not be available for expenditure but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury. The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any position with a salary of $2,250 or above that sum.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph just read. The point I make, Mr. Chairman, is that it is legislation pure and simple and not authorized by existing law. I do not desire to discuss it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. What has the committee to say on the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this item, if I remember aright, is in identic language with that carried in the last year's appropriation bill. If my memory serves me right, this item was not only in the last year's appropriation bill, but has been carried several years in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. And, further, that a point of order was then lodged against it, and the point of order was overruled. The committee, Mr. Chairman, holds that while it may be construed as being legislation, it is not subject to the point of order for the reason that it comes within the provisions of the Holman rule, which was construed yesterday by the present occupant of the chair. The Chair stated yesterday that the Holman rule was a beneficial provision that should be given a liberal construction. I think all Members of the House will agree that that is the proper viewpoint to be taken by any presiding officer in construing that rule. This provision restricts the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions by limiting the number of appointees that may be made in the respective grades when vacancies occur during the fiscal year. I am not certain whether without the Holman rule, Mr. Chairman, Congress would not have the right to make a similar limitation. It is within the power of the House, as it occurs to me, without the Holman rule, to determine the number of places in the respective grades that will be appropriated for during the next fiscal year, and we can go further and make the number contingent upon the happening of some event, like the number of vacancies that will occur, providing, as in this instance, the vacancies shall not be filled except one for every four occurring in the respective grades.

Now, under the Holman rule it is in order that any germane amendment may be offered either on the floor of the House or reported in an appropriation bill, provided it comes within three separate classes. I ask the attention of the Chair to those three designated classes, which are found in this language:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

Well, of course, Mr. Chairman, this naturally reduces the number and the salary of the officers of the United States for the next fiscal year. It has had that effect during the present fiscal year, as has been testified to by the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions. It comes also within the third classification of the Holman rule:

Or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

If vacancies occur during a fiscal year, then instead of the head of the bureau being privileged to fill each of those vacancies under this provision, he is only authorized to fill one when four vacancies occur.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that under two provisions of the Holman rule the paragraph would be in order, first, that it reduces the number and the salaries of the officers of the United States, and, secondly, it reduces the amount of money provided by the bill. The committee, by reason of this provision, does not provide for as much money during the ensuing fiscal year as it would otherwise provide in case this limitation did not exist.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's memory as to what occurred here a year ago, when this bill or a like bill was under consideration, is accurate, then mine is very inaccurate. My recollection is quite clear that a point of order was not made against this or similar language a year ago. One of us is absolutely mistaken.

But whether it was or was not, that is not the question here now. I do not believe this legislation is justified by the Holman rule, because it does not reduce the number of clerks and it does not reduce the amount of the appropriation. It is true that if the Chair will indulge in mere speculation and conclude that because men have died and because men will die, therefore somebody in this bureau will die, and hence the salary for a part of the year will be saved, then I grant that it comes within the Holman rule. But unless the Chair indulges in pure speculation I do not think the Holman rule invoked by the gentleman can apply.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think it is a very severe assumption that the aged clerks such as are employed in the Bureau of Pensions will not die in the next fiscal year?

Mr. RUCKER. Well, if I were contemplating the death of one of those old war-worn veterans over there in the Pension Office I would not laugh about it. It is a serious matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee believes that it saves thousands of dollars by the continuation of this provision in the bill.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman should not discuss the merits of this provision at this time. Later on we may discuss the merits, if the item remains in the bill. This is legislation, Mr. Chairman, and it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any provision in the bill relating to the Pension Office now to the effect that these vacancies can not be filled and which this item will keep from being filled?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the point I wanted to call to the attention of the Chair. There are vacancies now existing in the Pension Office which can not be filled on account of the current law. This bill carries over some of these vacancies into the next fiscal year.

Now, if this particular provision is striken from the bill, then, of course, it is perfectly patent that those positions can be filled on July 1 or thereafter. But if this provision stays in the bill they can not be filled until a sufficient number of vacancies exist to entitle the commissioner to fill them. Hence it is clearly within the Holman rule in view of the facts I have stated. I do not know whether I have made myself clear to the Chair or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us see what the effects are. I understand the gentleman to say that there are vacant positions now in the Pension Office which by reason of the current law can not be filled?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri agree to that as a fact? It is stated that there are vacancies to-day at the Pension Office which as a matter of current law can not be filled. Is that agreed to?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know whether that is true or not, Mr. Chairman. I am not connected with the Bureau of Efficiency, and I do not know whether the statement is true or not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that fact does not come from the Bureau of Efficiency. That comes from Mr. Tieman, the deputy commissioner, from the gentleman's own State.

Mr. RUCKER. If the chairman of the committee will pardon me, I occupy very little time. I do not understand that the Chair is now considering this matter on its merits. It is simply a question whether the point of order ought to be sustained or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not considering it on its merits, but is considering that part that is necessary to consider for a decision, to ascertain what is the status of the law and the effect. The Chair just wanted to find out.

Mr. RUCKER. The Chair has before him the bill. The bill makes specific appropriation for a number of clerks, so many in the various different grades, and they are provided for, regardless of this legislation, which I seek by raising a point of order to have stricken out; but whether this provision stays in the bill or does not stay in, it neither decreases nor increases the number of clerks authorized by this appropriation. They are specifically mentioned.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the Chair pleases, Mr. Tieman, the Assistant Pension Commissioner, sets forth on page 563 of the hearings the vacancies now existing in the bureau.

Mr. RUCKER. There is no appropriation for them, and this bill carries no appropriation for them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; it does; for several of them.

Mr. RUCKER. This law has nothing to do with those vacancies.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; it has. It carries over some of them into the next fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me for a moment, I submit that it is within the authority of the House, on an appropriation bill, to provide for any number of clerks of the respective grades authorized by law. It may provide for them for the entire fiscal year. It may provide for them for a fraction of the year. It is within the power of the House to determine how many of these clerks shall be provided and for how long they shall be employed. Leaving out of consideration entirely the Holman rule, this House has the right to say that so many clerks of class 4 shall be employed during the whole year or shall be employed during a fraction of the year. This provision is substantially that. It says that as far as the clerks of class 4 or the clerks of class 3 are concerned, that if four vacancies occur in those respective grades during the fiscal year for which this bill carries appropriations, only one shall be appointed. That is a limitation within the power of the House to provide. But we are reinforced by the provisions of the Holman rule, so that even if that were not so, as this on its face retrenches expenditures from the Public Treasury by providing for a less number of employees during the next fiscal year and provides for a reduction of appropriations, therefore it is also for that reason in order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the precise matter that the Chair is trying to get at. The Chair has examined the current law, and the question he has asked is whether there are any existing vacancies which by reason of the current law can not be filled.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are.

The CHAIRMAN. Should this paragraph go out of the bill, will those positions be filled?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They will be filled eventually.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the retention of this paragraph in the bill will prevent a number of positions from being filled, which otherwise would be filled.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply desired to ascertain the facts. It appears then that the current law hinders certain vacancies from being filled, and further that these vacancies will be filled if this paragraph is stricken from the bill. The effect of the paragraph is in substance to reduce a certain number of officials, since a position which can not be filled is substantially a position which has been abolished. Hence this paragraph retrenches expenditures by the reduction of Federal officials, and of official salaries.

Mr. RUCKER. If this paragraph goes out of the bill, I grant you that if a clerk in the Pension Bureau resigns or dies the bureau will have the power under the law to put another clerk in by promotion or appointment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a speculative situation, but the Chair understands that there are vacancies there now.

Mr. RUCKER. I am not prepared to state definitely whether that is true or not. Of course, I would accept the statement of the gentleman who has charge of the bill, but as I understand it that is not the fact. This bill appropriates only for that number of clerks which two or three gentlemen have determined the bureau shall have, and it does not appropriate for clerks whom these gentlemen have heretofore said, and those whom they now say, the bureau shall not have.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, the gentleman falls into the error of concluding that the committee has done this year just what it did last year.

Mr. RUCKER. It has done a little more and, if possible, a little worse.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Last year we undertook to drop out all of the vacancies. In this case we have not dropped out all of the vacancies. Some of them are carried over into next year, and I will call the attention of the gentleman to one of them. That is the position of principal examiner. There are three of these vacancies, as Mr. Tieman, the Assistant Pension Commissioner, states. In this bill under consideration we drop only two of them. So if this bill becomes a law as it is reported there will on July 1, even if no further vacancies occur, be a vacancy existing in the position of principal examiner.

Therefore, if this provision goes out of the bill, on July 1 that position, of course, can be filled immediately.

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask the gentleman a question. Is it the gentleman's purpose to so write this bill as to handicap and cripple the bureau so that it can not render efficient service?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman is making long strides in that direction.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman for two or three years has opposed the action of the committee in making reductions in the Pension Office, but the fact is that year by year it is perfectly patent from the hearings that there has been nothing done to interfere with the Pension Office in promoting the efficiency of the administration of affairs.

Mr. RUCKER. That is a fact that should afford the gentleman no consolation, because I think I am justified in saying the gentleman has consulted no one connected with the service in the bureau in connection with the preparation of this appropriation bill. He got information largely from the outside.

Mr. HELVERING. If the gentleman will pardon me, cases filed way back in 1917 are still undisposed of.

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; that is true, because the commissioner is not allowed to keep the working force of his bureau up to a standard of efficiency, and legislation now on the calendar and which will become a law, the policy of this committee is going to cause further delay and more confusion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is very peculiar if that condition exists, that the fact should be that at the time of the hearings the Assistant Pension Commissioner stated that he had two vacancies—I am sure one was a $1,800 clerk and the other perhaps was a $1,600 clerk—that had existed for a month or two.

Mr. RUCKER. Since the gentleman has made that statement on the floor, I think it is but fair to state that the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions stated that the reason he had not filled the vacancy referred to was because he did not want to go to the civil-service list and put in the service a new and inexperienced clerk at $1,800 over the heads of men who had worked faithfully and well for years and who under civil-service law are entitled to promotion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why did not he promote them?

Mr. RUCKER. You do not allow him to promote them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He could promote them to that place because he is authorized to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. This situation appears to be as follows: There are certain hereafter occurring vacancies in the Pension Bureau that are forbidden to be filled by the provisions of this paragraph. The elimination of these officials, is a reduction of the official force, and a reduction of the official force and of the salaries of the same is one of the methods of retrenching expenditures contemplated in the Holman rule. A germane amendment retrenching expenditures is in order under this rule, even if it is legislation on an appropriation bill. It seems to the Chair that in view of the reduction in officers and salaries that this paragraph will effect, it is in order. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of lines 5 to 17, inclusive, on page 105 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 105, strike out all the language beginning at line 5 down to and including line 17.

Mr. RUCKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope to present some facts to the committee by which I want to get some independent action of the Members. I do not want to make an argument to empty benches and have the whip used to bring in Members that do not know what they are voting on, and therefore I suggest the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of no quorum, and evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHERLEY) there were 23 ayes and 8 noes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The committee again divided, and the tellers announced that there were 21 ayes and 23 noes.

So the committee determined not to rise.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RUCKER) there were—ayes 31, noes 2.

So the committee determined to rise.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10378, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. HULL to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Robert F. Risley (H. R. 8423, 64th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I submit for printing under the rule the conference report upon the bill S. 3752, to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for just compensation for their owners, and for other purposes.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 371).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"That the President, having in time of war taken over the possession, use, control, and operation (called herein Federal control) of certain railroads and systems of transportation (called herein carriers), is hereby authorized to agree with and to guarantee to any such carrier making operating returns to the Interstate Commerce Commission, that during the period of such Federal control it shall receive as just compensation an annual sum, payable from time to time in reasonable installments, for each year and pro rata for any fractional year of such Federal control, not exceeding a sum equivalent as nearly as may be to its average annual railway operating income for the three years ended June 30, 1917. That any railway operating income accruing during the period of Federal control in excess of such just compensation shall remain the property of the United States. In the computation of such income, debits and credits arising from the accounts called in the monthly reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission equipment rents and joint facility rents shall be included, but debits and credits arising from the operation of such street electric passenger railways, including railways commonly called interurbans, as are at the time of the agreement not under Federal control, shall be excluded. If any lines were acquired by, leased to, or consolidated with such railroad or system between July 1, 1914, and December 31, 1917, both inclusive, and separate operating returns to the Interstate Commerce Commission were not made for such lines after such acquisition, lease, or consolidation, there shall (before the average is computed) be added to the total railway operating income of such railroad or system for the three years ended June 30, 1917, the total railway operating income of the lines so acquired, leased, or consolidated, for the period beginning July 1, 1914, and ending on the date of such acquisition, lease, or consolidation, or on December 31, 1917, whichever is the earlier. The average annual railway operating income shall be ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission and certified by it to the President. Its certificate shall, for the purpose of such agreement, be taken as conclusive of the amount of such average annual railway operating income.

"Every such agreement shall provide that any Federal taxes under the act of October 3, 1917, or acts in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, commonly called war taxes, assessed for the period of Federal control beginning January 1, 1918, or any part of such period, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds, or shall be charged against or deducted from the just compensation; that other taxes assessed under Federal or any other governmental authority for the period of Federal control or any part thereof, either on the property used under such Federal control or on the right to operate as a carrier, or on the revenues or any part thereof derived from operation (not including, however, assessments for public improvements or taxes assessed on property under construction, and chargeable under the classification of the Interstate Commerce Commission to investment in road and equipment), shall be paid out of revenues derived from railway operations while under Federal control; that all taxes assessed under Federal or any other governmental authority for the period prior to January 1, 1918, whenever levied or payable, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds, or shall be charged against or deducted from the just compensation.

"Every such agreement shall also contain adequate and appropriate provisions for the maintenance, repair, renewals, and depreciation of the property, for the creation of any reserves or reserve funds found necessary in connection therewith, and for such accounting and adjustments of charges and payments, both during and at the end of Federal control as may be requisite in order that the property of each carrier may be returned to it in substantially as good repair and in substantially as complete equipment as it was in at the beginning of Federal control, and also that the United States may, by deductions from the just compensations or by other proper means and charges, be reimbursed for the cost of any additions, repairs, renewals, and betterments to such property not justly chargeable to the United States; in making such accounting and adjustments due consideration shall be given to the amounts expended or reserved by each carrier for maintenance, repairs, renewals, and depreciation during the three years ended June 30, 1917, to the condition of the property at the beginning and at the end of Federal control and to any other pertinent facts and circumstances.

"The President is further authorized in such agreement to make all other reasonable provisions, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act or of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, that he may deem necessary or proper for such Federal control or for the determination of the mutual rights and obligations of the parties to the agreement arising from or out of such Federal control.

"If the President shall find that the condition of any carrier was during all or a substantial portion of the period of three years ended June 30, 1917, because of nonoperation, receivership, or where recent expenditures for additions or improvements or equipment were not fully reflected in the operating railway income of said three years or a substantial portion thereof, or because of any undeveloped or abnormal conditions, so exceptional as to make the basis of earnings hereinabove provided for plainly inequitable as a fair measure of just compensation, then the Presdent may make with the carrier such agreement for such amount as just compensation as under the circumstances of the particular case he shall find just.

"That every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company, and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads of which the President has taken the possession, use, and control, or which connects with such railroads and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within 'Federal control,' as herein defined, and necessary for the prosecution of the war, and shall be entitled to the benefit of all the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as including any street or interurban electric railway which has as its principal source of operating revenue urban, suburban, or interurban passenger traffic, or sale of power, heat and light, or both.

"The agreement shall also provide that the carrier shall accept all the terms and conditions of this act and any regulation or order made by or through the President under authority of this act or of that portion of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, which authorizes the President in time of war to take possession, assume control, and utilize systems of transportation.

"SEC. 2. That if no such agreement is made, or pending the execution of an agreement, the President may nevertheless pay to any carrier while under Federal control an annual amount, payable in reasonable installments, not exceeding 90 per cent of the estimated annual amount of just compensation, remitting such carrier, in case where no agreement is made, to its legal rights for any balance claimed to the remedies provided in section 3 hereof. Any amount thereafter found due such carrier above the amount paid shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The acceptance of any benefits under this section shall constitute an acceptance by the carrier of all the provisions of this act and shall obligate the carrier to pay to the United States, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from a date or dates fixed in proceedings under section 3, the amount by which the sums received under this section exceed the sum found due in such proceedings.

"SEC. 3. That all claims for just compensation not adjusted (as provided in section 1) shall, on the application of the President or of any carrier, be submitted to boards, each consisting of three referees to be appointed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, members of which and the official force thereof being eligible for service on such boards without additional compensation. Such boards of referees are hereby authorized to summon witnesses, require the production of records, books, correspondence, documents, memoranda, and other papers, view properties, administer oaths, and may hold hearings in Washington and elsewhere, as their duties and the convenience of the parties may require. In case of disobedience to a subpœna the board may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and such court within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, corporation, partnership, or association, issue an order requiring appearance before the board, or the production of documentary evidence if so ordered, or the giving of evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Such cases may be heard separately or together or by classes, by such boards as the Interstate Commerce Commission in the first instance, or any board of referees to which any such cases shall be referred may determine. Said boards shall give full hearings to such carriers and to the United States; shall consider all the facts and circumstances, and shall report as soon as practicable in each case to the President the just compensation, calculated on an annual basis and otherwise in such form as to be convenient and available for the making of such agreement as is authorized in section 1. The President is authorized to enter into an agreement with such carrier for just compensation upon a basis not in excess of that reported by such board, and may include therein provisions similar to those authorized under section 1. Failing such agreement, either the United States or such carrier may file a petition in the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the amount of such just compensation, and in the proceedings in said court the report of said referees shall be prima facie evidence of the amount of just compensation and of the facts therein stated. Proceedings in the Court of Claims under this section shall be given precedence and expedited in every practicable way.

"SEC. 4. That the just compensation that may be determined as hereinbefore provided by agreement or that may be adjudicated by the Court of Claims, shall be increased by an amount reckoned at a reasonable rate per centum to be fixed by the President upon the cost of any additions and betterments, less retirements, and upon the cost of road extensions to the property of such carrier made by such carrier with the approval of or by order of the President while such property is under Federal control.

"SEC. 5. That no carrier while under Federal control shall, without the prior approval of the President, declare or pay any dividend in excess of its regular rate of dividends during the three years ended June 30, 1917: Provided, however, That such carriers as have paid no regular dividends or no dividends during said period may, with the prior approval of the President, pay dividends at such rate as the President may determine.

"SEC. 6. That the sum of $500,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which, together with any funds available from any operating income of said carriers, may be used by the President as a revolving fund for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Federal control, and so far as necessary the amount of just compensation, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment, such terminals, motive power, cars, and equipment to be used and accounted for as the President may direct and to be disposed of as Congress may hereafter by law provide.

"The President may also make or order any carrier to make any additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other equipment necessary or desirable for war purposes or in the public interest on or in connection with the property of any carrier. He may from said revolving fund advance to such carrier all or any part of the expense of such additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment so ordered and constructed by such carrier or by the President, such advances to be charged against such carrier and to bear interest at such rate and be payable on such terms as may be determined by the President, to the end that the United States may be fully reimbursed for any sums so advanced.

"Any loss claimed by any carrier by reason of any such additions, betterments, or road extensions so ordered and constructed may be determined by agreement between the President and such carrier; failing such agreement the amount of such loss shall be ascertained as provided in section 3 hereof.

"From said revolving fund the President may expend such an amount as he may deem necessary or desirable for the utilization and operation of canals, or for the purchase, construction, or utilization and operation of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways, and may in the operation and use of such facilities create or employ such agencies and enter into such contracts and agreements as he shall deem in the public interest.

"SEC. 7. That for the purpose of providing funds requisite for maturing obligations or for other legal and proper expenditures, or for reorganizing railroads in receivership, carriers may, during the period of Federal control, issue such bonds, notes, equipment trust certificates, stock, and other forms of securities, secured or unsecured by mortgage, as the President may first approve as consistent with the public interest. The President may, out of the revolving fund created by this act, purchase for the United States all or any part of such securities at prices not exceeding par, and may sell such securities whenever in his judgment it is desirable at prices not less than the cost thereof. Any securities so purchased shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, under the direction of the President, represent the United States in all matters in connections therewith in the same manner as a private holder thereof. The President shall each year as soon as practicable after January 1, cause a detailed report to be submitted to the Congress of all receipts and expenditures made under this section and section 6 during the preceding calendar year.

"SEC. 8. That the President may execute any of the powers herein and heretofore granted him with relation to Federal control through such agencies as he may determine, and may fix the reasonable compensation for the performance of services in connection therewith, and may avail himself of the advice, assistance, and cooperation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the members and employees thereof, and may also call upon any department, commission, or board of the Government for such services as he may deem expedient. But no such official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such services except as now permitted by law.

"SEC. 9. That the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, shall remain in force and effect except as expressly modified and restricted by this act; and the President, in addition to the powers conferred by this act, shall have and is hereby given such other and further powers necessary or appropriate to give effect to the powers herein and heretofore conferred. The provisions of this act shall also apply to any carriers to which Federal control may be hereafter extended.

"SEC. 10. That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President. Actions at law or suits in equity may be brought by and against such carriers and judgments rendered as now provided by law; and in any action at law or suit in equity against the carrier, no defense shall be made thereto upon the ground that the carrier is an instrumentality or agency of the Federal Government. Nor shall any such carrier be entitled to have transferred to a Federal court any action heretofore or hereafter instituted by or against it, which action was not so transferable prior to the Federal control of such carrier; and any action which has heretofore been so transferred because of such Federal control or of any act of Congress or official order or proclamation relating thereto shall upon motion of either party be retransferred to the court in which it was originally instituted. But no process, mesne or final, shall be levied against any property under such Federal control.

"That during the period of Federal control, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires, the President may initiate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices by filing the same with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall not be suspended by the commission pending final determination.

"Said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be reasonable and just and shall take effect at such time and upon such notice as he may direct, but the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon complaint, enter upon a hearing concerning the justness and reasonableness of so much of any order of the President as establishes or changes any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any carrier under Federal control, and may consider all the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the making of the same. In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices or changes therein, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall give due consideration to the fact that the transportation systems are being operated under a unified and coordinated national control and not in competition.

"After full hearing the commission may make such findings and orders as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce as amended, and said findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act: Provided, however, That when the President shall find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control and operation fairly chargeable to railway operating expenses, and also to pay railway tax accruals other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers, operating as a unit, it is necessary to increase the railway operating revenues, the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make.

"SEC. 11. That every person or corporation, whether carrier or shipper, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by a carrier or shipper, or other person, who shall knowingly violate or fail to observe any of the provisions of this act, or shall knowingly interfere with or impede the possession, use, operation, or control of any railroad property, railroad, or transportation system hitherto or hereafter taken over by the President, or shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of any order or regulation made in pursuance of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or, if a person, by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both. Each independent transaction constituting a violation of, or a failure to observe, any of the provisions of this act, or any order entered in pursuance hereof, shall constitute a separate offense. For the taking or conversion to his own use or the embezzlement of money or property derived from or used in connection with the possession, use, or operation of said railroads or transportation systems, the criminal statutes of the United States, as well as the criminal statutes of the various States where applicable, shall apply to all officers, agents, and employees engaged in said railroad and transportation service, while the same is under Federal control, to the same extent as to persons employed in the regular service of the United States. Prosecutions for violations of this act or of any order entered hereunder shall be in the district courts of the United States, under the direction of the Attorney General, in accordance with the procedure for the collection and imposing of fines and penalties now existing in said courts.

"SEC. 12. That moneys and other property derived from the operation of the carriers during Federal control are hereby declared to be the property of the United States. Unless otherwise directed by the President, such moneys shall not be covered into the Treasury, but such moneys and property shall remain in the custody of the same officers, and the accounting thereof shall be in the same manner and form as before Federal control. Disbursements therefrom shall, without further appropriation, be made in the same manner as before Federal control and for such purposes as under the Interstate Commerce Commission classification of accounts in force on December 27, 1917, are chargeable to operating expenses or to railway tax accruals and for such other purposes in connection with Federal control as the President may direct, except that taxes under Titles 1 and 2 of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1917, or any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds. If Federal control begins or ends during the tax year for which any taxes so chargeable to railway tax accruals are assessed, the taxes for such year shall be apportioned to the date of the beginning or ending of such Federal control, and disbursements shall be made only for that portion of such taxes as is due for the part of such tax year which falls within the period of Federal control.

"At such periods as the President may direct, the books shall be closed and the balance of revenues over disbursements shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revolving fund created by this act. If such revenues are insufficient to meet such disbursements, the deficit shall be paid out of such revolving fund in such manner as the President may direct.

"SEC. 13. That all pending cases in the courts of the United States affecting railroads or other transportation systems brought under the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, including the commodities clause, so called, or under the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, approved July 2, 1890, and amendments thereto, shall proceed to final determination as soon as may be, as if the United States had not assumed control of transportation systems; but in any such case the court having jurisdiction may, upon the application of the United States, stay execution of final judgment or decree until such time as it shall deem proper.

"SEC. 14. That the Federal control of railroads and transportation systems herein and heretofore provided for shall continue for and during the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter, which shall not exceed one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace: Provided, however, That the President may, prior to July 1, 1918, relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation, further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable; and the President may at any time during the period of Federal control agree with the owners thereof to relinquish all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation. The President may relinquish all railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control at any time he shall deem such action needful or desirable. No right to compensation shall accrue to such owners from and after the date of relinquishment for the property so relinquished.

"SEC. 15. That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies or the issue of stocks and bonds: Provided, however, That no State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, shall levy, assess or collect an amount of taxes from railroad property within the State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, while under Federal control, in excess of the ratio which the taxes derived from railroad property bore to the total taxes of such State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for the year previous to Federal control.

"SEC. 16. That this act is expressly declared to be emergency legislation enacted to meet conditions growing out of war; and nothing herein is to be construed as expressing or prejudicing the future policy of the Federal Government concerning the ownership, control, or regulation of carriers or the method or basis of the capitalization thereof."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the conference report:

The conferees adopted the amendment of the House as the basis of their conference.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 1 of the House amendment with an amendment striking out so much of the House amendment as provided an increase of the annual sum payable as compensation to the carriers upon the cost of any additions or betterments less retirements, or road extensions made during the six months ended December 31, 1917, and with further slight amendments in the wording of the House amendment.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 2 of the House amendment, with an amendment providing that the compensation that might be agreed upon as provided in said section should cover the time consumed in arriving at an agreement.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 3 of the House amendment in full with an amendment added to the end of the section providing that proceedings in the Court of Claims, under the section, should be given precedence and expedited in every practicable way.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 4 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 5 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 6 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same with an amendment striking out the third paragraph of said section and substituting therefor practically the same provision differently worded, as appears in the conference report.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 7 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 8 of the House amendment, with an amendment striking out all of the second paragraph.

Section 9 of the House amendment, which made provisions regarding the operation of short-line railroads that were not taken over, was stricken from the bill because of the adoption by the House of the Senate provision requiring all lines referred to in said section of the House amendment to be taken over.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 10 of the House amendment. Said section 10 in the House amendment, by reason of striking out section 9, is numbered in the conference agreement as section 9.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 11 of the House amendment down to and including the words "but no process, mesne or final, shall be levied against any property under such Federal control," with an amendment to the first portion of said paragraph wherein it provides that "carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control," as follows: After the word "control" insert the words "or with any order of the President." Also an amendment striking out all the remainder of said first paragraph after the words "such Federal control," as above set out. Also with a further amendment striking out the remainder of the section of the House amendment, and substituting in lieu of same the provisions of the conference report, the effect of which is to give paramount and final power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine finally as to the reasonableness and justness of any rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices that may be initiated by the President during the period of Federal control, with authority to make such findings and orders as the commission may think right and proper with regard thereto.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 12 of the House amendment, and agrees to the same in substance and effect.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 13 of the House amendment with an amendment striking out all of the second paragraph, and agrees to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 14 of the House amendment, and agrees to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 15 of the House amendment with an amendment providing that the period of Federal control shall not continue longer than one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, which was agreed to by the House.

The conferees agreed to strike out section 16 of the House amendment, and substituted therefor a new section, as set out in section 15 of the conference report, the effect of which change is to provide that no State or subdivision thereof shall increase taxation on railroad property while under Federal control in excess of the increase that might be made on other taxable property in the State during such period. The substitute section also provides that this act shall not be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the States in relation to the lawful police regulations of the States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 17 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means has had under consideration what is known as the war finance corporation bill for three weeks or more. There were so many amendments that the committee made to the original bill introduced that when we finished it, it was thought best by the committee that we should introduce the completed bill as an original proposition instead of having the bill as originally introduced with all of the various amendments. On behalf of the committee I introduced that bill this morning, H. R. 10608. There are several hundred copies obtainable in the document room. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to file the report of the committee on the bill before 12 o'clock to-night, to be printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to file his report upon this bill any time between now and midnight and to have it printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if the report will show the modifications in that bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Of course the understanding is that it is to be printed in to-day's RECORD.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I will state to gentlemen that they can get the bill out of the document room, and they also can get the bill and the report to-morrow morning by sending to the room of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House Office Building.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman further say when he expects to call this up?

Mr. KITCHIN. After the disposition of the legislative bill.

Mr. HICKS. Are there two reports on the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Just one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The report referred to by Mr. KITCHIN is as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 369, 65th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. KITCHIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10608) to provide further for the national security and defense and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, reports it back to the House without amendment and recommends that the bill do pass.

THE PURPOSE OF THE BILL.

The two main purposes of this bill are (1) the extension of essential credits and (2) the prevention of the use of new capital in unnecessary activities during the period of the war.

EXPANSION OF CREDITS.

The Secretary of the Treasury made the following statement before the Ways and Means Committee with reference to the necessity of the expansion of credits:

"The proposed act to incorporate a war finance corporation should be regarded primarily as a measure to enable the banks, both national banks and State banks and trust companies, to continue to furnish essential credits for industries and enterprises which are necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war.

"The Government's borrowings, particularly during the period immediately preceding and following each liberty loan, have tended to preempt the credit facilities of the banks and often to prevent them from giving needed and customary help to quasi-public and private enterprises. Many industries have been brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Federal Reserve Board where industrial plants, public utilities, power plants, railroads, and others have found it difficult, if not impossible, to obtain the necessary advances to enable them to perform vital service in connection with the war because essential credits, ordinarily available to them, are being absorbed by the Government itself.

"In Europe central banks are permitted to grant to banks and bankers loans upon stocks and bonds upon certain well-defined terms.

"I would like to direct your particular attention to that statement, because that indicates the fundamental purpose of this bill. In Europe, I wish to repeat, central banks, which correspond to our Federal reserve banks in a sense, are permitted to grant to banks and bankers loans upon stocks and bonds upon certain well-defined terms. But here the Federal reserve banks are not permitted to do that, the Federal reserve act having specifically contemplated advances of that character only upon what we call liquid or commercial paper, and therefore the Federal reserve banks are not permitted to rediscount any paper for other banks which is secured by fixed investments.

"The Federal reserve act does not provide for these, and the war finance corporation is designed as a war emergency to fill this gap. The provisions of the Federal reserve act which permit Federal reserve banks to rediscount and purchase commercial paper and paper secured by the Government's obligations have had the effect of forcing the banks to discriminate against loans on ineligible paper, even where such loans were vitally necessary for war purposes, in favor of loans on commercial paper even where they represented activities or enterprises not related to the war and which might well be curtailed during the period of the war. It is believed that the proposed bill has been wisely and conservatively conceived as a war measure to give relief from this condition during the war."

NEW CAPITAL ISSUES.

The principal foreign countries have found it necessary to limit new issues of securities during the period of the war in order that all available capital may be used to meet the demands of the war. Your committee believes that we must have some legislation to limit the indiscriminate use of new capital in order to secure the fullest available capital for the prosecution of the war.

The Secretary of the Treasury well stated the necessity of limiting the new issues of securities in his testimony before your committee when he said:

"It is important that appropriate provision be made by law, so that, for the duration of the war, funds available for investment in securities shall be effectively and economically used to supply the financial requirements of the Government and of those industries whose operations are necessary or contributory to the war. The ordinary flow of capital, which in normal times is left free to seek its own investment, should during the war be so directed and conserved that these requirements shall be taken care of before funds shall be invested either in new enterprises or for the expansion of such old enterprises as are not necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war. In these critical times funds available for investment must not be dissipated on miscellaneous capital expenditures which, however useful or desirable in normal times, will not now aid in the success of the war. It is not so much a question of money as a question of labor and materials. It is essential that the demand for labor and materials for industries which are not contributory to the prosecution of the war should be kept within bounds, so that the war needs shall be first provided for. The test must be whether the proposed expenditure will strengthen the industrial and military structure of the country for the purposes of the war."

SECRETARY M'ADOO'S VIEWS WITH REFERENCE TO INFLATION OF CREDITS.

Secretary McAdoo, when before the Ways and Means Committee, said:

"Since the publication of the terms of the proposed act some criticism has appeared indicating a belief that the operation of the corporation may produce expansion, or, as some term it, inflation, of a dangerous nature.

"In my opinion the existence of this corporation and the intelligent exercise of its functions will do more to prevent unsafe expansion than any other course which could now be pursued, for it must be remembered that the investment markets are practically closed to the country's industries, including public-utility corporations and the railroads. These essential industries and transportation companies in these circumstances, in the absence of some such plan as is presented in this bill, are obliged to look to the banks for the means not only of continuing their normal business but of enlarging it for war purposes. The needs of these corporations, which sound finance would require to be provided for in the form of capital loans, must now increasingly be taken care of in the form of bank loans. The burden placed upon the banks to meet the demands of this class of borrowers can only be met if these banks use the facilities of the Federal reserve banks by discounting such eligible paper as they may have in their portfolios. The continuance of this process of looking more and more to the banks for short loans of funds which should be provided as capital by investors is the quickest way to bring about an unsound expansion of bank credits. If this burden, through the instrumentality of the War Finance Corporation, can be removed from the banks, and if investors can be induced to furnish necessary capital, that kind of expansion will be checked.

"The intervention of a corporation of this character, with its large capital, will provide the class of security which will appeal to the minds of even the most timid investors and will naturally assist in converting what might become a dangerous bank expansion into a legitimate investment of free capital. Even though the corporation were not called upon to make any considerable advances itself, so that the issue of its own securities to a large extent might not be required, it has been the experience in Great Britain, and I believe it will be our experience also, that the restraint imposed upon unnecessary capital borrowings through Government intervention such as is proposed, not only allays the fears of timid investors but stimulates a demand generally for issues of licensed securities. Such securities sell promptly, and their distribution is general and effective. This again provides a check to unwise expansion of bank credits."

ESSENTIAL DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THIS BILL AND THE WAR FINANCE CORPORATION BILL AS ORIGINALLY INTRODUCED.

The essential differences between this bill (H. R. 10608) and the bill H. R. 9499 are as follows:

1. This bill provides that not more than three directors of the corporation shall be members of the same political party. The original bill did not contain such a provision.

2. This bill specifies that no director or officer of the corporation shall participate in the determination of any question affecting his personal interests, or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is interested. The original bill did not contain this provision.

3. Under this bill the directors of the corporation will be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The original bill provided for the appointment of the directors by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President.

4. This bill limits the advances to be made to banks, bankers, or trust companies to loans made by such banks, bankers, or trust companies on securities or obligations acquired since the declaration of war (Apr. 6, 1917) and outstanding at the time of the advance, and to loans made to persons, firms, corporations, or associations conducting an established and going business in the United States. The original bill did not contain any limitation of this nature.

5. This bill permits the corporation to make advances to savings banks, banking institutions, or trust companies which receive savings deposits, and to building and loan associations, for not to exceed one year.

The original bill limited the time for which an advance could be made to 90 days and did not give this privilege to trust companies receiving deposits or building and loan associations.

This bill requires the security for advances made to savings banks and similar institutions to be equal to at least 133 per cent of the amount of the advance. The original bill specified that the security should be equal to 125 per cent of the amount of the advance. This change is made in order to make the ratio between the advance and the security the same in all the provisions of the bill.

7. This bill provides that when the corporation makes advances direct—that is, without the advance going through the banking channels—that the corporation must require security equal to at least 133 per cent of the amount advanced by the corporation and also that the rate of interest charged on such advances shall not be less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper in the Federal reserve district in which the borrower is located. This bill also contains a limitation as to the amount of advances that can be made under this section at any one time to an amount equal to 16⅔ per cent of (1) the paid-in capital stock of the corporation at such time plus (2) the aggregate amount of the bonds of the corporation authorized to be outstanding at such time. The original bill contained no such limitations. It is believed that these limitations will afford a very valuable safeguard to the corporation and will result in requiring a greater portion of the business of the corporation to be transacted through regular banking channels.

8. This bill limits the aggregate amount of advances that can be made and outstanding under this act at any one time to any person, firm, corporation, or association to an amount not to exceed 10 per cent of the authorized capital stock of the corporation, or $50,000,000. The original bill contained no such limitation. This provision is also believed to be a very valuable safeguard.

9. This bill requires the corporation to file quarterly reports with the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives giving the name and place of busfness of each person, firm, corporation, or association receiving advances direct from the corporation, the amount advanced, the terms, and the security accepted therefor. The original bill contained no such provision.

10. This bill limits the power of the corporation to deal in bonds and obligations of the United States to those issued or converted since September 24, 1917 (the time the last bond act became a law). The original bill would have permitted the corporation to deal in any bonds or obligations of the United States.

11. This bill authorizes the corporation to issue $2,000,000,000 of bonds to mature in not less than one year nor more than five years. The original bill authorized the corporation to issue $4,000,000,000 worth of bonds.

12. This bill provides that whenever a Federal reserve bank discounts or rediscounts paper secured by the bonds of the corporation that it shall not discount or rediscount such paper at a less interest charge than 1 per cent above the prevailing rates for eligible commercial paper of corresponding maturity. The original bill left the interest rate to the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board. It is believed that this provision will afford a very valuable safeguard to the Federal Reserve System.

13. This bill provides that before paper secured by the bonds of the corporation can be discounted or rediscounted by a Federal reserve bank that the member bank must satisfy the Federal reserve bank that it does not have in its possession for the purpose of discount sufficient commercial paper eligible for discount or rediscount under the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board made under authority of the Federal reserve act. The original bill contained no such provision.

14. This bill contains no provision, as did the original bill, permitting member banks of the Federal Reserve System to deal in the bonds of the corporation.

15. This bill creates a capital-issues committee, to be composed of seven members, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to investigate, pass upon, and determine whether or not it is compatible with the public interest that there shall be sold or offered for sale or for subscription any issue or part of an issue of securities the total or aggregate par or face value of which is in excess of $100,000. The original bill authorized the corporation to investigate and license or refuse to license the sale or offering for sale or subscription of securities the par or face value of which were in excess of $100,000. It is believed that the issuance of new securities will be limited, in most cases, under the provisions of this bill, to those compatible with the public interest, as effectively as would have been possible under the original bill, which was much more drastic.

16. This bill contains no criminal penalty provision for any sale or offering for sale of any securities issued when the capital-issue committee has found the issue of such securities incompatible with the public interest. The original bill provided a penalty of $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than four years, or both, for any violation of any of the provisions of the act or of any license, order, rule, or regulation issued thereunder.

17. This bill provides that the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect of any act or omission of the corporation. The original bill made no reference to the liability of the United States for the payment of the obligations of the corporation.

18. This bill makes anyone who (1) forges or counterfeits any bond, coupon, or paper in imitation of or purporting to be in imitation of a bond or coupon issued by the corporation, etc.; or (2) embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any money, funds, or credits of the corporation, etc.; or (3) with intent to deceive any officer of the corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of the corporation, etc., liable to a penalty of $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

The original bill contained no similar penalty provision.

THE PROPOSED WAR FINANCE CORPORATION BILL.

This bill is divided into three titles, as follows:

Title I. War Finance Corporation.
Title II. Capital Issues Committee.
Title III. Miscellaneous.

TITLE I.—WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

Section 1. Establishment of War Finance Corporation.

This section provides for the establishment of a War Finance Corporation. The life of the corporation is to be for 10 years, but its powers are to cease six months after the termination of the war, except such as are incidental to the liquidation of its assets and the winding up of its affairs.

Section 2. Capital stock of the corporation.

The capital stock of the corporation is to be $500,000,000 and is to be subscribed by the United States. The subscription is subject to call upon the vote of three-fifths of the board of directors and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury at such time or times as may be deemed advisable. This section appropriates $500,000,000 for the purpose of making payment upon such subscription when called. Receipts for payment by the United States for or on account of such stock must be issued by the corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury and are to be evidence of stock ownership. The capital stock was fixed at this amount to provide the corporation with substantial resources and to furnish an additional equity for any other securities issued by the corporation.

Section 3. Management of the corporation.

The management of the corporation is vested in a board of five directors. The Secretary of the Treasury is to be chairman of the board and the other four members are to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but not more than three of the directors shall be members of the same political party. Any person appointed to fill a vacancy on the board will be appointed to fill the unexpired term of the member whose place he is selected to fill. Three members of the board will constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. This section authorizes the President to appoint two of the directors to serve for two years and the other two for four years, and thereafter to appoint the directors to serve for a period of four years. Any member of the Federal Reserve Board or any other officer or employee under the United States or any director of a Federal reserve bank is eligible for appointment as a director of the corporation.

Section 4. Salary of the directors.

The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is authorized to fix the four directors' salaries, but the amount to be paid to each is not to exceed $12,000 per year. If a director is employed by the Government, in addition to being a director of the corporation, the combined salaries can not exceed the salary paid a director of the corporation.

Section 5. The principal offices of the corporation.

The principal offices of the corporation will be located in Washington, but authority is given the board of directors to establish agencies or branch offices in any city or cities in the United States. This provision is deemed necessary in order that the corporation may be reached at different points throughout the country without requiring everything to be sent to Washington. The Secretary of the Treasury plans to use the Federal reserve banks and their branches as a nucleus for this organization. In this connection, the Secretary of the Treasury expects to a great extent to use the organization already established by the Federal Reserve Board throughout the country for the purpose of passing upon new capital-issue applications.

POWERS OF THE CORPORATION.

Section 6. Ordinary corporate powers.

This subdivision gives the corporation the ordinary powers and privileges enjoyed by corporations, viz, to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal; to make contracts; to purchase or lease and hold or dispose of such real estate as may be necessary for the prosecution of its business; to sue and be sued; to complain and defend in any court of competent jurisdiction; to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, agents, or employees as are necessary for the transaction of the business of the corporation; and to prescribe, amend, and repeal its by-laws, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Section 7. Advances through banks.

This section authorizes the corporation to make advances upon such terms as it may prescribe for periods not exceeding five years from the date of such advances to any bank, banker, or trust company which has made, since April 6, 1917, and which has outstanding, any loan or loans to any person, firm, corporation, or association conducting an established and going business in the United States whose operations shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war. Such advances are not to exceed 75 per cent of the face value of such loan or loans.

This section also gives the corporation power to make advances to any bank, banker, or trust company which has rendered financial assistance directly or indirectly, to any such person, firm, corporation, or association by the purchase of its bonds or other obligations since April 6, 1917. Such advances are not to exceed 75 per cent of the market value of such bonds or other obligations at the time the advance is made. The advances authorized in this section can not be made until the bank, banker, or trust company gives a promissory note or notes secured by the notes, or other obligations, which are the basis of the advance, together with all the securities held as collateral by such bank, banker, or trust company for such notes, bonds, or other obligations.

This section authorizes the corporation to make advances up to 100 per cent of the face value of the loan or up to 100 per cent of the market value of the bonds or other obligations at the time of the advances if the advances are secured as aforementioned and in addition thereto by collateral security of a market value at the time of such advance equal to at least 33 per cent of the amount advanced by the corporation. The additional collateral must be of a character prescribed by the board of directors.

This section also provides that the corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time.

Section 8. Advances to savings banks and similar institutions.

This subdivision provides that the corporation may make advances upon such terms as it may prescribe for periods not exceeding one year to any savings bank, banking institution, or trust company, which receives savings deposits, or building and loan associations, on the promissory note or notes of the borrowing institution whenever the corporation shall deem such advances to be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war or important in the public interest. In such cases the promissory note or notes must be secured by the pledge of securities of such character as shall be prescribed by the corporation board of directors, the market value of which at the time of such advance shall be equal in amount to at least 133 per cent of the amount of the advance. The rate of interest charged in such cases can not be less than 1 per cent in excess of the rate of discount for 90-day commercial paper prevailing at the time of such advance at the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the borrowing institution is located. This section requires the corporation to retain the power to require additional security at any time.

In peace times current deposits in savings banks are in excess of withdrawals, but the tendency has been for many depositors to withdraw their funds to purchase liberty bonds. The savings banks hold large quantities of long-term investment securities, and the withdrawal of deposits might force the savings banks to sell at a sacrifice sound investment securities. If solvent institutions of this character should not be able to obtain funds to meet their obligations without sacrificing needlessly the securities they hold, the effect upon the financial condition of the country would be most detrimental, and your committee deem the safeguard proposed in this section absolutely essential.

Section 9. Direct loans to be made by the corporation.

This subdivision authorizes the corporation in exceptional cases to make advances directly to any person, firm, corporation, or association conducting an established and going business in the United States, whose operations shall be necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, but only for the purpose of conducting a business in the United States and only when it is impossible to obtain funds through banking channels or from the general public, for periods not exceeding five years, upon such terms and subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the board of directors of the corporation. This subdivision also requires the corporation to retain power to require additional security at any time.

In the original bill there was no limitation as to the amount of money that could be advanced or bonds of the corporation that could be issued to meet advances made direct by the corporation.

The advances authorized to be made under this section are limited to not to exceed 16⅔ per cent of (1) the paid-in capital stock of the corporation, and (2) the aggregate amount of bonds of the corporation authorized to be outstanding at the time of the advance. In other words, if the entire capital stock of the corporation is paid in, the largest amount of money that could be advanced under this section would be $416,666,667 (16⅔ per cent of the paid-in capital plus the amount of bonds authorized to be outstanding, or 16⅔ per cent of $500,000,000 plus $2,000,000,000).

If there should only be paid-in capital stock of $200,000,000, in this case, the maximum amount that could be loaned under this section would be $166,666,667 (16⅔ per cent of the paid-in capital stock plus the amount of bonds authorized to be outstanding, or 16⅔ per cent of $200,000,000 plus $800,000,000).

Section 10. Single advances of the corporation.

This section provides that in no case shall the aggregate amount of advances made under any of the provisions of this act to any person, firm, corporation, or association exceed at any one time 10 per cent of the authorized capital stock of the corporation, or $50,000,000.

In order to properly safeguard and protect the corporation, your committee deem the addition of this section most advisable.

Section 11. Purchase and sale of Government bonds and obligations.

This section authorizes the corporation to subscribe for, acquire, and own, buy, sell, and deal in bonds and obligations of the United States, issued or converted since September 24, 1917, the date of the passage of the last bond act. Under this provision the corporation may, to a large extent, help stabilize the price of liberty bonds and other war obligations of the Government.

Section 12. Corporate authority to issue $2,000,000,000 in bonds.

This section gives the corporation authority to issue and have outstanding at any one time not to exceed $2,000,000,000 in bonds. These bonds are to be short-term bonds and to mature in not less than one nor more than five years from the date of issue. The corporation is given authority to redeem these bonds before maturity at its option. The corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is given authority to fix the rate of interest of these bonds. These bonds may be issued at not less than par in payment of any advances authorized by this act. They also may be sold at such prices not less than par as the directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may determine.

Section 13. Federal reserve banks authorized to discount paper secured by war finance corporation bonds.

Under the Federal reserve act Federal reserve banks are only authorized to discount paper secured by commercial or liquid paper. This section authorizes the Federal reserve banks to discount paper secured by the bonds of the corporation. Before a Federal reserve bank can discount or rediscount paper secured by the bonds of the corporation a rate of interest must be paid of at least 1 per cent per annum in excess of the prevailing rate for eligible commercial paper of corresponding maturity, and in such case only when the member bank satisfies the Federal reserve bank that it does not have in its possession sufficient commercial paper eligible for discount or rediscount under the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board made under authority of the Federal reserve act.

This section also authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to use paper secured by the bonds of the corporation as a basis for the issuance of Federal reserve notes, the same as it may use bonds or notes of the United States not bearing the circulation privilege. Of course the issue of Federal reserve notes is limited by the requirement of the Federal reserve act to the effect that such banks must keep a gold reserve of 40 per cent.

Section 14. President to authorize corporation to commence business.

This section prohibits the corporation from doing any business except such as is incidental and preliminary to its organization until it is authorized by the President to commence business.

Section 15. Earnings of the corporation not required for its operation.

The net earnings of the corporation not required for its operation are to be kept as a reserve fund until the corporation winds up its business. Any balance remaining after the debts of the corporation are paid is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. The corporation may use the net earnings not required for its operation, upon the direction of the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to buy bonds and obligations of the United States issued or converted since September 24, 1917, or upon like direction and approval it may deposit such earnings in member banks of the Federal Reserve System, or in any of the Federal reserve banks, or to purchase or redeem any bonds issued by the corporation.

Section 16. Bonds of the corporation tax exempt to same extent that liberty fours are exempt.

The bonds of the corporation will be exempt to the same extent that liberty fours, issued under the bond act of September 24, 1917, are exempt. That is, the principal and interest will be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, etc., except (a) estate or inheritance taxes and (b) graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes. Each person, partnership, corporation, or association is entitled to own $5,000 worth of the bonds of the corporation tax exempt. Any person, partnership, corporation, or association will be entitled to hold, tax exempt, $5,000 worth of bonds or obligations of the United States and also $5,000 worth of the bonds of the corporation.

Section 17. The United States not to be liable for obligations of the corporation.

This section provides that the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect of any act or omission of the corporation.

Section 18. Penalty for forgery and embezzlement.

This section makes anyone who (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any bond, coupon, or paper in imitation of or purporting to be in imitation of a bond or coupon issued by the corporation; or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited bond, coupon, or paper purporting to be issued by the corporation, knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited; or (3) falsely alters any such bond, coupon, or paper; or (4) passes, utters, or publishes as true any falsely altered or spurious bond, coupon, or paper issued or purporting to have been issued by the corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, liable to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

It also makes anyone connected in any capacity with the corporation who (1) embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits thereof, or (2) with intent to defraud the corporation or any other company, body politic, or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer of the corporation, (a) makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of the corporation, or (b) without authority from the directors draws any order or assigns any note, bond, draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, liable to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

TITLE II. CAPITAL ISSUES COMMITTEE.

As a corollary to Title I of the bill relating to the extension of credits this title of the bill proposes a creation of a capital issues committee to investigate, pass upon, and determine whether or not the issues of securities in excess of $100,000 are compatible with the public interest. Your committee believes that this title will be sufficient to prevent the use of capital in unnecessary expenditures during the period of the war.

The bill proposes that the Capital Issues Committee, consisting of seven members, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. At least three of the members are to be members of the Federal Reserve Board, and not more than four can be members of the same political party. The President is to fix the terms of office of the members of the committee, and the salary of the members who are not members of the Federal Reserve Board is to be fixed at $7,500 per year; but if any member receives any other compensation from any other office or employment under the United States the amount so received is to be deducted from the salary. If a member of the committee receives more than $7,500 per year from the Government in some other capacity, he shall receive no salary as a member of the committee. This title provides that no member of the committee shall directly or indirectly participate in the determination of any questions affecting his personal interest, or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

Authority is given the committee to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, agents, and other employees as are necessary to properly conduct its business and to conduct its business at places other than in Washington, D. C., although its principal place of business shall be in the District of Columbia. The usual authority to rent offices, purchase furniture, equipment, and supplies is given the committee, and the sum of $200,000 is proposed to be appropriated to meet all the expenses of the committee during the remainder of the present fiscal year and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Your committee is of the opinion that in practically all, certainly in most, cases where the committee says that it deems the issuance of securities incompatible with the public interest, that each person, firm, corporation, or association will be patriotic enough to refrain from putting such securities on the market, and that it will be unnecessary to enact into law the more drastic provisions of the original bill.

Your committee believes that practically as good result will be secured under the provisions of this bill as would have been secured under the more drastic provisions of the original bill.

Section 203 of the bill provides that the committee shall not pass upon—

1. Any borrowing by any persons, firm, corporation, or association in the ordinary course of business as distinguished from borrowing for capital purposes.

2. The renewing or refunding of indebtedness existing at the time this bill becomes a law.

3. The resale of any securities the sale or offering of which the committee has determined to be compatible with the public interest.

4. Any securities issued by any railroad corporation the property of which may be in the possession and control of the President of the United States.

5. Any bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation.

TITLE III. MISCELLANEOUS.

This title contains the usual saving and repealing clauses, defines the term "securities," and provides a penalty of $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, for any violation of this act not covered by the embezzlement and counterfeiting provisions of section 18 of the bill.

This title also provides that no stamp tax shall be imposed upon any promissory note secured by the pledge of liberty three-and-a-halfs or liberty fours, or certificates of indebtedness. Your committee believes that this provision will be especially valuable in assisting in the sale of short-term certificates and will materially assist in keeping down the interest rate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an address delivered by my colleague, Mr. KING, at a recent celebration of the centennial of the founding of the Bishop Hill Colony in Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COPIES OF WAR FINANCE CORPORATION BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the Senate war finance corporation bill as it passed the Senate be printed and put into the document room.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman ask for a larger number than 1,000. There will be very heavy demand for these bills.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will explain to the gentleman that this request applies only to the bill as it passed the Senate. I want the Senate bill to remain on the Speaker's table until the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union passes upon our bill, and my thought is then to move to strike out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill and substitute the action of the House on this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The idea is so that we may have more copies of the Senate bill for distribution?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman if he is prepared to state when he expects to call up this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Immediately after the disposition of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman proposes not to interfere with District day, I understand, which is on Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I am going to ask unanimous consent that the war finance corporation bill (H. R. 10608) may have a privileged status.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 10608) shall have a privileged status. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand the gentleman does not proposed to interfere with the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I gave notice that I am going to take it up immediately after the disposition of that bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that means the bill can not be called up before Tuesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because Monday being District day, it is understood the District Committee will occupy that day.

Mr. KITCHIN. It will not be called up until Tuesday.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the legislative, executive, and judicial bill to be considered on Tuesday, and after that the war corporation bill follows?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it follows the legislative bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One further question. Does that interfere with Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it does not interfere with Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. It can not interfere with Calendar Wednesday except by unanimous consent or by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one minute to have the Clerk read a telegram which I have received.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

KALAMAZOO, MICH., March 9, 1918.

Hon. J. M. C. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Kalamazoo Chamber of Commerce desires to protest against proposed new charge of Director General of Railroads for switching cars to industrial sidings. In our opinion it means unfair discrimination and a poor way to get revenue for the railroads. Will you kindly make known our attitude?

KALAMAZOO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, March 10, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a proviso to be inserted under the appropriations for the Public Health Service, to be carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 966), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WEBB, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8938) to equip the United States penitentiary, Atlanta, Ga., for the manufacture of supplies for the use of the Government, for the compensation of prisoners for their labor, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 365), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9784) incorporating patrol drivers into the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 366), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 123) providing for the calling into military service of certain classes of persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 367), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (S. 1544) to provide for appeals from decisions of boards of local inspectors of steam vessels, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 370), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8856) for the relief of Mary J. Lacey, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 368), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KITCHIN: A bill (H. R. 10608) to provide further for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRAND: A bill (H. R. 10609) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 10610) to establish a bureau for the study of the criminal, pauper, and defective classes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEA of California: A bill (H. R. 10611) providing for punishing employers for failure to provide seats for female employees; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 10612) to restore to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for a bird reservation in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, Cal., and Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (by request): A bill (H. R. 10613) to provide for the collection and disposal of garbage and miscellaneous refuse of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SIMS: Resolution (H. Res. 267) providing for the consideration of Senate bill 1854, entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States"; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. WEBB: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 39) to print 250,000 copies of the soldiers' and sailors civil relief act; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. ESCH: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to the privilege of sending mail without postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to excess profits on war revenues; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 10614) granting an increase of pension to George E. Roe; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 10615) granting an increase of pension to John C. Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AUSTIN: A bill (H. R. 10616) granting a pension to Nannie Roberts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNE: A bill (H. R. 10617) granting a pension to Emma A. Drake; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANTRILL: A bill (H. R. 10618) granting an increase of pension to F. G. McGuire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ESTOPINAL: A bill (H. R. 10619) for the relief of Frank Payne Selby; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LONERGAN: A bill (H. R. 10620) to correct the military record of Ezra G. Bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MEEKER: A bill (H. R. 10621) granting a pension to George V. M. Sommerhauser; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 10622) granting an increase of pension to Matthew B. Schofield; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10623) granting a pension to Mrs. Effie M. Meloy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. QUIN: A bill (H. R. 10624) for the relief of Sargeant Prentiss Knut, administrator of the estate of Haller Nutt, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUBEY: A bill (H. R. 10625) granting a pension to William S. Beachum; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WOODS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 10626) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup major of Field Artillery in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Resolution of a mass meeting of the citizens of Delaware County, held at Media, Pa., urging immediate prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of Samuel J. Grob and 9 other farmers of Leslie, Mo., and a memorial of the Excelsior Farm Club, of New Haven, Mo., appealing for higher prices on farm products commensurate with the increase in commodities which the farmer must buy; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Resolution of the West Roxbury (Mass.) Woman's Club, urging the repeal of second-class postage provisions of the war-revenue act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Petitions of 21 farmers of Divide County, N. Dak., and of 57 residents of Crosby, N. Dak., asking price of $2.75 per bushel for the wheat crop of 1918; to the Committee on Agriculture.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, March 10, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. NORTON as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, so near and yet so seemingly far;

Speak to him Thou, for he hears, and spirit with spirit can meet;
Closer is he than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.

In pursuance to a long-established custom of the Congress of the United States, we assemble here to-day in memory of a Member who served with fidelity, interest, and ability his district, his State, and Nation for many years on the floor of this House. His work done, Thou hast called him to the larger life and to a larger service.

Death always comes with a shock. It is one of the profound mysteries which our limited knowledge can not solve.

The mind that thought, willed, and obeyed; the heart that loved and poured its affections out to whom it was sent; the eyes through which the soul looked; the hand that clasped with warmth the friends and loved ones, are stilled; and we look with awe and reverence upon the prostrate form.

The angel of faith comes to our relief.

Hope says, be still, sad heart, and cease repining,
For behind the clouds is the sun still shining.

So we trust and rest our grief in Thee, for love is immortal, and, though long delayed, it shall at last be satisfied. This comforts us and all who mourn for the departed; that we may look forward to a brighter day in a brighter realm, where our loved ones shall dwell forever in our presence; in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HELGESEN, OF NORTH DAKOTA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. BAER, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, March 10, 1918, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character and public services of Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN late a Representative from the State of North Dakota.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the following resolutions be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 268.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN, late a Member of this House from the State of North Dakota.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] is recognized.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, HENRY T. HELGESEN, late a Member of Congress from the first district of North Dakota, whose memory we have met to honor to-day, was born near Decorah, Winnishiek County, Iowa. After having been educated in the public schools, normal institute, and business college of Decorah, he entered the mercantile business there. He moved to Milton, then in the Territory of Dakota, in 1887. He at once became an active and permanent figure in the business and political life of the Territory He served two terms as commissioner of agriculture and labor, retiring from that office in 1892.

He was at all times a stanch friend of education. He stood for higher standards for the public and high schools as well as the institutions of higher learning. In this connection he served as a member of the board of university regents for 10 years.

A man of sterling honesty and integrity, as well as a close student of history and political economy, Mr. HELGESEN was an idealist in politics. In this respect he was typical of the idealism characteristic of his race. He was one of the first men in North Dakota to appreciate the need for a reform in the political methods then in vogue. He stood for clean primaries, clean conventions, and above all for placing the reins of power in the hands of the people. He fought for the restoration of genuine representative government in North Dakota. To that end he was active in the organization of the Scandinavian League. That league was for a number of years a powerful factor for clean politics. Later he became interested in the movement known as Progressive Republicanism. Living at a long distance from my home I had not until then become personally acquainted with him, though he was a well-known figure in the State. From that time I was intimately associated with him in political matters.

In 1908 we were the candidates of the Progressive faction for the two positions of Representative in Congress, our State not having been divided into congressional districts at that time. While we were both defeated the long and vigorous speaking campaign which we engaged in was thought by many to have been in large part the cause of the election of one-half of our ticket, it being our habit to talk for the principles underlying our cause rather than in aid of our candidacies.

Two years later, having received the highest vote among those defeated at the former election, I was invited at two different State meetings of Progressive Republicans to become a candidate for Congress as a running mate for Mr. HELGESEN, the support of Progressive Republicans being assured to both of us. Representative GRONNA having become a candidate for the Senate there was a vacancy in the House, and it was believed that one Progressive Republican could be elected. As our State had not yet been divided into congressional districts I would have in a sense been a candidate against Mr. HELGESEN, as it was improbable that we could both be elected. Mr. Hanna was serving his first term and according to custom was thought to be sure of a second term. I refused to be a candidate. This circumstance is mentioned somewhat in detail as evidence of my great respect and love for our departed friend. I am proud to have thus had the opportunity in a rather tangible way to show my admiration and esteem of his many excellent qualities. He was nominated and elected along with Mr. Hanna. Within a few months the North Dakota Legislature divided the State into congressional districts. So the way was opened for me to come here, where I joined Mr. HELGESEN in the Sixty-third Congress.

My service with him here will always be a pleasant memory. We were closely associated, I am proud to have had his confidence. I valued his advice, and he seemed to regard mine as worth while. The day before he went to the hospital, never to return, he spent almost three hours in my office discussing some pending legislation.

I admired Mr. HELGESEN because of his splendid courage. Having reached a decision as to what would be the right course he would stand fast, stand firm, and stand alone, if need be. It was this trait of character which endeared him to the people of his State and commanded the respect and love of his colleagues in the House. He had the spirit of William Lloyd Garrison when he said:

"I will not excuse, I will not equivocate, I will not retreat an inch, I will be heard."

To be first in advocating a good and, perhaps, unpopular cause is to be lonely, but to be thus lonely is to be noble. It was this nobility of soul which characterized HENRY T. HELGESEN.

Underlying all his business dealings and public acts was a sublime faith in the religion of Jesus Christ. Progressive and advanced in his thought in all other respects, he was old-fashioned in his religious ideas. Perhaps that accounts for his rugged honesty. He lived his religion. When the time came he was ready to go, and I fancy passed on in the spirit of one of the hymns he loved:

O love, that will not let me go,
I rest my weary soul on thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be.

O light, that followed all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to thee;
My heart restores its borrowed ray
That in thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be.

O joy, that seekest me through pain,
I can not close my heart to thee;
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be.

O love, that lifted up thy head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] is recognized.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, the United States is rightly termed the melting pot of the world. From every clime and nation men and women seek our broad land to find their rightful place "in the sun," and eventually to become a part of our citizenry. Of all the peoples who thus come to our shores none more fully embody the elements of good citizenship than do the Norwegians. Intelligent, thrifty, and hard working, they quickly and readily adapt themselves to the new land which they have sought from afar. No "hyphenated Americans" they, but an integral part of our body politic. That community or State may call itself fortunate which numbers among its people a goodly proportion of citizens of Scandinavian birth or ancestry.

It was the good fortune of the late Congressman HENRY T. HELGESEN to be the direct descendant of such stock. It was also his good fortune to be born poor. I do not mean in grinding, abject poverty, but in those circumstances and conditions that teach lessons of frugality and inculcate habits of thrift and industry.

His birthplace was a farm in Decorah, Winnishiek County, Iowa. He received his education in the public schools and normal and business colleges of that town. There he spent his youth and early manhood. After leaving school Mr. HELGESEN engaged in mercantile pursuits and quickly became one of the prominent young business men of Decorah. Great was the regret of his fellow townspeople when, in 1887, the pioneer spirit of his ancestors stirring within him, Mr. HELGESEN, with his young wife and babies, removed to the then Territory of Dakota. He was one of the first settlers in Milton, of which town he remained a citizen until his death.

It was not my privilege to enjoy the personal acquaintance of Mr. HELGESEN, but, as his successor in representing the first district of North Dakota in Congress, I have learned much of his nobility of character and the high esteem in which he was held by the people of his adopted State. A letter written to him a short time before his death by a North Dakota man well expressed this esteem. The writer opened his letter with these words: "Dear and beloved by all your constituents Mr. HELGESEN."

The words "a prophet is not without honor save in his own country" could never be truthfully spoken of Mr. HELGESEN, for in his home town of Milton the love and respect manifested by the people who knew him best—his friends and neighbors—is deeply touching. He was their Congressman, but he was more—he was their trusted friend and neighbor. He was "Henry" to them, and tears still dim the eyes of many as they recount the kind words and deeds of him whom they loved. His life was one of service in the best sense of the word.

You who knew Congressman HELGESEN well know that his splendid physique, vigorous strength, and commanding personality were the outward indication of a keen intellect, an analytical mind, and invincible courage. The most kind-hearted of men, he could be combative and aggressive for what he believed to be right. He was essentially a man of the people and a friend of the poor. He loved liberty, hated oppression, and detested hypocrisy. His friendship was true. It could be depended upon. He never betrayed a trust. He was honest in thought, in word, and in deed.

Mr. HELGESEN'S public and political career commenced long before his election to Congress. When the Territory of Dakota was divided he was the first commissioner of agriculture and labor in the new State of North Dakota, and held that office for two terms. For 10 years he was a member of the board of regents of the University of North Dakota. He placed a high value on education and took a great interest in the welfare of young people. When he became an employer of men it was his delight to engage a struggling young man anxious for an education, and by every means in his power help such an one to attain the goal of his ambition. Many a prosperous young man in Iowa and North Dakota owes his start in life to the helping hand extended by Congressman HELGESEN. So unostentatiously were his kindly deeds performed, however, that but few other than the recipients had knowledge of them.

In private and in public life Mr. HELGESEN was hearty and sincere. He was outspoken with the candor of truth. His home in Washington was headquarters for any of his constituents who visited the Capital City, and warmhearted hospitality was always extended to the folks from "back home." In his office or at his home his friends were always welcome, but he had no time nor inclination for intercourse with those who had proven themselves insincere. He was a leader in the fight for cleaner politics in North Dakota, and never in the many vicissitudes of commercial, private, or political life was his good name tarnished or his honor stained. His rule of conduct was the golden rule, and his slogan was "A square deal for all."

A plain, practical man, Mr. HELGESEN yet possessed a strain of sentiment of which only his close friends were aware. A beautiful picture, a touching poem, and fine music were deeply appreciated by him. Among his personal papers were always to be found clippings of short poems and bits of literature which had appealed to him, and were treasured for their charm of pathos or sentiment.

His personal tastes were intellectual. He was a man of wide and varied study and numbered among his friends writers and scientists of world renown. His scientific work and research in geography and current history were extensive, and his contributions to the literature of geographical exploration have attracted the attention and won the highest commendation and indorsement of men of learning and science.

Four times in succession was Mr. HELGESEN elected to represent the people of North Dakota in Congress, once as Congressman at large and three times as Representative from the first district. During his term of service he was an honored and useful Member of this House, and his active work on the Agricultural Committee will long be remembered by his constituents and colleagues alike. Blessed with a keen mind and sound common sense, he fought gallantly for any measure which seemed to him to be for the best advantage of his constituents and the people of the Nation at large.

Having spent his boyhood days on a farm, and representing a constituency largely composed of farmers, Mr. HELGESEN was ever alert to the agricultural interests of the country. His speech in the House in 1911 on reciprocity with Canada is still quoted as embodying the soundest arguments advanced on that question from the farmer's point of view. He was an ardent advocate of woman suffrage and was ever ready to speak a good word for that worthy cause.

In regard to our foreign policies Congressman HELGESEN felt deeply, thought clearly, and acted with the courage of his convictions. Always independent of slavish precedents, he did not hesitate to cast his vote with a hopeless minority when he felt that minority to be right. As an opponent he was a fair and generous fighter. He always fought in the open. He never stabbed an antagonist in the back or shot from ambush. He never faltered in a fight, even though he foresaw the loss of the battle. To him—

> It was not the loss of the battle that counts,
> But how did you fight, and why?

Mr. HELGESEN was a loving husband and a kind and affectionate father. He left to his children the priceless legacy of unsullied honor and an untarnished name; and when he was overtaken in the strength and prime of manhood by that silent adversary to whom sooner or later we must all surrender, his last thoughts and words were for the welfare and happiness of his loved ones. In the opening days of the Sixty-fifth Congress his earthly remains were carried to his boyhood home for their long rest, and from far and near men and women came to do him honor and to mourn his loss. Eulogies were delivered at his funeral by men of learning and eloquence, but of them all none could surpass the tribute paid by the plain words of hundreds of his fellow citizens that "HENRY HELGESEN was one of the straightest, squarest men the State had ever known."

> He was a friend of truth, of soul sincere,
> In action faithful and in honor clear;
> Who broke no promises, served no private ends,
> Sought no title, and forsook no friends.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] is recognized.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to know Mr. HELGESEN intimately during his stay here in Washington, to serve with him on committees where our duties brought us in frequent and friendly contact. I observed closely his faithful and efficient work here in the House, especially on the Committee on Agriculture. Of Mr. HELGESEN it can truthfully be said that he was a noble example of manhood, kindly and lovingly disposed, greatly admired, commanding the respect and admiration of all who knew him. He was not only a man of high type of character, sterling qualities, and talent, but he was sociable, courteous, obliging, and loyal to his friends and his country. He was endowed with lofty ideals, and always pursued his duty with fidelity, industry, and rectitude to purpose. His guiding star was honesty and sincerity, always shunning deceit and cunning practice. Though modest and unassuming, Mr. HELGESEN was a man of action, a man of firm determination to do justice and right to all. To the bottom of his heart he deplored deceit and oppression. He was a forcible, logical, and convincing speaker, a man of integrity, sound judgment, possessed of a broad mind and firm convictions. As a result, he honorably and gloriously succeeded in fulfilling the duties incumbent upon him. Knowing Mr. HELGESEN, it was impossible not to become attached to him and to be inspired with the fullest confidence and respect for his grand character.

Mr. HELGESON was born in my district, in Winneshiek County. On the hill overlooking the beautiful city of Decorah and the splendid surrounding scenery rest his remains. In that vicinity he spent his boyhood days, at school and on the farm, up to the time he moved; then a young man, to the State of North Dakota, where he soon became one of its foremost citizens, taking an active part in politics, farming, and business. From boyhood his life was pure and stainless. He rose from the humble walks of life to the high position which he held in this House. His record, both private and public, is an open book without a stain of immorality, deception, fraud, or corruption. I am sure that I voice the sentiment of every Member of this House, his constituents, and all who knew him when I say that in Mr. HELGESEN we had a splendid type of manhood, founded upon integrity and virtue; that his loyalty to principles, his devotion to truth, his industry, his conscientious and efficient work merited the esteem, confidence, and respect in which he was held by his large circle of devoted friends and admirers acquired during his career here.

In his Christian home he was a devoted and kind husband, an affectionate father, a friendly and obliging neighbor. His death caused deep bereavement, sincere and profound regret to all. He died in the full maturity of his mental vigor, at a time when his life, character, example, mature judgment, and wisdom was of the greatest value to his country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] is recognized.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I came here to-day more to listen than to speak; for I wished to hear the story of the earlier days of our beloved colleague, his helpfulness to mankind, and the tributes of affection to the memory of our departed friend.

One of the first men that I met in Congress and became acquainted with was Congressman HELGESEN. Immediately there arose between us that friendship and love that man should have for man and that will never be forgotten. There was something about him that appealed to me as a man of great thought and business ability, and as one who inspired confidence in everyone that he met. Possibly one of the reasons for my getting acquainted with him closely was that I knew of the nationality from which his people came. I have known the Scandinavian people from my boyhood days, and no better people ever came to the West for the purpose of developing that great country. As early as the "forties," in the last century, the Norwegians came to Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, and later to Minnesota, and then farther West, and no people have done more to develop that part of our glorious heritage than the Scandinavians.

They came with empty hands. Most of them were poor, but they had a faith in themselves and in God. They turned the virgin soil to the sun; they plowed, sowed, and reaped; they built homes, humble in the beginning, but which became in later years the very best in our country. They did their part in building towns and cities. They went into the lumber camps of the North and felled the forests, and did as much as any other people to develop that portion of our land. They entered into business life, into every line of activity that the American people engage in, and they have been successful. I believe that one of the reasons why the Scandinavian people of this country have become true Americans is that they brought the Bible and the hymn book with them. They feared God and no one else. They commenced their services praising the Almighty God, the Father of us all, and listened to the teachings of the Master in humble homes; but as soon as possible they erected churches for divine worship. And they not only erected churches, but schools and colleges, that their children might attend and learn the ways of true Americanism and have that advantage which would make them equally successful with other peoples in the world.

From that kind of stock Congressman HELGESEN came. I listened to the remarks of my colleagues here as to his early days on the farm, then as a young merchant, and then as a pioneer in North Dakota. I have seen and know of that same experience in the lives of many of them, and I do not wonder that when Congressman HELGESEN became a Member of this House that he knew the needs of the people of the West, that he knew the needs of the people of this country, and that he at once became an active and useful Member of this House. It is to be regretted that he should have had to pass away in the prime of his manhood and usefulness.

The Scandinavians of this country have been a loyal people. Mr. HELGESEN could not have been otherwise, because in the community where he was raised there were no more patriotic people than the people of Decorah, Iowa. When the call came in his boyhood days from President Lincoln that this Nation must be preserved, no class of people responded more freely than his people.

It is told of a neighbor of his that he had six boys that went into the service for the preservation of this Union who had the longest record of service of any family in 1861–1865. When the youngest boy, whom I have known well in later years, came and asked his mother—he was only 16—"Can I enlist?" she said, "Five of my boys are gone; you should stay at home." But the sturdy old father rose up in his chair and said, "Any boy that I have got, large enough to carry a gun for our flag and my adopted country, shall have full freedom to go." Those six boys gave twenty-four years of service in the preservation of our Union.

HENRY T. HELGESEN was but a little boy at that time, but the spirit of the neighborhood at that time must have created in him a patriotic spirit of devotion to our flag, and devotion to everything that the Stars and Stripes stand for, that could never be forgotten, and therefore I do not wonder that as a boy, as a youth, as a young man, and as he grew older in years, he wanted to do the best for his country, his neighbors, and be helpful to mankind.

It is that class of men in this country, that class of citizens, that help make this country the best Nation and the best people on earth. We can ill afford to lose men like HENRY T. HELGESEN. It will take strong men to fill his place. But we can look back with pleasure upon our association with him, those of us who served with him, and we can tell to those who come after us and to our neighbors that there was no more faithful man to his people, to his country, and to our flag than HENRY T. HELGESEN, of North Dakota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] is recognized.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, HENRY T. HELGESEN, pioneer, farmer, merchant, public servant, has broken the congressional circle and passed over to the Valley of the Great Beyond. We pause a moment to render a slight tribute to the memory of a personal friend.

Mr. HELGESEN was born near the city of Decorah, Iowa, educated in the high schools, a graduate of the little college that honors that city. He soon left for the Northwest, the Territory of Dakota, now North Dakota, where he founded his home as a pioneer. When the State entered the Union in 1889 he was elected to the office of commissioner of labor and agriculture; he was reelected to the same position, in which he gave distinct honor and service to his State.

He was elected to the Sixty-second, the Sixty-third, the Sixty-fourth, and the Sixty-fifth Congresses, but before the session of the Sixty-fifth Congress convened he was confined to his bed in a hospital in the city of Washington. But his interest in the legislation then pending before Congress was intense. His mind dwelt constantly on the great problems that were then pending.

Soon after I came to the Sixty-third Congress I had the pleasure of forming an intimate acquaintance with Mr. HELGESEN. There was probably not a Member in all that body that I became so closely associated with in counsel and in the discussion of matters that were then pending in Congress. I found him strong in conviction, sincere in purpose, loyal to his ideals; an unceasing worker, untiring in his efforts to please the people who sent him here.

He was known as a Progressive. When that great movement struck the Northwest he was a leader of those who sought to bring back the legislative department of the Government to the constitutional rights of the people. He was one who believed that the legislative department of the Government should be brought close to the people, and when he found his party in the wrong he refused to follow them in the wrong. When he found them in the right he gladly followed them, and gave his counsel and advice.

It was that sterling character of intense loyalty and honesty that formed his opinions on every public question. The loyalty of service was high in his character. We often read of the physician who visits in the hospital the sick with a contagious disease and refuses to leave the bedside, notwithstanding the contagious disease, the one thought being of public service. We read of the engineer who remains upon his engine, moving swiftly along the great railroad, with impending danger, and refuses to leave his engine, knowing that those under his charge rely upon him; when he could jump to a place of safety, he prefers to go down in death into the coming wreck; like the pilot upon the vessel, refusing to leave his place of trusteeship until every passenger has reached a place of safety.

It was such a purpose that was ever uppermost in the mind of HENRY T. HELGESEN and led him in his public service in this House.

I was one of the number who journeyed on the funeral train to that beautiful little city of Decorah, in the district now represented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], and when our train reached there the whole city was in mourning. The little children filled the streets. From every part of the county came old friends to honor and revere his memory. I could see many of them weeping as the funeral procession went up the street of that little city. It was a testimonial that long will live in my memory. They laid him to rest in the little cemetery that overlooks the city, amid a wilderness of roses.

Let us, like him, seek the love of little children, the good will of men and women, that our lives may be an inspiration and our memory a benediction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] is recognized.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, in the prime of life he left us. Yesterday he stood among us full of vigor and inspiring in his very presence. To-night he sleeps beneath the stars.

And perhaps it is best thus in the midst of the battle of life, while strongly defending those principles he held nearest his heart, to go down to death and be no more.

He leaves a vacant chair, and aching hearts will always recall him as he was. I can see him now striding down the Halls of Congress, tall, strong, and powerful. His quick glance and rapid words arrested and held attention. He was a leader among men, and none knew him but respected the Congressman from the first district of the great State of North Dakota.

My acquaintance with Congressman HENRY T. HELGESEN was brief, but will be long remembered. As a citizen of Minnesota, I knew him well by reputation. He was beloved by his people, and his popularity was not confined to the boundaries of the district which he represented in Congress. Throughout the State of North Dakota and the entire Northwest he was known as a man of honor and integrity—a man of tremendous faith in the average man.

Mr. HELGESEN was a Progressive Republican, but he was never at any time a blind follower of any man or of any party. He served in this House under a Republican administration and under a Democratic administration. Four times elected to Congress by the Republican Party he was sometimes criticized by Members of that party for occasionally voting in favor of Democratic measures. A stanch believer in Republican principles, he was sufficiently broadminded to be untrammeled by party ties, and his vote was cast for what he believed to be the best interests of the country.

Those who knew Mr. HELGESEN know that he was a man of strong convictions. In his political life he was not given to snap judgments. He weighed each question as it arose carefully and judicially. His decision made, he was firm and unswerving in its advocacy. No criticism or ridicule, no hectic clamor or political opposition, could move him from his place.

In those stirring days of the Sixty-fourth Congress, when the prospect of impending war was discussed on every hand, Congressman HELGESEN was firm in his contention for a continued and impartial neutrality on the part of the United States. Those of you who have served here for many years know that it is no easy matter for a man in Congress to be one of the small minority opposed to measures which have the overwhelming support of the reigning administration. Yet Mr. HELGESEN did not hesitate to place himself in such minority. At a time when we were drifting nearer and nearer war Mr. HELGESEN introduced in this House a resolution demanding a referendum of the people of the United States on the question whether or not war should be declared. This resolution—the last one ever introduced by Mr. HELGESEN—was read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by him, and in its support he said:

> Mr. Chairman, believing that the people of this Nation have the right to be consulted and to determine for themselves whether or not they want to become a party to the wholesale slaughter now going on in Europe and offer their sons as a sacrifice to the modern barbarous and inhuman engines of destruction used by both sides in that conflict, I am introducing the following resolution.
> If the element which insists that war is the only way by which we can honorably settle our differences with the belligerents in Europe finally succeeds in involving us in that terrible conflict, no father, no mother, and no American boy who will be sacrificed in the trenches in Europe will ever be able to truthfully say that I have not done my utmost to save them from such a fate, or that I have not tried to give the people of the Nation an opportunity to determine for themselves whether or not they believe that war is the only honorable means by which we can deal with the situation now confronting us.

Those remarks were typical of the man. The life, liberty, and happiness of the people of the United States was first in his thoughts. His big heart beat warmly for his fellow men. He was no pacifist by nature, as none know better than his colleagues who served with him in this House. Believing, as President Wilson said in his address to the Congress on February 26, 1917, that "the American people do not want an armed force put into action," Mr. HELGESEN exerted all of his influence to preserve an impartial and absolute neutrality.

The last speech made on the floor of the House by Mr. HELGESEN was a speech against the arming of American merchant ships, and when the vote was taken a little later on the question of armed neutrality—which was considered a practical declaration of war—Mr. HELGESEN made one of a little group of 14 men who, fearlessly, in the face of overwhelming opposition and at the risk of permanently antagonizing the administration, voted against that measure. And from every part of his district, his State, and the United States a flood of letters and telegrams poured into his office, expressing the heartfelt thanks and appreciation of American citizens from every walk of life for his courage and fearlessness in making a determined effort to save this country from the horrors of war.

Congressman HELGESEN never forgot that he was a servant of the people, holding office by their will. His pride in the people who thus honored him was great, and his earnest desire to serve his constituents, regardless of politics, was well known. In that desire lay much of his political strength. No complaint was too small for him to investigate, no appeal so humble as to be neglected. The welfare and wishes of his constituents were the guiding light of his official action, and that light was never dimmed by any willful act of his.

Always interested in the welfare of the rising generation, Mr. HELGESEN was a strong advocate of vocational education, the principles of which he put into practical operation in the education of his own family.

Mr. HELGESEN was deeply interested in geographical and historical research, and his work along those lines will be long remembered. It was due to his efforts that the official United States maps of the Arctic regions were corrected to conform to the latest and most authentic reports, and his writings on Arctic exploration won for him an international reputation. Some of the results of his investigations were incorporated in a speech delivered by him on the floor of the House on January 13, 1916. In referring to this speech, the noted historian and geographer, Edwin Swift Balch, of Philadelphia, wrote to Mr. HELGESEN:

> It is as fine a piece of historical geography as was ever penned, and it will live in geographical annals.

Dr. Herman Schoenfeld, Ph. D., LL. D., professor at Georgetown University, also wrote Mr. HELGESEN in regard to the same speech:

> You have rendered the greatest possible service to the sacred cause of truth and science, and your name will therefore be engraved with golden letters in the records of truth in polar discovery.

Dr. Chase Salmon Osborn, LL. D., author, explorer, and ex-governor of Michigan, considered by many as the most widely traveled man of this generation, wrote on March 20, 1916:

> You have conferred a favor upon the people of the entire Nation. As one of them, permit me to thank you.

Middleton Smith, explorer, author, and member of the Point Barrow International Polar Expedition, summed up his opinion in these words:

> As a historical document your speech will live forever and a day.

The greatest living American authority on Arctic exploration, Maj. Gen. A. W. Greely, leader of the Lady Franklin Bay Arctic expedition, commended Mr. HELGESEN's work in geographical research, in a letter written under date of March 5, 1917, from which I quote:

> Your investigation displays a legal mind of keen perception, and your unselfish labor must have been great. * * * I feel that you have thus rendered a service both to the truth of history and to the cause of science.

In the death of Congressman HELGESEN his family lost a kind and loving husband and father, his State a conscientious and able Representative, and the Nation an upright and fearless statesman.

He grew in power and independence and his district grew with him. The old first will continue for many a decade to send strong and independent men to Congress. Had he lived through the Sixty-fifth Congress he would have continued to hold a leading place in the councils of the Nation. Fearless, powerful, untiring, he is badly missed to-day.

Mr. Speaker, death is the great tragedy of life, but, sir, the life of Congressman HELGESEN reminds us of the service we can render and the influence we may leave behind us.

The end of the road is a door to God.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota took the chair.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is recognized.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker—

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
All that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour.
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

I come here to-day to pay my tribute of love to the memory of him who was my colleague and my friend. With those who knew and loved him for his gentle and sterling character, I come to breathe for a moment the sweet fragrance of flowers his life left behind, and to lay upon the sacred altar of his fame my words of admiration and esteem.

I can not hope to be able to pay just tribute in words to the memory of North Dakota's brilliant and much beloved citizen, whose untimely death we so much lament. The magnificent accomplishments of his life, his rise from humble surroundings to the position of a recognized leader in the greatest legislative body in the world, are the highest tributes and the most enduring monuments to his memory.

Mr. HELGESEN was of Norwegian descent. He came of that hardy pioneer stock which in the middle of the last century crossed the seas in quest of new homes and settled on the untamed but fertile farming lands of the Northwest, and which has done so much in the last 50 years to make that section of the country the richest and most productive part of the Nation. He was born, reared, and educated in Winneshiek County, one of the loveliest portions of Iowa, and spent the days of his mature manhood in upbuilding the great Commonwealth of North Dakota. By his career he added new honor to the race from which he sprang, to the State where he was born, and the State he represented here so well and so honorably.

It was my good fortune to have been closely acquainted with Mr. HELGESEN for a period of nearly twenty years. The opportunity came to me to know him as he actually was. It was given me to realize the real man and to appreciate the worth and beauty of his character and life. His was a rare spirit, such as is given to few on this earth, to illumine the pathway as he went by the depth of his logic, by the soundness of his wisdom, by the breadth of his experience and the strength and courage of his heroic nature. The pomp, the power, and the pride of official position never changed his simple faith. No man can go far astray whose love of family and kindred and friends was so great and such a guiding element in his daily personal and public life as it was with my lamented colleague.

For thirty years he was closely identified with the progress and development of North Dakota. Coming to Dakota Territory from Iowa when he was 30 years of age, he soon made the influence of his learning, experience, and sturdy character felt in the rapidly growing then agricultural frontier of the West. Two years later, when North Dakota was admitted to statehood in 1889, he was honored by being elected the State's first commissioner of agriculture and labor, and was reelected to succeed himself, serving in this position for four years. Later he served as a member of the board of trustees of the State university for three terms. His sound advice and counsel did much to lay a broad and firm foundation for the magnificent development and success which that institution has had during the past two decades.

Mr. HELGESEN possessed in a very large measure the strong and sterling characteristics of the Norwegian race from which he was descended. His appearance and manner were kind and pleasing. They were that of a leader of men. They commanded the respect and confidence of all his friends and acquaintances. He was a man at once a lover of fairness and of freedom. He was among the early leaders of the progressive spirit in the Republican Party in North Dakota. From the railroad and reactionary interests which for many years held sway in the State he met bitter opposition. With the spirit of determination and persistence of the Vikings of old, he fought his way to the top and overcame all opposition. He lived to see the principles of State government for which he contended succeed. He lived to see the ideas and ideals of truly representative government, which he advocated in the State for many years when his followers were few, become overwhelmingly popular.

Always liberal and open minded, he refused to surrender his principles or compromise his convictions. It was his sturdy character in public life that won and held the confidence of the public.

During the six years he served in the House of Representatives he won the highest respect and the fullest confidence of all his associates. Mr. HELGESEN was a forceful speaker and at all times a thorough, careful, and discriminating student of national affairs. He was one of the best and most widely informed men on the very important Committee on Agriculture, and Members of the House always depended upon him for wise guidance on all questions of legislation affecting the agricultural interests of the country. Had not his career been cut short by the grim reaper, Death, his industry, his intelligence, and his broad experience would have won for him a permanent place among the strongest and most influential leaders in Congress.

He came from the masses of the people from whence has ever come the truly great. He was always loyal and true to the masses. He learned from the teaching of his pioneer parents and from the hard battles of life which he fought the full meaning of the immortal plowman's words:

The honest man, tho e'er so poor,
Is king of men for a' that.

He learned in life's battle that as loyal, as noble, and as great a heart can beat within the homespun shirt of the toiler in mine or field or factory as pulsates beneath the royal purple of any prince; and that is why men who knew him will ever love his memory and mourn the death of this light-haired, blue-eyed, golden-hearted knight of the people who lived and died without fear and without reproach.

Mr. HELGESEN was in very poor health many months before his death. It had been most difficult for him to remain at his work. The legislative problems which the great war brought upon the country added to his labors, but he was not one to shirk responsibilities. He was a close student of war problems since the beginning of the European war and had the interest of this Nation and its people at all times close to his heart. He felt it his duty to remain at his post at whatever personal sacrifice it might cost him to give counsel to his people and to his Government in days when the civilization of centuries seemed threatened with destruction. Faithful to his ideals, my colleague yielded up his noble and useful life. It is to be greatly regretted that he should have been taken away at the time his country was about to place all the power and resources of its free people on the side of the contest for world-wide democracy and freedom and for the everlasting obliteration from the civilized world of monarchy, militarism, and serfdom. His ripe experience and his rich counsel would have been of inestimable value to this Congress; but he is gone. Why he was taken from us at such a time we know not.

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footstep in the sea
And rides upon the storm.

Still he did not die in vain.

Mr. Speaker, the lives of each one of us are guideposts to others along the pathways of life. Mr. HELGESEN'S whole life exemplified what may be accomplished by unswerving honesty and a heroic determination to make a success of whatever we undertake. The most inspiring examples which have descended to us from the pages of history, sacred as well as profane, are those of the early Christian martyrs and the more modern political and religious reformers who have surrendered their lives upon the altar of sacrifice, the quiet but determined heroes who have suffered martyrdom for principles and convictions they held dear, who have died uncomplainingly at their posts of duty as my colleague did. I saw and spoke to him shortly before he was taken away. While he seemed to realize that death was near, his mind was busy with thoughts of state and his inquiries of me were about the work of the Congress, the progress of the world war, and the thoughts, feelings, and welfare of the people of our own Nation. His departing recalls to me the beautiful lines which have been written on "Death and Duty"—

Dead at his post of duty!
What finer eulogy? All the boast
Of pomp and glory seems but idle breath,
Beside the calm quiet of death,
Where death and duty meet
Is found solution most complete
Of all life's problems! It's enough
Dead and at his post!

But such men as he are not dead; they live in the hearts of their countrymen. The verdict of history will be that he was notable in those characters which go to make up the best and strongest leaders of men the world has known.

He was devoted to his country, faithful to his trust, sincere in all his relations with his fellowmen and suddenly taken from us in the prime of his faculties and the plentitude of his usefulness. Death has bereft us of his presence. Death can not bereave his family, his friends, or his country of the high service he rendered nor of the tender memories his manly personality inspired.

While North Dakota's soil would have been proud to have guarded his last mortal remains it was fitting that after life's duties nobly done he should have been taken home to the green hillsides of beautiful Winneshiek County, Iowa, where he first saw the light of day. We laid him to rest near the home of his boyhood, where he first met, loved, and won the good wife with which God so blessed his life, and of whom he was so justly proud. He sleeps where hardy Norsemen and their descendants have made with their toil and their intelligence a paradise out of once wild prairie lands. He sleeps near the shadows of famed Luther College, an institution of learning which I know he admired greatly. He sleeps the last long sleep, as he wished to sleep it, on a wonderfully beautiful hillside overlooking the quiet but charming little city of Decorah, where it can be truly said health, happiness, and contentment cheer all who labor there.

With hearts full of sorrow we can truly say of him the best that can be said of any man—the world is better because he lived in it.

Mr. NORTON resumed the chair.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members shall have five days within which to extend their remarks upon the life, character, and public services of the late HENRY T. HELGESEN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] asks unanimous consent that all Members have five days in which to extend their remarks upon the life, character, and public services of the late HENRY T. HELGESEN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Under the special order for the day the House now stands adjourned until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, March 11, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 11, 1918.

(Legislative day of Friday, March 8, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

EXEMPTION OF HAROLD STEINFELT FROM ARMY.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate at this time for a moment to make a statement in the nature of personal explanation, if not of privilege. There is a young man in my town, Mr. Harold Steinfelt, within the draft age and who has stood a physical examination and has been favorably passed on more than once by the local board. Mr. Steinfelt's father is the owner and manager of a large mercantile business and is reputed to be a man of great wealth. The local board passing on young Steinfelt's claim for exemption as manager of this mercantile business refused to grant the exemption Appeals were taken, and at this end of the line great influences from prominent men outside of Arizona have been attempted to save him from serving his country in this time of its dire necessity.

I have received many letters of protest against Mr. Steinfelt's evasion of the draft and charges that I have been instrumental in keeping him out of the Army. Such accusations are utterly false. On the contrary, I have told Gen. Crowder and the Assistant Secretary of War that I could see no reason why Mr. Steinfelt should avoid the draft any more than dozens of other young men from Arizona, who are now in the Army under the draft and are giving that loyal service which our country expects from its able-bodied young men. I merely make this statement thus publicly so as to silence the misrepresentations being made against me at home by persons whose motives for the circulation of such falsehoods are, of course, unknown to me. I hope it may never justly be said that any man can avoid the performance of his duty to his country by reason of his wealth or all influence that can be brought to bear in favor of his evasion of duty.

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION (S. DOC. NO. 195).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $13,500 required by the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1918, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS (S. DOC. NO. 197).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 11th ultimo, certain information relative to the street car situation in the city of Washington, D. C., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Washington subsequently said:

Mr. President, at the opening of the session to-day the report of the Public Utilities Commission of the Distict of Columbia, in response to a resolution of the Senate with reference to street car conditions in the city of Washington, was laid before the Senate, and, as I understand, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, but there was no order made with reference to its printing. I ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that I notice there are illustrations in the report, and in order that they may be printed, it will be necessary to have an order of the Senate. I therefore ask that the Public Printer be authorized to print the illustrations in the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent has just been given to print the report and accompanying illustrations.

PETITIONS.

Mr. COLT presented a petition of the Typographical Union of Providence, R. I., praying for an increase in the pensions of veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PHELAN presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the principle of the adoption of an adequate system of military highways on the Pacific Coast as a means of defense, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented a petition of the New Jersey Branch of the National Woman's Party, of Montclair, N. J., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of William McKinley Post, No. 18, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Jersey, of Vineland, N. J., praying for an increase in the pensions of veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MARTIN. On February 16 the bill (S. 3878) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I move that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 4069) granting an increase of pension to William Mercer;

A bill (S. 4070) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Fullerton; and

A bill (S. 4071) granting a pension to Leontine Cremerieux; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 4072) granting an increase of pension to Bethuel H. Brasted (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COLT:

A bill (S. 4073) granting a pension to John E. King (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment relative to the reorganization of the clerks and messengers to the committees of the Senate, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

INDEPENDENT HARVESTER CO.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution, and I ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 212) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be directed to investigate and report to the Senate as to the organization, conduct, financial status, and methods of the Independent Harvester Co., Plano, Ill., also as to the pending receivership and proposed reorganization as to said company, and also as to the disposition of its assets and stocks of implements, etc., on hand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator who offered the resolution what the basis of it is? So many investigations are being ordered that I think before they are concluded we will have forgotten all about them.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator I will say that an independent harvester company was organized several years ago. Farmers were solicited and urged to take stock in it. It was to compete with the International Harvester Co. and other companies supposed to constitute a trust or a sort of federation of harvester companies.

In my own State, for instance, some two hundred thousand dollars of stock was sold to farmers as an independent concern. It is now passing into a receivership, and the proposition has been made to the farmers to take common stock to the amount of 50 per cent of the stock they now hold and make a cash payment of 20 per cent, which will be preferred stock. I am anxious to know the genesis of this dissolution or receivership proceeding. In other words, I want to know whether the trust has been squeezed out or whether the failure has been due to mismanagement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma have any idea that the failure has come about other than by mismanagement?

Mr. GORE. I do not know. I know the impression prevails that new enterprises have been strangled or suffocated by older ones. I do not know that that is true in this case. It has seemed to me that farmers ought to be encouraged to embark in enterprises for the manufacture of implements they use and even in the manufacture of cotton from the raw material that they produce. It has seemed to me that if we can have light on this subject it would be worth while, and there can be no possible objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object. I simply want to say to the Senator I think after the investigation is made it will be found that it is due to lack of management. The same has happened in thousands of cases in the past.

Mr. GORE. That may be true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, at the request of my colleague [Mr. TILLMAN], a short explanation by a lady who seems to have been misrepresented in the speech of some one in reference to her attitude toward woman suffrage. My colleague is absent, and I ask that this explanation be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[South Carolina Equal Suffrage League, Mrs. Harriet P. Lynch, Cheraw, president; Mrs. John Gary Evans, Spartanburg, first vice president; Mrs. Julian B. Salley, Aiken, second vice president; Mrs. Henry Martin, Columbia, recording secretary; Mrs. James Thornton Gittman, Columbia, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Leroy Springs, Lancaster, treasurer; Mrs. Walter E Duncan, Aiken, auditor Committees: Mrs. Walter H. Cobb, Union, education; Mrs. W. C. Cathart, Columbia, legislation and congressional; Mrs. Thomas I. Charles, Conestee Mills, Greenville, finance; Mrs. A. C. Hammond, Columbia, press; Mrs. H. A. Workman, Newberry, membership.]

* * * * * * *

"It is not only to tell you of the 'great expectations' we suffragists entertain that I am writing to you; it is also to ask you to right a wrong that was done me, as representative of the South Carolina suffragists, by one of the Congressmen when the vote on the amendment was taken in the House last month.

"That Representative read into the House records as expressing my present sentiments on the method of securing suffrage in South Carolina a letter or a statement from me which was at least two years old. Two years ago I hoped we would get suffrage through our State legislature and said so. This letter was read last month by one of our Congressmen in spite of the fact that the press repeatedly announced that the State suffrage league, after its annual convention in October, had decided to indorse the Federal amendment as a war measure; in spite of the fact that he was present at the conference of December 12, which was to have met in your office but was transferred to Senator SWANSON'S, in which I asked for the women of the State the vote of every Congressman for the amendment; in spite of the fact that he had received telegrams from the league making the same request; and in spite of the fact that he received a personal wire from me asking that he vote for the amendment.

"This willful misrepresentation makes me very indignant and also places me in a very equivocal position, both personally and as president of the State suffrage league.

"Will you not read into the Senate record, when the amendment is considered, a true record of our position on this amendment? Will you not state that the suffragists of South Carolina at their annual convention last October passed an emphatic resolution announcing their indorsement of the Federal amendment as a war measure and their determination to work for it, and that in pursuance of this policy every Representative and Senator from South Carolina has been requested through the press, through petitions from representative men and women, through personal interviews and personal telegrams to vote for the amendment when it should come up for consideration during the present session of Congress?

"In making this request I am sure that I will not appeal in vain to your sense of justice and fair play.

"Yours, respectfully,

"HARRIET P. LYNCH,

"President South Carolina Equal Suffrage League."

G. H. BECKWITH.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3391) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to G. H. Beckwith for certain land within the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

JOSEPHINE W. BRECKONS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 213), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Josephine W. Breckons, widow of Joseph A. Breckons, late clerk to the Committee on Engrossed Bills of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMPSON (S. DOC. NO. 196).

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I ask that an address delivered by the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] at the banquet of the Kansas Democratic Club, Topeka, Kans., February 22, 1918, be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CASUALTY LISTS OF AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon Senate bill 3752.

Mr. NEW. May I ask the Senator if he will suspend for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NEW. On Saturday I sent a resolution to the desk calling on the War Department for certain information. I desire to move now that that resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for a little investigation of the subject to which it refers.

In this connection, Mr. President, I would merely like to say a word or two. I have no disposition at any time to question an order of the War Department, but this resolution (S. Res. 211) relates to an order that was issued on Saturday which called for the withholding of the names and addresses of the next of kin of American soldiers killed in France. It has occasioned a great many telegrams from people back home. I have had a number myself and I know other Senators have had them.

I think, under the circumstances, considering the fact that the newspapers convey an announcement that the order is issued at the request of Gen. Pershing, there ought to be some investigation, probably before it is acted upon at all, and I therefore request that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that reference will be made.

Mr. KELLOGG. In connection with the same matter I have a telegram which is in the nature of a memorial from the editor of the Tribune, of Minneapolis, Minn., bearing upon the same question, which I should like to present and have referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENYON. I have a telegram from Des Moines, Iowa, on the same subject which I should like to have referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

RAILROAD CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill 3752.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, it is with great reluctance that I find it necessary to object to the consideration of this report, because under section 15——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I raise the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Sterling
Baird	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Stone
Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Sutherland
Beckham	Kellogg	Poindexter	Swanson
Colt	Kendrick	Pomerene	Thomas
Culberson	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thompson
Curtis	King	Reed	Townsend
Dillingham	Kirby	Robinson	Trammell
Fletcher	Knox	Saulsbury	Underwood
France	McCumber	Shafroth	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Gallinger	McLean	Sherman	Walsh
Gerry	McNary	Shields	Warren
Gore	Martin	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Gronna	Myers	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Hale	New	Smith, Mich.
Hardwick	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Hollis	Nugent	Smoot

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. JAMES] is absent on account of illness. I will let the announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from South Carolina has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 3752.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I make a point of order against the conference report under rule 27, which was recently amended by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the report has not yet come up for consideration. After the report is brought up a point of order may be made against it. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk the rule as amended by the Senate a few days ago, and I make a point of order against the conference report under that rule on the ground that the conferees inserted new matter in the bill. The conference report contains the new matter inserted, and it can be found on page 3507 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There was an amendment introduced and passed by the Senate in the bill which provided, in section 15, "That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation."

The bill as passed by the House contained a similar provision, and it went to conference with those two sections reconciled and agreed. The conference report inserted the following:

Provided, however, That no State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, shall levy, assess, or collect an amount of taxes from railroad property within the State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, while under Federal control, in excess of the ratio which the taxes derived from railroad property bore to the total taxes of such State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for the year previous to Federal control.

Mr. President, the object of the section was to prevent any interference by the Federal Government in the methods employed by the States in their taxation. This practically nullifies that provision. It allows the Federal Government to place a limitation upon the amount of taxation to be imposed by the State. The provision means that the States can not increase their taxation; that if the ratio is increased in the slightest degree the Federal Government can step in and practically nullify any act of the State legislature. In my State we have just passed a highway tax of a quarter of a mill. That levy was placed on December 20 last. If the legislature the coming year should increase that levy of a quarter mill to one-half a mill by legislation, the Federal Government could practically step in and nullify that act of the State.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Was the increase of a quarter of a mill or the anticipated increase of a half a mill on railroad property alone, or on all the property of the State?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. "On all of the property of the State."

Mr. POMERENE. If that be true then this amendment will not affect the State of New Jersey. This amendment was only intended for the purpose of preventing discriminations as against railroad property.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The point I make, Mr. President, is that it practically limits the taxation that the State can impose. Railroad property in New Jersey is a part of New Jersey, and the legislature of that State have a right to impose taxation upon it as they see fit. I knew that this provision was going to be inserted in the bill in conference when we passed the bill. I had a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury before it was inserted, and he stated to me that he did not want the States of the Union taxing the railroads so that it would exhaust the Public Treasury. The taxation by the States which is imposed on property in the States is not only imposed on railroad property, but it is also imposed on the property of private individuals as well. If any excessive taxes were attempted to be imposed upon the people of the State there would be such a protest that it would prevent such legislation. This practically interferes with the rights of the States to tax; it is new matter and is subject to a point of order under the rule which we have adopted, if that rule is of any value and we mean anything by it.

I hesitate to protest at this time against an important measure of this kind, but there is here an interference not only with the taxing power of my State, but with the taxing power of every State in the Union. This bill, therefore, should be sent back to conference, and that clause should be eliminated.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, this provision is clearly a compromise between the action of the House and the action of the Senate. It is in no wise new matter. It is what the conference committee considered a fair compromise between two extremes. In section 10 of the bill as passed and agreed to by the conferees it is provided:

SEC. 10. That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President.

That was the Senate provision. That meant that the President of the United States could by Executive order change any and every law of a State which affected railroads under Federal control.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The President could not do that in the face of the provision as it passed both Houses, because it provides that nothing in this act shall affect taxation by the States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, but there is no provision in the language passed by either branch which refers to taxation, save the clause which the Senate has under consideration. The House of Representatives then inserted this language in the bill:

SEC. 15. That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

And there were certain other limitations. The House took out of the bill the clause relative to the power of the President under Federal control to effect these matters. The Senate gave him plenary power to effect them.

Mr. HARDWICK. But did not the Senate expressly put in language in another place to the effect that the President could not interefere or impair any taxation by a State?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It did not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not hear the debate, and it is important that he should do so in order to properly decide the question.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There was no such provision inserted by the Senate as that stated by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought the Senator from New Jersey had cited such a provision.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is no provision in the bill that the taxing power of a State can not be interfered with.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will state the question again, and then I shall be glad if the Senator will reinforce what I have said.

My understanding is that the bill as passed by the Senate contained the express provision that no Executive order should impair the powers of taxation by a State.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from South Carolina says that is not correct.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. All that pertains to taxation is the section which I read, which is section 10.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator read that section again?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Georgia will listen, he will find what section 10 says. It reads as follows:

SEC. 10. That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President.

Mr. HARDWICK. What is the special provision of the bill about taxation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is none in the House bill. They provided in the House bill that it should not affect taxes at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. Did we cut that out?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We modified that; we did not have it in the Senate bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. We struck out what the House bill provided on that subject?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; we modified the House provision.

Mr. HARDWICK. How was it as we left it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We first passed the bill, and it then went over to the other House. The House then adopted a substitute, on which we went into conference.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to make an inquiry. As I interpret the language which the Senator from South Carolina has just read, I find no such power in the President to suspend the right of the States to tax railroad property. If the Senator from South Carolina will glance at the clause which he has just read, he will find that it only deals with railroads as common carriers; and no liability of a railroad corporation at common law is subject to taxation. It is subject to taxation because it has property within the State, and the President has only a right to modify the law by his order in so far as they affect railroads as common carriers, not as being subject to taxation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the construction, as I understand it, which was put upon this matter by the conferees was that we had a coordination there—"all laws and liabilities." It was the intention of those who drafted this bill to cover all laws in the State, whether statutory or common laws, and all liabilities.

Mr. KNOX. But that is qualified, if the Senator will permit me, by the language which says "all laws and liabilities as common carriers"; it is all laws affecting railroads as common carriers and all liabilities to the public that affect them as common carriers; and it has nothing to do with their relation to the taxing power of the States or to anything else, except as common carriers.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The construction which was placed upon it by those who drafted the bill, as well as by the conferees, was to the effect that with the words "or with any order of the President"—it was debated here on the floor of the Senate—amended that so that the President by Executive order could change all the provisions.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for one moment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. The conference report in the particular stated by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator state the section of the bill as it comes from the conferees to which he refers?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is section 15.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desired to be informed as to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. The conference report in the particular objected to by the Senator from New Jersey in the bill—and I ask the attention now of the Senator from New Jersey to the statement I am about to make—in my opinion, is not open to the objection that he has raised. In order to present the matter briefly, I call attention to the fact that the House of Representatives struck out the entire Senate bill and agreed to one amendment in the nature of a substitute for the Senate bill. The rule of the Senate as recently adopted, with reference to the insertion of new matter in conference reports, has long prevailed in the House of Representatives and has been uniformly enforced there.

The construction which that body has placed upon the rule is, in effect, that this provision is not obnoxious to the rule, and I desire to cite in support of that view the following authority:

Where the disagreement is as to an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire text of a bill, the managers have the whole subject before them and may exercise a broad discretion as to details. (Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives, vol. 5, sec. 6424.)

And further:

Where one House strikes out all of the bill of the other after the enacting clause and inserts a new text, and the differences over this substitute are rereferred to conference, the managers have a wide discretion in incorporating germane matters, and may even report a new bill on the subject. (Vol. 5, sec. 6421.)

Now, Mr. President, I maintain that these two citations of authority—and they are the decisions of the House of Representatives, where the new Senate rule has long prevailed in practice—are exactly in point.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think we are bound by any decision of the House of Representatives, to begin with; but does the Senator contend that if we send any kind of a bill to the House and the House strikes out the entire bill, the conferees then can make up a new bill for themselves?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Whether either House has ever acted on it or not?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir; if it is germane to the subject matter of the original bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. What does the Senator mean by "germane"; that it embodies the same subject matter?

Mr. ROBINSON. That it covers the same subject matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a most extraordinary position. We are absolutely, then, at the mercy of either House, which can strike out the bill passed by the other House, and then the conference committee can write in any provision it chooses, whether it had been acted upon by either House or by both Houses.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire that the position which I am taking is a most extraordinary one is voluntary upon his part; but any statement that is made by the Senator from New Hampshire commands great respect from me as well as from the other Members of the Senate. It is true that the Senate is not bound hand and foot by the precedents of the House of Representatives, but I maintain that the precedents of the House of Representatives must necessarily apply in this case, because they are right and based on a rule analogous to the new Senate rule. You can not adopt any other principle and reach an agreement in conference touching a bill where one House or the other strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts new matter.

Now, I have already stated the history of this bill as relates to its parliamentary status. The Senate passed a bill, which went to the House of Representatives, and the House struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted new provisions, some of them similar, some of them analogous to, and some of them identical with the language contained in the Senate bill; but it was all one amendment and the Senate disagreed to this amendment. Under every rule of parliamentary procedure, both in the House of Representatives and elsewhere, the whole matter was committed to the conferees.

The amendment which the conferees have inserted was, in the opinion of the conferees, necessary to make the provision workable. In addition to that, it is certainly germane to the provision in the bill which was amended.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if the first part of section 15 providing—

That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies, or the issue of stocks and bonds—

Exactly that language was in the bill which the House adopted?

Mr. ROBINSON. No, sir; it was not.

Mr. KELLOGG. What was the provision adopted by the House of Representatives?

Mr. ROBINSON. The provision in the House bill——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I will say that just exactly those words were in the provisions adopted by the two Houses.

Mr. ROBINSON. There were also words in the House provision which are not found in the Senate provision. I will read the whole of section 16 of the House bill. I is as follows:

SEC. 16. That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation, or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein these regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, or Government supplies, the regulation of rates, the expenditure of revenues, the addition to or improvement of properties, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

The language of the Senate bill as we passed it on that subject is as follows——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From what section does the Senator read?

Mr. ROBINSON. The last proviso in section 13 of the Senate bill, which is as follows:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation.

That is the language of the Senate provision; the language of the House provision I have already read, and deals also with police regulations. What the conferees actually did was to strike out a part of the House provision and insert a proviso placing a limit on the amount of taxation that might be raised by the States from railroad property. The provision as it is intended to be enforced is a fair one, Mr. President; certainly, no Senator here will contend that while the railroads are under Federal control a State or a subdivision of a State shall collect the entire taxes necessary to maintain its government from proper y under Federal control or from railroad property. If that should be attempted, it would very materially affect the Federal operation of the railroads, as anyone can see at a glance. I do not mean to imply that any State would act unfairly in a mat er of this sort; but there are already pending before the legisla ures of some of the States bills providing for the raising of income taxes from railroad property, and we do not want to invite the States to increase taxes on railroad property while under Federal control because that may embarrass the operation of the roads.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas if he thinks Congress has the constitutional power to amend, repeal, or impair the right of a State to tax property within the State?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. When the property is under Federal control and operation and is a Federal instrumentality, I certainly think so.

Mr. KNOX. This is not Federal property; I understand it is private property, belonging to private corporations.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call the Senator's attention to a provision of this bill to the effect that all moneys and other property derived from railroad operations above the amount which the Government agrees to pay to the railroads are Government property, and the primary purpose of the bill is to accomplish a Federal purpose.

Mr. HARDWICK and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia, who, I think, first addressed the Chair.

Mr. HARDWICK. If I understand the Senator from Arkansas correctly, these words—and I am going to quote them—were in both the Senate bill and in the House bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let us see:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; that language is substantially the same in both bills.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the language not identically the same in both bills?

Mr. ROBINSON. If it is not identically the same, it is substantially the same. I have read the two provisions into the RECORD, and I say they are substantially the same. They may be said to be practically identical for the purpose of this argument.

Mr. HARDWICK. At any rate, on the subject of taxation on the part of the States, both Houses adopted the same proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, Mr. President; but under the parliamentary situation, as I have already stated, the whole subject was submitted to the conferees, and it was competent, as the authorities I have cited show—even under the rule which we have adopted—for the conferees to present a new bill.

Now, I have made some statements as to the necessity and justification for this provision. It is, when fairly comprehended, certainly within the parliamentary rule as being within the jurisdiction of the conferees.

Concerning the merits of the provision I shall not say anything further at this time, because the point of order is the question now before the Senate. I point out and emphasize the fact that the rules of parliamentary procedure permit such a provision under the existing circumstances.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. As there are a large number of Senators who were not present when the rule was agreed to a few days ago, would the Senator object to having the amended rule read now?

Mr. ROBINSON. That rule, I think, has been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not. I should like to have the rule read.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the rule being read; but I think I should conclude what I have to say about the matter and then let it be read, if the Senator desires to have that done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I do not want to interrupt the Senator in the midst of a statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the enforcement of this rule, as contended for by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from New Jersey, simply means that when the two Houses legislate upon any proposition, if there happens to be a sentence in the two provisions of the two Houses that is identical, it can never be changed in conference, notwithstanding the rule that the whole subject is committed to conference when one House adopts a substitute for the other House's bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right, too.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from New Hampshire interpolates into my statement that this is right. I have correctly stated his position. Any Senator can see that that would make the conference totally futile. All that we could ever do then would be to agree to a House provision or a Senate provision, or to make a combination of them both without modification, when, under the rules of parliamentary procedure, when a House adopts as one amendment a provision in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill, the whole subject is in conference.

That is all I can say.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Before the Senator from Arkansas takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

I never saw this report until this morning. The first confidential report which the conferees published did not contain this clause, and I assumed that that was their final report.

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President. I will state that my information is that the clerks, in preparing the report, by an oversight omitted from the first draft the proviso which is now immediately under consideration and another provision, and that made it necessary to have the conference report reprinted.

Mr. KELLOGG. On the merits, therefore, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas to consider this point:

The States have different systems of taxing the property within their borders. It is admitted that a State may tax all property situated within the State, whether it is engaged in interstate commerce or whether it is not; that it may not tax property beyond the State. It is also determined that the State may impose that tax in two ways. It may make a direct ad valorem tax upon the railroad property situated within the State or it may tax the gross earnings of the company, including a mileage percentage of the interstate earnings, provided the gross-earnings tax does not exceed what would be a fair and reasonable tax upon the property itself.

The State of California—which I will take as an illustration, because it happens to occur to me at the moment—has no ad valorem tax system upon public-service corporations, and it has no ad valorem State tax on property at all. Its State expenses are paid by a substituted system of taxes on the gross earnings of all corporations and public-service institutions. The local taxes in the State—the county and township and city taxes—are ad valorem taxes levied on the property situated in the counties or other subdivisions thereof. The State of California provided a commission to determine as nearly as possible whether the system of gross-earnings tax on railroads and other public-service corporations was fairly reasonable compared with the local taxes levied by the ad valorem system; and the work of that commission has been revised from time to time, and the legislature from time to time has changed the percentages to be levied on railroads, express companies, telephone companies, and the Pullman company in order to make them fairly comparable with the direct ad valorem tax for county and municipal purposes.

Under this bill would it be possible for the State of California to increase its taxes on the income of railroads to make them equal? This provision says that it shall not increase the taxes on railroad property in excess of the ratio which existed during the previous year. It would seem to me that if there was an error in that ratio, and a railroad property was taxed too little, that error is perpetuated by this bill, but I am not sure of it. I should like the opinion of the Senator, who has considered this question.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I think undoubtedly the effect of the limitation is to prevent an increase by the State governments, or subdivisions thereof, of taxes on railroad property out of proportion to the total taxes derived from other property. The effect of this provision is that during the period of Federal control the State of California—to take the instance which the Senator from Minnesota has just cited—could not increase the total amount of revenues raised from railroads, although it might apportion that fairly among the railroads, but it certainly could not increase the total amount of taxes raised from railroads out of proportion to the total taxes collected from other sources in the State. It preserves the rule of proportional taxation as it existed in the State of California and the other States during the last year before the Federal control.

Mr. CURTIS obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, inasmuch as our system was referred to, will the Senator permit an interruption.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I shall take but a moment.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I desire to thank the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] for his very cogent and very clear statement of the system of taxation in our State; but I wish to add this, and when the addition is made I think it will demonstrate the transcendent importance of this specific amendment which the conferees, for the first time, present to us now.

Our taxing system, adverted to by the Senator from Minnesota, is a system provided by constitutional amendment passed in 1910. In that constitutional amendment, by which all of our State revenue is derived from taxation of corporations, and principally, of course, of railroad corporations, the rate of taxation is fixed; but the constitutional amendment provides as well that by a two-thirds vote of the legislature of our State that rate may be altered, increased, or diminished, as the legislature may determine.

Experience with the new system of taxation taught us in subsequent years that the rates had to be modified or altered; and, accordingly, by substantially unanimous votes of the legislature, in 1913 and again in 1915 modifications were made in those rates. This particular amendment, if it have validity and legality, abrogates the constitution of the State of California; and because it thus abrogates our constitution, if it have validity and legality, I call it to the attention of the conferees, and I call to their attention its very, very grave import because of that fact.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that the rate prescribed by the constitution could be changed by the general assembly upon a two-thirds vote at any time?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. By the legislature; yes, sir. By a two-thirds vote of the legislature it may change the rates of taxation levied upon corporate property, and within my knowledge two changes were made during the past seven years since the adoption of the constitutional amendment.

I submit to the conferees and to the committee and to the Senate that a matter of this importance, which abrogates the constitution of a State—I think of other States as well as my own—should not be passed in this particular way.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio to ask the question he desires.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand it to be the view of the Senator from California that this would prevent the making of any change in the rates in California?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not say that it would. It might, and unless the change corresponded to the particular measure prescribed by the amendment, if it be legal and valid, of course, the amendment would prevent that change.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for just one moment?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for the purpose of having the rule read.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are discussing a point of order, but the rule that is invoked has not been read. I ask that the rule may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the rule.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to Rule XXVII, agreed to on March 8, 1918. The following was added to the rule as a new paragraph:

> 2. Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report, and, if the point of order is sustained, the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Chair while I submit a few remarks on this question.

It seems to me, from the admission made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], that the point of order should be sustained. It should be sustained anyway; but the Senator from Arkansas admitted his case away.

If the Chair will read carefully the provision of the Senate bill, he will note that there is no interference with the power of the State to tax railroad property within the State. If the Chair will read the amendment of the House, he will find that there is no limitation upon the rights or powers of the State to tax railroad property within the State. If the Chair will read the provision agreed to by the conferees, he will see that it is as follows:

> Provided, however, That no State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, shall levy, assess, or collect an amount of taxes from railroad property within the State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, while under Federal control, in excess of the ratio which the taxes derived from railroad property bore to the total taxes of such State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for the year previous to Federal control.

Now, there is a distinct limitation upon the power of the State, and if there is a limitation it changes the amendment, and the conferees exceeded their power because the question of limiting the taxing power of the State was not submitted to them; and I submit the provision added by the conferees is not germane. It goes from one extreme to the other, in that the Senate bill and the House bill provided that the State should have full power, full authority, full control of the taxation of railroads within the State, while the amendment brought in limits that power. Therefore it is new matter and subject to the point of order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the question upon its merits is one proposition. It seems to me that the suggestion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], that it is probably not within the power of Congress to do this thing, may be well founded, but I want to ask the Senator from Kansas as to the parliamentary question. The subject of taxation and the relation of the State and National Government to this property in the matter of taxation was committed to the conference committee.

Mr. CURTIS. To a limited extent.

Mr. BORAH. What is meant by "matter" in the rule? Was not the matter of taxing this property committed to the committee? And they could either extend that or limit it.

Mr. CURTIS. Only within the power. What the Senate did and what the House did was within the constitutional power of the House and Senate. That is, we did not interfere with the rights of the States. Now, the conferees agree upon a proposition that goes beyond what the Congress had a right to do; that is, it interferes with the taxing powers of the State.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; but if it should be determined here in the debate that this is within the constitutional power of Congress, then it would be parliamentary, would it?

Mr. CURTIS. I doubt it.

Mr. BORAH. There are two different propositions. The subject matter which was committed to the conference committees was the subject of taxation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a minute?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not true, because we adopted exactly the same identical provision——

Mr. CURTIS. In both Houses.

Mr. HARDWICK. In both Houses, on this subject; and it was not committed to the conferees.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question just there, in reference to what is being said by the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If you will read the House provision, you will see that it did modify the power of taxation. Just read it, and you will find that it says "except wherein these laws interfere with certain things."

Mr. CURTIS. Well, let us see.

Mr. BORAH. Let us read another one, too:

And provided further—

This is a provision of the Senate bill—

That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation.

That was the language of the Senate bill. The entire subject matter of taxation, as I look at it, was committed to the conferees. Now, whether the Congress can go so far as to put a limitation upon the power of the States to act is a different proposition. I am inclined to think that we could not do what we have undertaken to do; but if we could, the subject of taxation having been committed to them, they could limit it or extend it as they saw fit.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to read both these amendments.

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation.

That was read by the Senator from Idaho and was the amendment of the Senate. The House amendment in regard to taxation is as follows:

That nothing in this shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the State in relation to taxation.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is identically the same.

Mr. CURTIS. Identical; word for word.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania just allow a question before the Senator from Kansas takes his seat? I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas if it is not true that the words he has just read appear in the House bill and in the Senate bill, and that they were stricken out by the conference report.

Mr. CURTIS. They were stricken out and new matter was inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. The rule specifically states that if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill a point of order may be made against the report. That is the situation which exists to-day.

Mr. BORAH. I ask the Senator from Utah what he understands the word "matter" to refer to there, as far as this bill is concerned? Is it not the subject of taxation? Let us suppose——

Mr. SMOOT. The "matter" is any item in the bill that has been in both the House bill and the Senate bill, and the rule provides that if it is stricken out in conference it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely, but the matter which was inserted in this bill and which was referred to the conference was the subject of taxation. Now, let us suppose for the sake of the argument, in view of the doctrine which obtains with some in this country at this time, that the Constitution of the United States is suspended and that there is no limitation on the power of Congress to operate on this subject, would anyone contend that Congress could not under this rule deal with the entire subject of taxation, either extending or limiting it with reference to the power of the State?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I contend that no conference could do it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me to call his attention as well as of other Senators to the exact language of the House bill as unamended in reference to this section?

Mr. KNOX. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (reading)—

That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulation of the several States except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect—

Then it goes on and enumerates a lot of things—revenues, issue of stock, and so on. So the House made a modification upon its taxing law and we modified the modification.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I feel grateful to the Senator from South Carolina for calling attention, with emphasis, to the exact language of that provision. I think a reading of the entire provision will not justify the construction that he has placed upon it.

I only wish to address myself now to the question of the point of order. Under the rule, in my judgment, the point of order is well taken. I do not think that the whole question as to taxation was submitted by either House to these conferees, and I think perhaps we will be able to reach a sound conclusion when we look at the whole situation which, as every Senator knows, has existed. I think, perhaps, most Senators received, while this bill was pending in committee, communications from the governors of their States in relation to whether or not this paragraph was intended to affect the power of the States to tax railroads. I know I received such communications from my State, and I know from what other Senators have told me that they received similar communications. When we brought this question to the attention of the members of the committee, they said, of course, there was no intention——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I demand that we have order. We can not hear on this side anything that is said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. KNOX. When the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission were interrogated upon the question as to whether or not the powers of the State were being menaced by this bill or whether there was any proposition or any suggestion that the powers of the States would be limited or curtailed in any respect, the answer was, of course, "no," and I know of many others who did advise the executives of their States that there was no danger whatever. There were Senators who were cautious and there were Members of the House who were cautious and who desired to make assurance doubly sure, and insisted that there should be put in the bill an expression that there was nothing contained in this act that could limit or curtail the powers of the States to tax.

I say, Mr. President, that a direction such as that, that no limitation could be placed upon the power of taxation, did not carry to the conferees the right to place a limitation upon the power of taxation.

As to the section the Senator from South Carolina has just read, in which he claims that under this right to pass regulations the whole subject came within the power of the President, let me read you the entire section:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation—

There that subject ends. There we have an imperative command that nothing shall limit the power of the States relating to taxation. Let us proceed—or the lawful police regulation—

Which is an entirely different subject—of the several States wherein such laws, powers, or regulations—

Not this power of taxation, Mr. President; the exception is wherein these regulations—may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

Mr. President, if the man who penned that provision had designed to make as clear as language could express it that there was nothing in the section intended to impair or affect the right of taxation, he could not have put it in clearer language.

Mr. President, the chairman of the committee substantially admits this, because a few moments ago he fell back upon section 10 to show that this whole question of taxation was submitted to the conferees.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to make a correction in reference to that last paragraph in the Senate bill. The Senate did provide exactly the language that the House did in the very last section. The part sent to conference reads:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation.

I had for the moment overlooked that latter paragraph in the Senate bill.

Mr. KNOX. That is exactly my contention, that the whole question of taxation centered around the fact that there was to be no limitation placed upon taxation or no impairment of the right of the States, but as the Senator from South Carolina said a few moments ago and repeated a short time since, section 10 brings this subject within the purview and within the jurisdiction of the committee of conference, because by that section the carriers under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities of common carriers, except in so far as they may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or the orders of the President, and therefore the taxation laws of the State are subject to the orders of the President, and if they are subject to the orders of the President the President might regulate them in such a way as he saw fit.

But, as I pointed out a moment ago, and I shall only refer to it now, if you read the second line of section 10 you will find that this Federal control to which they shall be subject is as to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, and everybody knows there is a system of laws and a condition of liabilities that apply to common carriers which are peculiar to themselves, which do not apply to individuals engaged in ordinary business. That liability is wisely preserved for the benefit of the public, whether it be a liability by statute, whether it be a liability by common law, or whether it be a liability by custom or a liability imposed properly upon them by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

So, Mr. President, my point is that the instruction to the conference committee was to keep within the Constitution. The instruction to them was not in any way to impair or affect the rights of the States to tax the property within their borders.

Mr. McLEAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator from Pennsylvania takes his seat I should like to ask him a question for information. Do I understand the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is standing behind the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg pardon; I did not see him.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I am much more deeply interested in the merits of this proposition than I am in the rule under which the Senate may act upon it, although I think it is clearly out of order. If I read the section correctly it prohibits a State from collecting taxes from railroad property "in excess of the ratio which the taxes derived from railroad property bear to the total taxes of such State or subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia for the year previous to Federal control."

In some States the taxes are laid upon the value of the stock of the railroad companies. Let us assume that a railroad has the good fortune to prosper under Government control and its stock is double the value in 1918 that it was in 1917 or when the Government took control. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how under this provision the State can collect a penny more from the railroads than it did prior to taking possession.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This whole question was very thoroughly discussed by the conferees. Their idea was, as the language was intended to convey, that the ratio of taxes collected from the railroads and from the other property in the State should be the same as it was in 1917; that is, taking the amount you collect from the railroads it should bear the same relative ratio to the amount you collect from all other taxes in the State.

Mr. McLEAN. That is evidently the way the section reads.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As to the point regarding which the Senator asks, if the property of the railroads increases within the State, then it seems to me that that increase of the property would be put into the total. That would be new matter entirely. If railroads were constructed it seems to me the relative ratio could be still obtained.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator will agree with me that the language then should express the intent of the committee and the word "rate" should be used to make his point clear.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; the word "ratio."

Mr. McLEAN. So that if the same tax rate is carried on from one year to another, of course the increase in value would then be taken into consideration. But the act does not say that, and it is an astounding proposition. A railroad may lay other tracks, double tracks, may double its value, and yet as the section reads the total amount of the taxes collected must continue to bear the same ratio to the amount collected from other property in the State.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. One reason why the conferees wrote that in the bill, if the Senator will allow me, was because the object they had in view was called to their attention by one Senator that in certain States they did not assess the railroad property, that they assessed the gross receipts of the property, and in other States they assessed the property. Therefore, in order to accommodate this language as nearly as we could to existing conditions, we thought that during the period of the war, when it was so essential to stabilize these properties to use them as a Government function, the States themselves would be willing to have the machinery in operation the year before control still maintained.

I suppose I am as great an advocate of State rights as any man on this floor, but we recognized the fact that it was possible for certain State officials, reasoning that these roads would be under Federal control and therefore the taxes that they would impose would come out of the Treasury of the United States, thoughtlessly or otherwise, to impose a tax which might interfere very materially with the Government operation of these roads; and in order to preserve the same relativity that had been preserved by the railroads in their compensation we put this provision in the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Does not the Senator think if this section went back to conference it would be possible to so frame it that the intent of the chairman of the committee could be made clear? I agree with the position of the chairman of the committee entirely, but in the States where the tax is laid on the value of the stock the Senator can see that under this section as it reads the total amount of the tax collected from the railroads can not exceed in the year 1918 what it was in 1917, provided the amount raised outside does not increase.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the position is all right.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, to my mind the point of order is so well taken that it would be beating the air to discuss it, and I shall not discuss it. I will content myself by asking that a telegram from the chairman of the State Tax Commission of New Hampshire, one of the most competent and accomplished officials in the country, so far as taxation is concerned, be read. That will be my argument against the report, if any argument is needed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CONCORD, N. H., March 8, 1918.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Provision of railroad bill limiting ratio of State taxation to a rate not higher than that for year previous to taking over by the Government is in conflict with our laws upon the actual value of the property at the average rate, which requires an assessment of property throughout the State and opposed to the constitutional requirement of proportional taxation for all property. If held valid, it will not only prevent any increase of revenue from the railroad in proper cases, but is contrary to our entire system of taxation. Strike out limitation upon the States.

ALBERT O. BROWN,
Chairman State Tax Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, by reference to Jefferson's Manual, which has been the basis of all the decisions of the Speakers of the House upon the question of the scope of the authority of conference committees, it will be found that the origin of the conference committee consisted in this, that the two Houses upon some particular question differed with one another, and a special committee, called a committee on conference, was appointed in order to harmonize those differences. Now, that being true, this question presents itself at once: Is there in this case any difference between the two Houses? If there be any difference, there is then something to harmonize, and there was a reason for appointing a conference committee, and upon the particular subject matter the conference committee will have jurisdiction.

Now, I wanted to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] a moment ago a question for information for my own guide, for he has gone over this matter very much further than I have. As I understand it—and I want the Senator to correct me if I am wrong—the other House used substantially the same, if not identically the same, language down to a certain point. Then the House of Representatives put in some language, beginning with the word "except"—"except in this case and in that and the other." Is that true or not?

Mr. KNOX. So far as the subject of taxation is concerned, this bill went to the conference committee with a prohibition against impairing the right of a State to tax. Then the conference committee wrote in an exception, which does impair the right of a State to tax. My position is that when a conference committee is instructed not to do a thing it can not turn around and do it by an exception.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is an undoubted truism, if the statement be true as a matter of fact.

Mr. KNOX. I think so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As a matter of logic, nobody could dispute it, provided it is based upon a premise of fact. As I understand, however, the House amendment and the Senate provision were not identical. Am I right or wrong about that?

Mr. KNOX. They were identical as to the question of prohibition, though the language may have been different.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator understands that, he understands my entire position.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The two Houses used language which was identical upon the general subject of prohibition, but one House put in language beginning with the word "except," which the Senator from Pennsylvania denies to be a limitation, admitting, arguendo, that if it were a limitation there would be a difference between the two Houses and there would be jurisdiction in the conference committee. The Senator denies, however, that the exception constitutes a difference; he denies that the exception constitutes a limitation; but he admits that the exception was put in.

Mr. KNOX. The exception was put in by the conference committee, not by either House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The language beginning with the word "except"?

Mr. KNOX. That was put in by the conference committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And was not put in by either House?

Mr. KNOX. It was not put in by either House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, I have been misinformed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, there was no difference between the House of Representatives and the Senate on this question until the conference committee created it.

Mr. KNOX. That is correct.

Mr. SHERMAN. Our rule has recently been amended——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I interrupt the Senator from Illinois for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The House provision and the Senate provision on this subject were identical in language.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. Then, I believe I am correct in saying that the difference was created by the conference committee, and not by the House of Representatives or by the Senate. Our rules were amended in order to prevent such parliamentary procedure as this. A difference not existing until it is raised by the conference committee is not within the jurisdiction of that committee under the amended rule.

The tax laws of a State can not be cast in the inflexible mold of a fixed ratio from year to year; that is an impossibility. If the ratio between the taxes raised on railroads in Connecticut or in California last year, or the year before the war, or the year that is fixed here—the preceding year—were compared with the other taxes raised in the State, one-tenth, that part being derived from railroad property, that one-tenth ratio must remain as the inflexible ratio until this bill ceases to be operative. In that event it makes no difference how much the taxes of the State are increased—whether they are increased by 25 or 50 per cent—all of that increase must, after the excess above one-tenth, say, be cast upon the private taxable property of the State, exclusive of railroad property; the railroad property can not under this proposed amendment share in the increase. To that degree it puts upon every individual property owner in the State the increase of taxes above the ratio fixed in the year named in the amendment.

I prefer that this measure—and I have a right to speak about it, because I supported it and believed in it in its original form—and I have a right, as one from a State that pays a considerable Federal tax, as well as a local tax, to ask that this railway measure be applied and worked out on its merits. There is not under the amendment now proposed a fair chance to work out the railroad bill and find out in that application how it will result.

In every year, if we could take it approximately for the last five years, there is an increase in local and State taxation on railway property of about $20,000,000 for the tax accruals running year by year, sometimes more and sometimes less. For instance, in 1915 there were about $138,000,000 of local tax accruals by the States and by local subdivisions of the States to whom the State taxing powers had been delegated by constitutional or legislative provision. In 1917 the tax accruals by the same local authorities, States or subdivisions of States, ran up to $172,000,000. That is a considerable increase over the $138,000,000, being something like $34,000,000. That large increase is more than the average. I am not far out of the way when I say that approximately those increases in tax accruals by local tax bodies average something like $20,000,000 every 12 months from year to year. That $20,000,000 increase would be cut off under this amendment as proposed; that $20,000,000 increase will be added to all of the local business and agricultural and commercial interests of the different States on the local assessed valuation of the respective States and exclusive of railroad property.

Another attempt along the same line has been made. I wish this railroad law operated on its merits, so far as I have anything to do with it by my single vote here. I read from a letter dated March 6, 1918, from Peoria, written by the Peoria Association of Commerce, which takes in practically all of the business concerns of that city, confirming a telegram. The letter states:

> We understand Director General McAdoo proposes to impose a charge of $2 for placing a car on an industrial siding and an additional charge of $1 for spotting [cars].

I wish to insert this letter at the close of my remarks, together with a telegram from the Quincy Freight Bureau, of Quincy, Ill., of date March 7, 1918, on the same subject.

The estimate of the total increase that manufacturing and industrial enterprises will be compelled to pay under this switching charge, or charge for placing cars on sidings, together with the charge for spotting cars, will, throughout this country, in 12 months amount to $176,000,000. If you add that to the $20,000,000 proposed under this amendment it will be additional revenue to the railroads, because when the State tax bodies are compelled to levy that much on other property it amounts to an increase in the revenue of railways by that much. That with the $176,000,000 charged to industrial concerns will make a total of $196,000,000. One is a saving which amounts to an increase in net revenue, while the other is an additional earning.

I think I know what all this is for. It is a part of a general program designed in order that the railway law may not have a trial upon its merits. It is proposed by this and other processes that are in the course of framing that under Government operation of 250,000 miles of railway the roads will show an increase of $196,000,000 in earnings while, as a matter of fact, they will not have an increase of a dollar from rate changes. There will be $176,000,000 collected from shippers, and if it can not be absorbed in the charge to the consignee it will be paid by the shipper himself without that absorption. Twenty million dollars will be relieved by this amendment, making $196,000,000, and when that saving of revenue occurs it will be heralded at the end of the fiscal year that Government operation has resulted in an increase of $196,000,000 in revenue without increasing rates to the shipping public. That is what this program is for; it is to bolster up on an unfair basis the railway bill when it is put into operation. I want it to have a fair chance; I want private ownership to have an equally fair chance alongside of Government control, but it will not have under this amendment.

I shall not speak of the parliamentary status of the matter at all; I do not care for that; I am going beyond that, to the greater issue involved. Private control will not have a fair chance if this amendment is adopted, and if the measure is put into operation as it is now framed, for the charge on switching and spotting cars—these two items together with others of a like kind that are coming along—will result in a very great increase in the revenues, without increasing the charges or rates to the shipper.

I can understand now why the section of the railway bill was required transferring from the Interstate Commerce Commission and vesting in the Executive the power to initiate rates. These are methods of increasing the revenues of the railways without increasing the rates to the general shippers. It is a part of the rate-making power, and I think, without any regard to the parliamentary procedure, that this is an obnoxious amendment, because it seeks an unfair advantage.

Now, Mr. President, I present the telegram and the letter to which I have referred and ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram and letter referred to are as follows:

QUINCY, ILL., March 7, 1918.

Hon. L. Y. SHERMAN,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Director General of Railroads proposes charging $2 per car for movement to or from industrial sidings and $1 per car spotting charge, which railroad line haul rates now includes. Have wired protest to him. Proposition very objectionable and opposed by local industries as unwarranted and discriminating against one class of shippers. We respectfully solicit your opposing it in our behalf. See letter.

THE QUINCY FREIGHT BUREAU,
L. B. Boswell, Commissioner.

PEORIA, ILL., March 6, 1918.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Confirming telegram of to-day, may we not ask careful consideration? Copy of our telegram herewith:

"We understand Director General McAdoo proposes to impose a charge of $2 for placing a car on an industrial siding and an additional charge of $1 for spotting—total increase of $3 per car to increase carrier's revenues. We do not feel that the present situation warrants an arbitrary advance in carrying charges such as this would amount to, and we respectfully enter protest against such advance without giving commercial and shipping interests a chance to be heard and present reasons against this increase before same becomes effective."

Respectfully,

PEORIA ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE,
By W. H. COLEAN, President.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I referred a few moments ago to the parliamentary status, and to the fact that the whole subject matter was in conference. I desire now to emphasize that and to read a part of the language of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in point, and which is cited in section 6424 of Hinds' Precedents. Senators will note that there is no possible distinction in the case that was there decided and the one that is under consideration here. Here is the language of the Speaker:

The House substitute, by way of amendment, went to the Senate. The Senate disagreed to every line, paragraph, and section of the House provisions; and with that disagreement to the Senate provision, and with the House provision in effect a disagreement to the original Senate bill, the whole matter went to conference. That is, by this action there was committed to conference the whole subject of immigration, and, as connected therewith, the prohibition of immigration by way of contract labor in the fullest sense of the words.

Now, Mr. President, the Senate dare not lay down the proposition that when both Houses happen to incorporate sentences identical in language, the matter is not in conference, even though the whole subject matter is in disagreement. If such a contention were upheld, it would tie the hands of the conferees so that there could never be legislation upon a matter concerning which there is an important difference between the two Houses. Under the parliamentary situation as it existed here, the whole subject was in conference, and the conferees, if they had chosen to do so, could have written an entirely new bill. The only limitation upon their power in that particular is that the bill which they may write must be germane to the subject matter of the original bill. You have not so limited the power of the conferees by the language of the new Senate rule, which is the same, substantially, as the rule under which the House has been operating for many years, as to prevent modifications in conference of a substitute for the original bill disagreed to by the body which first passed it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will venture to repeat that I do not think we are governed by the rules or the precedents of the other House, but the Senator cites the immigration bill. Does the Senator contend that, if the Senate had placed a $2 a head tax on immigrants and the House had placed a $4 a head tax, the conferees could have made it $10?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the House had done that, and in addition has stricken out the entire Senate bill, I do contend that the conferees could have done so. The Senator from New Hampshire can see that the parliamentary problem is not a difficult one. When one House passes a bill and the other——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Wait just a moment—and the other House strikes out all after the enacting clause, and the House which first passed that bill disagrees to the amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting new matter, that necessarily puts the whole subject in conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator's construction necessarily puts both Houses in the hands of the conference committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the question propounded by the Senator from New Hampshire in a little different form. Suppose the House in the case of the immigration bill had fixed the tax at $2 and suppose the Senate had fixed the tax at $2, does the Senator then contend that a tax of $10 could have been written in the bill by the conferees?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly, if the House had stricken out all after the enacting clause and inserted one amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill. Instances can be cited almost indefinitely to that effect. Senators, there is no other rule that can govern the subject.

The constitutional question is one that I would not attempt to settle upon a point of order. That is, of course, a question that directs itself to the merits of the case, and would have to be determined after the parliamentary question has been decided.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question for information.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did either House strike out everything after the enacting clause in this particular case?

Mr. ROBINSON. It did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And substitute a new bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. The House substituted a new bill entirely, and the Senate disagreed to the House amendment. That put the whole matter in conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Senate agree to the House amendment striking out all after the enacting clause?

Mr. ROBINSON. No, sir; the Senate disagreed to the House amendment——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah!

Mr. ROBINSON. Which put the whole matter in conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand.

Mr. ROBINSON. There can not be any other rule applied. As a legal proposition it is so clear that, in my judgment, it is incontrovertible.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator further before he takes his seat, it is an old and familiar principle in the other House that where everything after the enacting clause is s ricken out of a bill, and a new bill, whether partially in the same language or not, is adopted by the House striking out everything after the enacting clause, the entire bill is in conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the statement I have made, and I have cited authorities to that effect.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I shall not discuss the parliamentary question.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I merely wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the point of order debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order at this time is debatable.

Mr. ASHURST. Under what rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We have had no morning hour to-day. The Senator may be under the impression that we had a morning hour.

Mr. ASHURST. No. Has the Chair submitted the point of order to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. A point of order has been made to the conference report, and——

Mr. ASHURST. The point of order is not debatable unless it is submitted to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The invariable rule has been that the Chair can permit debate, if the Chair wishes to do so, or the Chair can decide the question offhand.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the parliamentary question, because I am not a parliamentarian. I was under the impression, after considering questions which have arisen in the Senate since I became a Member of it, that this rule was adopted to cure certain evils. For instance, in the case of the revenue bill when we came to vote on the conference report there was found a clause imposing a tax of 8 per cent on men who earned their money either with their hands or with their brains and exempted those who earned their money by cutting off coupons. Some of us objected, but the rules were such that we could not invoke the rules of the Senate. If it is true that the entire subject of taxation was before the Senate, and the conferees could put in anything they desired, I suppose this rule could not be invoked.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Was the point of order ever raised or discussed upon that subject in the revenue bill to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; the point of order was raised.

Mr. BORAH. Upon that particular point?

Mr. KELLOGG. My recollection is that it was. It was raised on some provisions, anyhow; but at that time we had no rule of this kind.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but in the case of the particular clause to which the Senator refers, as I remember, the point of order was not raised at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am not sure about that.

Mr. BORAH. Because after it got to the country the explanation was made that it was unknown to the Senate when it passed through it.

Mr. KELLOGG. But, Mr. President, as to that I would not pretend to put my opinion against that of the Senator from Arkansas, who has had great experience in this matter, and I do not wish to discuss it; neither do I agree with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] that this provision was put in here in order to show excess or large profits of the railroads while under Federal control and make the Federal operation effective. I have not the slightest doubt of the ability and the absolute good faith of the conferees on this question, nor have I any doubt that there is a possibility that the States might overtax railroad property; but I should like for a moment to call the attention of the conferees to some of the difficulties which may arise under this proviso. I hesitate very much to oppose a conference report to which I know such ability and attention have been given.

As to the constitutionality of this proviso, I take it to be the law that Congress has no power to deprive the States of the right to tax any property situated within the State, provided it is not Government property or property owned by a Federal corporation, so that the Federal Government may control it, such as a bank, although it never has been the policy of the Federal Government to prevent Federal banks being taxed, and I know it will not be the policy of the Federal Government to prevent the taxation of any property in the State. Therefore the property of the railroads, as such, situated within a State is subject to the right of the State to tax that property in any manner the State may see fit, provided the tax is not a burden on interstate commerce and provided it is not in violation of the State constitution.

There is this question, however: The States do not all tax on an ad valorem basis the property within the State, but some of the States levy a tax on the gross income of the corporation in lieu of a tax on the property; and they impose it, as I said before, not only on the intrastate earnings but on a mileage proportion of the interstate earnings, dividing the interstate earnings on the basis of the miles carried. The Supreme Court has sustained that and said it was not a burden on interstate commerce unless it exceeded what would be, under the laws of the State, a fair equivalent to the taxation of the property.

Now, it might be that under this proviso, if the Director General found that that percentage of taxation in any one year exceeded the ratio of 1917, he could set aside that tax; and it may be that Congress has the constitutional power, because the earnings of these corporations are Federal earnings, as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, and to that extent it is quite likely that the Director General might invoke this provision to set aside the tax if in 1918 or 1919 it exceeded the ratio of 1917. The property, however, is still railroad property.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Not at all.

Mr. BORAH. Aside from the difficulty of the practical working of this law, does the Senator admit that it is within the power of Congress to say that a State shall not tax, except in a specific way, property which is within the State and which in ordinary times, in times of peace, it would have the power to tax?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think it is within the power of Congress to do anything of the kind. I believe the power of the State to tax property situated within the State is absolute unless it burdens interstate commerce and unless it is in violation of some provision of the State constitution.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator a question. In case a State should pass a law which was adjudged by a Federal court to be in violation of this provision, is it the Senator's judgment that the excess of the tax would be adjudged void, or would the entire tax be adjudged void?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is very difficult to say.

Mr. GORE. The Senator will appreciate the importance of it, because it might shipwreck a State's fiscal system entirely if it went to the whole tax.

Mr. KELLOGG. It might. I am inclined to think that the entire tax would be void if it was in excess and was indivisible. I should not, however, like to express offhand an opinion upon that question.

Mr. President, let us see whether it is possible for the States to comply with this provision. It says that the tax levied by the State, whether it be an ad valorem tax, or whether it be a tax on gross income, or a tax on stock, or a tax on franchises—I am fairly familiar with the taxing laws of nearly every State, and they differ very greatly on that question—shall not be—

> In excess of the ratio which the taxes derived from railroad property bore to the total taxes of such State or subdivision thereof * * * for the year previous to Federal control.

Let me illustrate. We will say that the county of Ransom, in the State of Minnesota, levies a tax—or I will take some State that has the direct ad valorem system. We will say that any county in a State levies a tax upon railroad property on the ad valorem system, and in 1917 the tax for county purposes and State purposes bore a certain ratio of equality, we will say. They were equal in those subdivisions. Suppose next year the county expenses should decrease a little. Then the railroad tax imposed by the State must decrease, and you would have as many different bases as there are counties in the State of Minnesota or any other State. In Minnesota we have the gross-earnings system.

I fear that it will be impossible for the States to regulate their tax systems and readjust them under this clause. I am aware that it is a very difficult problem. It is perfectly clear, however, that if heretofore, in 1917, the tax on railroad property was too low as compared with the tax on other property, the tax on railroad property could not be increased in order to bring it up to the level of taxes on other property, because of the standard of the ratio of 1917 fixed in this bill.

In considering this question the committee received a great many communications, I have no doubt—I did, I know—from the States, asking if there was any danger of their tax systems being upset. I always answered that unless Congress affirmatively acted, the property in the hands or under the control of the Director General was subject to taxation and the States could proceed to tax it as they had before. I believe that to be the law, and I believe it was the opinion of the committee that there should be no limitation upon the taxation of railroad property.

I am willing to admit that if a State undertook to increase enormously its tax on railroad property as compared with others, under the constitution of the State, there might be some ground for action by the Federal Government; but in all the history of taxation in this country I can not now call to mind any tax that is grossly unequal between railroad and other property. There are inequalities. There are bound to be inequalities. No human judgment can make the taxes imposed on railroad property equal to the taxes imposed on other property except under the ad valorem system. When you come to take a gross-earning system—which is the best tax system in the world, in my judgment, for public utilities—and say that the tax on gross earnings must not exceed a fair and reasonable tax imposed on other property, it is a matter of estimate. It is only an approximation. It can not be anything else, as the Supreme Court of the United States recognizes in its decision. I had the honor to argue the case in which that question was settled in this country.

Congress is going to be in session, I suppose, most of the time. If any State should attempt a system of taxation that is grossly unequal the Congress could act. I do not believe it is wise for us now to limit the taxing power of the States, and I submit to the conferees the most careful consideration of the constituional power of Congress to do so I have no wish to criticize the committee for its action, and in some of the opinions I have expressed I may be wrong.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon the merits of this proposition as to the power of Congress to limit the action of the States with reference to property which would be subject to taxation in times of peace, and so forth, I am of the opinion at the present time that it is not within the power of Congress to do it. But that, as I understand it, is not the particular question which is now before the Senate. The merits of the proposition may be deferred for further reflection and consideration. The particular question now is whether or not the point of order applicable to that portion of the bill which is contained in the proviso of section 15, as being new matter, is well taken.

I am not an expert in parliamentary law, but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, as I understand the history of this bill, it passed the Senate and went to the House, the House struck out the entire bill, and it went to conference after that proceeding had been had upon the part of the House. Now, if that is true, the Supreme Court of the United States, if my memory is not at fault, has announced that that puts in conference all the different provisions of the bill, and puts the subject matter under the control of the conferees with reference to all matters contained in the bill. I did not understand, when I was first presenting the matter this morning, that the House had taken that action. If they have taken that action, as I now understand the fact to be from the Senator from Arkansas, I have but little doubt that this insertion upon the part of the conferees was within the jurisdiction of the conferees.

Aside from that, however, I venture to say that where a subject matter such as taxation and a subject matter such as the extent to which the States may or may not tax a particular property is sent to conference, that gives the entire subject matter to the conferees, and that they may limit it or they may extend it beyond what has been provided in the bill. It seems to me that from both these standpoints this point of order is not well taken, and upon that alone I speak at this time. So far as the merits of the matter are concerned, I may have something to say later.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the decision of the Supreme Court to which the Senator from Idaho refers, and I should like to ask him if it goes to the extent that in case of procedure such as he has described—the substitution of a new bill by one House for the bill of the other House—the conference committee is freed from all restraint whatever as to what it can deal with, and that in the case of any point upon which the two bills of the different Houses are identical the conference committee can disregard that and set up something entirely new?

Mr. BORAH. So long as it is germane to the subject matter of the bill. Of course, as the Senator knows, it is always dangerous for a man to state what a decision holds when he has not looked at it for years, but my remembrance is that a rule was announced which would make this provision germane. I only heard the statement of the Senator from Arkansas a few minutes ago, and I have not looked the matter up. I speak from memory.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it would be quite interesting.

Mr. BORAH. My remembrance is that the Supreme Court held that where that procedure has been had—that is, the entire bill stricken out, except the title—that constituted an amendment and put the whole subject matter referred to in the bill in conference, and that it was in the nature of an amendment to the entire bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. At any rate, Mr. President, while I do not undertake to dispute the Senator's recollection of the case, because I am not familiar with it, it would be extremely interesting, before being guided by that decision, to see the decision and to understand its exact application to this question. I fail to see, however—and I do not know that the Senator argues to that effect—how any decision of the Supreme Court can limit the power of either House of Congress to adopt rules for its own government in regard to conference reports.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I take it that the Supreme Court was construing the matter in connection with the rule of the House which has so long obtained there with reference to this particular matter and under that provision of the Constitution requiring all revenue bills to originate in the House.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That rule may not be identical with the rule now under consideration.

Mr. BORAH. I think it is identical with it in substance, because the rule has been construed this morning very narrowly. It says:

> Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed.

The word "matter" may, to my mind, cover the entire subject of taxation. It is the matter that was submitted. It does not say the question which was submitted or the particular proposition which was submitted or not submitted, but it says the matter which was submitted Certainly the matter of taxation of these roads as between the National Government and the State government was submitted and to what extent either might go was submitted. That is the matter which was submitted.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would be "subject" rather than "matter." "Matter" would apply to language, I think, ordinarily.

Mr. BORAH. If there was any precedent to that effect, I would gladly concede my error, but in ordinary parlance in the use of the word "matter" we would certainly use it in connection with the subject of taxation, to the extent to which the National Government might go and to the extent to which the State government might go in taxing this particular property.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In pursuance of that doctrine we have up the subject of taxation, and in certain parts of the subject the two Houses are entirely agreed. If there is any difference whatever as to some other part of the subject not necessarily relating to the part upon which they are agreed, the Senator concludes that the rule would mean that the entire subject matter, both that to which there is disagreement and that in which there is an agreement, would be subject to the discretion of the conference committee?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know how to construe this language except by its natural import and as we would use it in ordinary parlance. If there is a construction placed upon it by reason of parliamentary precedents, I am not familiar with it. It says "the matter."

Now, this must be true, that both the matter of taxation and the matter of the power of both the State and National Governments to tax were submitted here. The mere fact that the conferees wrote in an exception does not introduce a new subject matter

Mr. POINDEXTER. The subject matter that was submitted to the conferees was Government control of railroads, and if that subject matter can be disposed of at their discretion by the conference committee, of course there is no use to discuss it any further.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does not state my position as I understand it to be. I say that not only the subject of railroad control but the subject of the taxation of railroads and the subject of the relationship of the National Government and the States to the taxation of these railroads were submitted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the subject of the limitation upon interference with the power of the State was not submitted, because that was agreed upon by the two Houses.

Now, there is just one other matter that I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho about, because it is a very interesting and a very important one and has a vital bearing upon the proper disposition of this question. I understood the Senator to express the opinion that Congress has no power under the Constitution to limit the taxing power of the States in this matter. I agree with the Senator that as to private property in the States or property which is not owned by the Federal Government or under the control of the Federal Government that doctrine would apply, but I have very grave doubt as to whether, as to property which is under the control of the Federal Government and is an agency of the Federal Government for the execution of Federal law, the Federal Government has not power to interfere with the taxing power of the State.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt at all that mere agencies of the Government can not be taxed. I had not looked upon this proposition, however, as that kind of an instrumentality. Here is private property. It remains private property. The Senator would not contend but that the State has the power to tax this property according to the precedents heretofore existing? The Senator would not contend, for instance, that the State of Washington can not levy the same tax upon its railroads within the State that they levied prior to the war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I contend, Mr. President, that as a matter of policy the power of the State to tax ought not to be interfered with. I am very firmly convinced that that is the proper policy to pursue; but I am inclined to the opinion that as a matter of law the Federal Government now having the possession and control and the operation of these roads, consequently they being an agency of interstate commerce which is being conducted by the Federal Government, the Federal Government if it chooses to adopt that policy can interfere either with the taxing power or any other power of the State that relates to this particular property.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the power to tax State instrumentalities does not rest upon any provision of the Constitution. There is no provision of the Constitution which says the National Government can not tax State instrumentalities.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But there is an amendment of the Constitution which reserves to the States or the people of the States the powers not granted to the Federal Government.

Mr. BORAH. That is still in existence, if there is any part of the Constitution in existence, which it would sometimes seem to be doubtful. I am hoping, however, it may still be a part of our governmental machinery and will long remain so.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator from Idaho a question before he takes his seat? If I understood the Senator correctly, he takes the position that when a bill passes the Senate and goes to the House and the House strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts a substitute, then the subject matter of the bill can be handled in any way and changed in any way by the conferees. In other words, if a tariff bill that has reference to the revenue passes the House carrying a certain rate of taxation, and that bill comes to the Senate and the Senate strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts a new bill, but upon one particular item the rate in the House bill was the same identical rate as that in the Senate bill, then when it goes to conference does the Senator hold that the conference can change that rate?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. What I said, Mr. President, was this: I have not read the opinion, I suppose, in 10 years, which was delivered long ago. The Supreme Court, if I remember the decision correctly, announced a rule which would make any amendment germane so long as it dealt with the general subject matter.

Mr. SMOOT. If that were the case, then the Senate or the House could by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting another bill, with very few changes, place the power in the hands of the conferees to control legislation. I can not see that that was ever intended by our form of Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I may be in error. I think I can determine it if the conference report continues under discussion.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. I desire to submit a question to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for that purpose?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if the rule laid down in the courts is not this, that they have said the enrolled act is final, that it proved itself. They indulge a conclusive presumption, I believe, as to what the parliamentary procedure is, and I think they have uniformly declined to inquire as to the fact whether or not the rules of the legislative bodies were observed, but they held conclusively that they were observed.

The Senator will remember that the enrolled McKinley tariff act showed a section put in that had not passed either House, which had not even been considered by either House, and yet the Supreme Court held that that act proved itself and that the procedure was regular. I do not think it can be contended that the Supreme Court would void this particular provision on the ground that it originated in conference. They would not hold that a violation even of the rules of the Senate would void the act.

Mr. BORAH. But the question arose in that case, if I remember correctly, by reason of the fact that the provision had originated in the Senate where it would have no right to originate, and therefore the constitutional question was preserved.

Mr. GORE. I was not adverting to the case which the Senator has in mind. I was referring to the McKinley Act in which a section appeared that neither House had considered.

Mr. BORAH. I am familiar with the rule, and the Senator states it correctly. Certain conclusive presumptions are indulged with reference to the regularity of the proceedings of the legislative body.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I suggest to the chairman of the committee having the conference report in charge that it would be well if he would lay it aside for the present. I would like very much to proceed with the urgent deficiency bill. That would give an opportunity for an investigation of the very important questions that have been raised in connection with the conference report. I merely make the suggestion to him that I would be very glad if he would consent to lay it aside.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, that course is agreeable to me.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then I understand the decision on the point of order will be reserved.

Mr. MARTIN. It will be reserved. The whole matter will be reserved. It will go over, pending the consideration of the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter goes over, pending the consideration of the point of order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to say just a word.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say to the Senator from Ohio he was recognized and then the Senator from Virginia, by his consent, was recognized. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I only want to say, and it will take only a minute to say it, that when the railroad bill came before the Senate there was great anxiety expressed in the States by reason of the vast powers it conferred upon the Director General of Railroads. In New Jersey the returns from our taxes on the railroads go directly to the public schools, amounting to about $8,000,000 per annum. There was fear that under the powers conferred the Director General might interfere with that taxation. The governor of New Jersey telegraphed me, after he had conferred with many of the governors of other States, that there was united protest. I saw the Director General, who stated to me that the United States Government did not become the owner of the railroads under the act; that it was only the user of the railroads; and therefore, leaving out the amendment which I had submitted to the Senate—which was proposed by me and finally passed in both Houses—the United States Government could not interfere with the taxing powers of the State. However, the governor of New Jersey and many of our citizens in the State were uncertain as to the decision of the Director General, and therefore I pushed the amendment. The amendment provided in the Senate and House that there should be no interference by the Federal Government with the taxing powers of the State. The rule under which I made the point of order, and which protected my amendment, provided that there should be no new matter inserted. The introduction of the conference proviso practically voids the action of the Senate and House, as far as this provision is concerned. This provision inserted by the conference committee nullifies that act—it negatives it—and therefore if the Chair fails to sustain the point of order practically the conference committee is legislating contrary to the will of both the Senate and the House. Then why should we have a Senate? Why should we not appoint a conference committee to enact all legislation?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair inquire, before the Senator proceeds, has the Senator from South Carolina asked that the conference report be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that in justice to the Chair itself he ought to say that he has been ready to decide the question for quite an hour, and that he has simply been permitting the discussion to proceed because it is the first decision under the rule and the Chair thought that course proper. Without objection, the conference report will be laid aside.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I call for a decision on the point of order I made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the report be laid aside.

Mr. POMERENE. I will state, if I may be permitted to say a word——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has been recognized.

Mr. POMERENE. I will yield at all reasonable times and to all Senators, but there is a moment when forbearance ceases to be a virtue.

Mr. President, if this matter is to be decided now, it is my desire to submit a few remarks in presenting my views upon the subject. If the matter is to go over, I prefer to say what I may desire to-morrow after I have had a little further time to investigate the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands unanimous consent to be given to the request of the Senator from South Carolina laying aside the conference report temporarily.

Mr. POMERENE. Suffice it to say for the time being I do not agree with the narrow construction which it has been sought to place upon the new rule which we adopted the other day. In other words, I believe that this conference report in no respect violates that rule. In the second place, I am in entire accord with those who desire to preserve the powers of the States, but I want them so preserved that the States may not be permitted to hamstring the Government in time of war.

Again, I desire to make this suggestion, and then I have done for to-day on this subject. I do not believe that this limitation upon the power of a State in any way violates the Constitution of the United States. I may amplify that position somewhat to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, speaking to the report which has been under consideration, I ask to have the telegram which I send to the desk read, as I desire it to go in to-morrow's issue of the discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegram. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

MANCHESTER, N. H., March 11, 1918.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The increase in value of railroad property in this State from its present low point is likely to be relatively greater than other property. Under the railroad bill the excess of increase could not be taxed. This will work a hardship and conflict with our constitution, which requires proportionality of taxation, and our statute, which requires assessment at full value. The situation will be very difficult.

ALBERT O. BROWN,
Chairman Tax Commission.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that House bill 9867, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, many Senators are not aware that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill is now before the Senate. They expected a decision upon the conference report before this bill was brought before the Senate. For that reason I suggest the absence of a quorum, that they may have a chance to be here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Hitchcock	Nugent	Sutherland
Bankhead	Hollis	Overman	Swanson
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Poindexter	Thomas
Borah	Kellogg	Ransdell	Thompson
Culberson	Kendrick	Reed	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Trammell
Dillingham	Kirby	Shafroth	Underwood
Fletcher	Knox	Sheppard	Vardaman
France	McKellar	Sherman	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Gallinger	McNary	Smith, Md.	Weeks
Gronna	Martin	Smith, Mich.	Williams
Hale	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Harding	New	Smoot
Hardwick	Norris	Stone

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent from the city on important business.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 9, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, moves to insert the following:

The President is hereby authorized to acquire the title to the docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facilities on the Hudson River now owned by the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Terminal & Navigation Co., two corporations of the State of New Jersey, if he shall deem it necessary for the national security and defense: Provided, That if such property can not be procured by purchase, then the President is authorized and empowered to take over for the United States the immediate possession and title thereof. That if any such property shall be taken over as aforesaid, the United States shall make just compensation therefor, to be determined by the President, and if the amount thereof, so determined by the President, is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to the said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code. Upon the taking over of said property by the President as aforesaid, the title to all such property so taken over shall immediately vest in the United States: Provided further, That section 355 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to any expenditures herein or hereafter authorized in connection with the property acquired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is proper the RECORD should show that while this amendment is reported by the committee it is not a unanimous report of the committee. There was some of us who did not agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk an additional amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to follow the amendment just agreed to by inserting with the following language:

That section 12 of the "trading with the enemy act" be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 12. That all moneys (including checks and drafts payable on demand) paid to or received by the alien property custodian pursuant to this act shall be deposited forthwith in the Treasury of the United States, and may be invested and reinvested by the Secretary of the Treasury in United States bonds or United States certificates of indebtedness, under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe for such deposit, investment, and sale of securities; and as soon after the end of the war as the President shall deem practicable such securities shall be sold and the proceeds deposited in the Treasury.

All other property of an enemy, or ally of enemy, conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the alien property custodian hereunder shall be safely held and administered by him except as hereinafter provided; and the President is authorized to designate as a depositary, or depositaries, of property of an enemy, or ally of enemy, any bank, or banks, or trust company, or trust companies, or other suitable depositary, or depositaries, located and doing business in the United States. The alien property custodian may deposit with such designated depositary, or depositaries, or with the Secretary of the Treasury, any stocks, bonds, notes, time drafts, time bills of exchange, or other securities, or property (except money or checks or drafts payable on demand, which are required to be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury), and such depositary or depositaries shall be authorized and empowered to collect any dividends or interest or income that may become due and any maturing obligations held for the account of such custodian. Any moneys collected on said account shall be paid and deposited forthwith by said depositary or by the alien proper custodian into the Treasury of the United States as hereinbefore provided.

The President shall require all such designated depositaries to execute and file bonds sufficient in his judgment to protect property on deposit, such bonds to be conditioned as he may direct.

The alien property custodian shall be vested with all of the powers of a common-law trustee in respect of all property, other than money, which has been or shall be, or which has been or shall be required to be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to him in pursuance of the provisions of this act, and, in addition thereto, acting under the supervision and direction of the President, and under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, shall have power to manage such property and do any act or things in respect thereof or make any disposition thereof, or of any part thereof, by sale or otherwise, and exercise any rights or powers which may be or become appurtenant thereto or to the ownership thereof in like manner as though he were the absolute owner thereof. It shall be the duty of every corporation incorporated within the United States and every unincorporated association or company or trustee or trustees within the United States issuing shares or certificates representing beneficial interests to transfer such shares or certificates upon its, his, or their books into the name of the alien property custodian upon demand, accompanied by the presentation of the certificates which represent such shares or beneficial interests. The alien property custodian shall forthwith deposit in the Treasury of the United States, as hereinbefore provided, the proceeds of any such property or rights so sold by him.

Any money or property required or authorized by the provisions of this act to be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to the alien property custodian shall, if said custodian shall so direct by written order, be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to the Treasurer of the United States with the same effect as if to the alien property custodian.

After the end of the war any claim of any enemy, or of an ally of enemy, to any money or other property received and held by the alien property custodian or deposited in the United States Treasury shall be settled as Congress shall direct: Provided, however, That on order of the President, as set forth in section 9 hereof, or of the court as set forth in sections 9 and 10 hereof, the alien property custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, shall forthwith convey, transfer, assign, and pay to the person to whom the President shall so order, or in whose behalf the court shall enter final judgment or decree, any property of an enemy, or ally of enemy, held by said custodian or by said Treasurer, so far as may be necessary to comply with said order of the President or said final judgment or decree of the court: And provided further, That the Treasurer of the United States, on order of the alien property custodian, shall, as provided in section 10 hereof, repay to the licensee any funds deposited by said licensee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will ask the chairman of the committee to tell us how this amendment changes the present law?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, under the present law the Custodian of Alien Enemy Property takes such property into custody, but he has no authority to sell it. The Custodian of Alien Enemy Property appeared before the committee, as the Senator from Vermont no doubt will recall, and stated that he was now conducting business—a very large business—in our own country and in our island possessions and making enormous profits, and he thought that he ought not to be conducting, and the United States Government ought not to require him to conduct, this large business for the profit, possibly, of our enemies—the German Empire. I will read briefly what Mr. Palmer said. His statement is not long, but still I shall not read the whole of it, by any means. Mr. Palmer stated:

I am to-day operating factories and mills and industries all over the United States Through my directors representing the enemy stock I am making chocolate in Connecticut, rails in Pennsylvania, woolens and worsteds in New Jersey, dyes and chemicals in New York, lumber in Florida, raising sugar in Porto Rico and Hawaii, raising tobacco in many States in the South, making beer in Chicago, lead pencils in New Jersey, and conducting all these various kinds of business and many others, most of which are making enormous profits by reason of the very conditions for which the enemy is responsible, namely, the war conditions. If I must simply sit here, holding the stock of these companies making these enormous profits out of the war, with the possibility of returning both principal and profits, to the German owners at the end of the war, I am doing a tremendous favor to the German Empire, our enemy.

Senator GALLINGER. What would be the alternative, Mr. Palmer?

Mr. PALMER. The alternative would be to account for these properties as of their value at the time I took them over when the war broke out, sell them to American capital, let Americans run them, separate them permanently and entirely from German control, put the money in the Treasury, invest it in Government bonds to fight the war with, and when the war is over, if any accounting has to be made, say to those who claim an accounting, "Here is the value of your property when the war broke out in the Treasury of the United States in cash."

Senator DILLINGHAM. Has the German Government any interest in the various industries which you have mentioned?

Mr. PALMER. We have not gotten to the bottom of that, Senator. We run into things that makes us think that the German Government has.

I might read further, but what I have read gives the gist and the kernel of the situation. These industries, spreading from one end of our country to the other—most valuable manufacturing enterprises and industries—are being operated now by an officer of the United States Government, who may be called upon to account at the end of the war to German owners.

Right in that connection, Mr. President—I shall not go on if the Senator from Vermont is desirous of making a further statement, for I do not wish by an answer to his question to interfere with any line of debate which he may desire to pursue——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I desire the Senator from Virginia to proceed.

Mr. MARTIN. There has been an impression, Mr. President, that there are treaties between the United States and the German Empire which provide that in case of war foreign-owned property in this country should be preserved and turned over to its owners at the end of hostilities. I have caused that question to be investigated by the State Department, and I hold in my hand the memorandum which has been sent to me by one of the law officers of that department. I shall not read it unless it is desired.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask the Senator to read it.

Mr. KENYON. I wish the Senator from Virginia would read it.

Mr. MARTIN. I presume it would be well for the Secretary to read it, and I send it to the desk and ask that it may be read. I ask the Secretary to read the extract from the only treaty which touches this subject, and which extract, in my opinion, absolutely relieves us from any treaty obligation to account for any of this property. International law does not require it, though there has been a diversity of decisions in Anglo-Saxon countries, particularly, on that question. There is, however, no rule which requires our country when it goes to war, at the end of the war, to account to enemy citizens for property found here.

Speaking for myself alone, and, I think, voicing the sentiment of the American people, I have no hesitation in saying that if the German people ever get any compensation for this property it will be after they have compensated American citizens for the millions of dollars' worth—I may say almost billions of dollars' worth—of property of our people which they have destroyed ruthlessly and in violation of the principles of international law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MARTIN. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question before the reading of this paper begins?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, we are all agreed that war of itself will destroy any treaty and render it worthless between the two countries at war; but, if I remember rightly, the treaty under consideration was a treaty made in contemplation of war, and provided that in case of war this and that should be the rights of the belligerent powers.

Mr. MARTIN. That is true; but this and that and the other—fixing the rights of belligerent parties—does not go to the extent of requiring us, in this instance, to account for this property. The treaty does not, in my opinion, embrace this question at all. At the end of the war we shall be free to deal with this subject as the moral sense of this country and the interests of the American Republic require us to deal with it. We shall be under no treaty constraint in respect to it. I think when the paper which I have sent to the desk is read that the Senator from North Dakota will be satisfied of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR SENATOR MARTIN.

MARCH 7, 1918.

(1) The only treaty in force with Germany which might be regarded as relating to protection of German property in the United States in time of war is Article XXIII of the treaty of 1799, which reads as follows:

"If war should arise between the two contracting parties, the merchants of either country then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs, and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance; and all women and children, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and in general all others whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments, and shall not be molested in their persons, nor shall their houses or goods be burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their fields wasted by the armed force of the enemy into whose power by the events of war they may happen to fall; but if anything is necessary to be taken from them for the use of such armed force the same shall be paid for at a reasonable price."

(2) As a general rule, treaties of amity and commerce, such as this one is, are discontinued or terminated by war between the contracting parties, except as to articles especially providing for the condition of war. As Article XXIII, above quoted, contemplates a state of war, it is regarded as in force between the United States and Germany.

(3) The nine months' period mentioned in Article XXIII expired on January 6, 1918. Consequently the merchants residing in either country may no longer "depart freely, carrying off all of their effects," as provided in Article XXIII.

(4) The word "effects" in this article is a translation of the French word "biens" in the French text of the original signed copy of the treaty. It is understood that the word "biens" is one of the broadest words in the French language to include all kinds and forms of property.

(5) It will be observed that this article provides that those enemies of certain classes who remain in the United States shall not be molested in their persons, nor have their property burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their fields wasted by the armed force of the enemy, but that if anything is taken from them for the use of such armed force they shall be paid therefor at a reasonable price. Although it is not entirely clear, it is arguable that these provisions protect these Germans in their persons and property from the armed forces of the United States or from the taking of their property for the use of armed forces except upon compensation. If this is true, other German property in the United States—that is, German property not subject to molestation or destruction or "taking" by or for the use of armed forces—may be dealt with in accordance with the law and practice of nations.

(6) As to the disposition of enemy private property in the territory of the other belligerent, there appear to be two views among authorities. According to the one view, they should be exempt from confiscation except in the exigency of military necessity, public safety, reprisals, etc. This seems to be the European continental view. According to the other view, largely entertained by Anglo-American writers, the sovereign is supposed to possess the right to require confiscation if this should be found necessary, but leans toward a general policy of exemption. The difference, in effect, between these two views does not appear to be very great. It would seem, however, that the practice of nations as a rule recognizes the exemption of private property as a policy which ought to be followed save in exceptional cases.

(7) In respect to taking over German refugee merchantmen in the United States at the outbreak of the war, and in respect to the control of enemy private property in the United States by the alien property custodian, Congress has not passed upon the question of the final disposition to be made of such enemy property.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, a careful reading of the treaty provisions satisfies me that if we make any accounting to the German Empire or to citizens of the German Empire at the end of this war for the German-owned property now within our borders that accounting will not have to be made under the provisions of that treaty. The owners of this property did not remain in the United States; they are not in the United States now; they are abroad and waging war on the United States, and that war has created the extravagant profits which are accruing under the management of the alien property custodian. Of course, whether we will account for it or not will be a matter to come up at the end of the war; but whether or not we have to account for the property or not at the end of the war, it is inconceivable that any Senator can contend that we are under obligations to take care of that property, operate that property, and make the enormous profits which are accruing now day by day by reason of this war so ruthlessly waged by the German Empire, in order to augment the sum to be accounted for at the end of the strife.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Virginia, because I have not been able to get a copy of the amendment which is now before the Senate, how broad is this provision, and what class of property is it proposed to authorize the alien property custodian to sell in this way?

Mr. MARTIN. The custodian is authorized, in his discretion, to sell any or all of the German-owned property which he has taken over.

Mr. KNOX. Whether it belongs to individuals or to corporations?

Mr. MARTIN. Any German-owned property, any alien-enemy property which comes into his possession.

Mr. KNOX. Now, Mr. President, as I heard read the letter from the Department of State, it seems to me that it omitted perhaps the most essential feature of the treaty. Article 23 of the treaty of 1799, which was revived by the treaty of 1828 and carried into the treaty of 1828, which I believe both countries have regarded as in force up to the present time, in the first place deals with merchants. It says that they shall be allowed nine months to settle their affairs and depart freely, and so forth, from the United States. That is all there is about the merchants. The merchants are the only class that are required within the nine months to depart from the United States.

Mr. MARTIN. That is correct.

Mr. KNOX. There is a certain class permitted to remain, and as to that class I did not catch the reference in the letter of the Secretary of State—and all women and children—

This portion of article 23 of the treaty he did quote—

scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and in general all others whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments—

That is, they shall be allowed to remain in the United States and continue the various employments, including manufacturing, artisanship, and cultivation of the soil.

Now, what I want to inquire of the Senator from Virginia is this: Is this legislation supposed to be in aid of the policy announced by Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer in the testimony which the Senator has read, and, if so, does it proceed upon the theory that this treaty is now in force?

Mr. MARTIN. The extract which the Senator read, I think, is contained in the paper that I sent to the desk.

Mr. KNOX. This is the twenty-third article of the treaty of 1799, revived in 1828, and which was partially quoted in the letter from the Department of State.

Mr. MARTIN. As I understand, the parties owning this property which Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer has taken into custody are not residing in this country.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not think that appeared before the committee. I should like to have the Senator quote the testimony to that effect.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not say that Mr. Palmer distinctly stated that; I said my understanding of the matter was that the owners of this property which has been taken over are not now in this country. He said that the owners of this property were of the junker class in Germany; that is, the large capitalists of Germany own the property which he has taken over and is now operating.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator permit me to occupy another moment?

Mr. MARTIN. I will.

Mr. KNOX. I want the Senator to understand that what I have said is without any intention of indicating any position that I occupy on this amendment; I want to get at what the suggestion is, and particularly to know whether this legislation is designed to carry into effect the new policy which is avowed by Mr. Palmer in his testimony. I want to read a small paragraph here from Mr. Palmer's testimony, in view of what the Senator has read. In reply to Senator HARDWICK, Mr. Palmer said:

American interests in Germany are negligible compared with German interests in this country.

In other words, we conceive that there ought to be a line drawn between the two kinds of German investments in this country. The ordinary investment of the plain German citizen ought to be taken over by the alien property custodian and held as against the time when the distribution of it will be made, probably in kind, to somebody under the act of Congress at the end of the war; but the investment in this country, which is so close to the German Empire's control that it amounts to a part of the German industrial and commercial hold upon America and American insular possessions, ought to be treated a little differently.

Then he goes on to state how it should be treated; that is, that it should be sold to Americans, so that the proceeds of the operations from this time forth shall go into the pockets of American citizens instead of into the pockets of the present German owners.

Now, if the Senator will permit me to repeat my question, is this legislation authorizing Mr. Palmer to sell the classes of property enumerated in the amendment, intended to carry out that policy; and, if it is intended to carry out that policy, is it upon the theory that the treaty is binding or that the treaty is not binding?

I recognize, Mr. President, that a very strong argument can be made, even under the language of this treaty, that corporations are not included within the terms of article 23; I can understand how it can be contended that while we should be bound to allow farmers and manufacturers to continue their respective employments—and we know what "manufacturers" meant in 1799; it meant people who made goods by their hands; it did not contemplate the great aggregations of capital and the hundreds of men who have been planted upon our soil as a part of the German economic policy to get a holding in foreign countries. I can understand all that, but I should like to know what the administration's understanding of this treaty is, because this treaty says in terms:

And it is declared—

Reading now from the next article—Article XXIV—

And it is declared that neither the pretense that war dissolves all treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending t is and t e next preceding article, but, on the contrary, that the state of war is precisely t at for which they are provided, and during which they are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature and nations.

Now, are we discharged from the sacred obligation to observe this treaty as we are bound to observe the law of nature and the law of nations, or are the classes of property which it is proposed to sell under this amendment not within the terms of the treaty? It is the attitude of the Governmen upon those two propositions in regard to which I should like to be satisfied before coming to a conclusion as to how I shall vote upon this amendment.

If the Senator will permit me further, I desire to add this thought: Senators will observe that these articles are to be "as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature and nations." Is that a standard upon which the existence of this treaty depends? Is that a standard which, if broken by either nation, will give the other the moral right to abrogate the treaty? In other words, if this Government has found as a fact that the German Government has violated the law of nature and has violated the law of nations during this war, is that a justification for us ignoring the whole treaty, and does the Government take that position? What I should like is light.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, Mr. Palmer in the course of his testimony—I will not take the time to read further extracts from it—distinctly stated that he was announcing no policy for the United States in respect to this matter; that he had no authority to announce any policy, and was not undertaking to announce any policy for the American Government in respect to what should be done in relation to this property at the end of hostilities.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Did not Mr. Palmer expressly state that he wanted to inaugurate the policy of taking possession of the property and selling it, and then holding the proceeds until the close of the war?

Mr. MARTIN. Undoubtedly he did.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly, he did.

Mr. MARTIN. He did not, however, announce any policy; he distinctly stated that he had no right to announce any policy as to what should be done with the proceeds of this property at the end of the war. He did say that he did not think we were called upon to operate this property and make enormous profits out of it, made possible by the war brought on by Germany, with a view to accounting for these enormous profits at the end of hostilities So far as I am concerned, I do not feel myself called on to express any opinion about what the most enlightened and just course would be at the end of hostilities further than to say that I can not see the slightest particle of obligation upon us to operate this property and make enormous profits out of it, to be accounted for in any contingency to the German people or to the German Government at the end of the war. I think the utmost that we could be called upon to do would be, if we account for anything, to account for the value of the property at the time we took it over; and if we account for it at all, Mr. President, if we account even for the value of it when we took it over, it is inconceivable, to my mind, that we should account for it unless they come into this accounting themselves and account for the destruction they have brought about and for the havoc they have caused to the property of American citizens.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. MARTIN. I will.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. Palmer, if the Senator will read a little further, testified as follows:

> Germany is doing with us exactly what we are doing with her. She is following along. She is making inquiry constantly to find out just how far we are going with German property.
> Senator HARDWICK. She will do, of course, whatever we do.
> Mr. PALMER. She will do what we do; exactly.
> Senator HARDWICK. And she is now doing just what we are doing?
> Mr. PALMER. She is now doing what we are doing; and she may take no step in advance of what we do, because the balance is against her.

So it appears that so far as the observance of this treaty is concerned, and the treatment of American property in Germany, Germany has observed the treaty, and is watching us to see whether or not we do the same.

Mr. MARTIN. We do not know whether Germany is observing the treaty or not. As I have stated, in my opinion that does not enter into this matter at all. That is my personal and individual opinion, and my opinion as a lawyer, after having read this treaty. I do not believe it controls in this matter. But whether it controls or not, the utmost that can be expected of us under the treaty or under the most enlightened ideas of modern warfare would be to account for the value of the property when we took it over. We can not be under any obligation to operate that property, and make enormous war profits out of the ruthless and devastating war that has been waged upon us by the German Empire.

So I say that we are strictly within our rights—strictly within our rights under the treaty, strictly within our rights under international law, strictly within our rights under the most humanitarian view that can be taken of modern war—when we preserve this property with an idea that we may have to account for it at its actual value when we took it over. We can be under no obligation under the treaty, under the laws of nations, or under the laws of humanity, to operate this property and make enormous war profits to be accounted for to Germany when peace is declared. Whenever an accounting is made the balance will be on the side of America. I confess, Mr. President, that it will take a very strong case, it will take a most extraordinary case, to make me feel like turning over one dollar of this property at the end of the war to the German Empire or to subjects of the German Empire.

Mr. President, as I have stated, it is inconceivable to my mind that any Senator can feel that an obligation rests upon the American Government to operate this property and make enormous profits out of it and turn them over to German citizens or to the German Empire when this war is over. This amendment does not deal with what we shall do after the war. It does not deal with what shall be done. Mr. Palmer expressed some opinions of his own, and I perhaps have gone further than I was called upon to go in expressing my own opinions, though I feel them deeply.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator a question that I think will give me, at least, some enlightenment on this subject.

I do not know so much about the nature of this property, but I agree with the Senator that we ought not to operate it for the purpose, at least, of making profits while we have it; but why is that necessary?

If we are operating the property, why do we not operate it so that there will not be such great profits?

I do not know whether that is possible or not, because I do not understand as well as the Senator does about the nature of the property; but it seems to me that if we are operating a factory we might sell the output for a great deal less and not make such a big profit.

Mr. MARTIN. I suppose the Senator was not on the floor when I read what Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer said on that subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I heard what the Senator read, but Mr. Palmer spoke in very general terms.

Mr. MARTIN. No; he said he was making chocolate in Connecticut——

Mr. NORRIS. Why does he not sell the chocolate cheaper, so that he will not make so much profit?

Mr. MARTIN. If he is going to do business, I take it that he ought to do it in good faith. These are stock companies, and there may be some American owners as well as German owners of the stock; but he only takes over the stock of the German owners.

Mr. NORRIS. But he will not make enough chocolate to break the market.

Mr. MARTIN. That was the first item he happened to mention. He mentioned, in addition to chocolate, rails in Pennsylvania, woolens and worsteds in New Jersey, dyes and chemicals in New York, lumber in Florida, sugar in Porto Rico and Hawaii, tobacco in many States of the South, beer in Chicago, and lead pencils in New Jersey. He says he is conducting all of these various kinds of business, and many others, most of which are making enormous profits by reason of the very conditions for which the enemy is responsible, namely, the war conditions. He goes on later here to say that in taking over the stock in these various enterprises he took over only German-owned stock. There was some American-owned stock which he did not take over; and I take it that if he is going to conduct a business in which some shares, even though they are very few, are American owned, he ought to conduct it in good faith. He says that he is making enormous profits out of the various businesses which have devolved upon him under the alien enemy act.

Mr. President, what we will do with the value of this property at the end of the war is a matter of national policy that will have to be determined at the peace table. It is inconceivable to me that we will account for this property unless we hold Germany to an accounting for the ruthless destruction that she has visited on American citizens all over the world. In making that accounting, if we every make any—and, as I stated before, I do not believe we are under any treaty obligation to make any accounting at all, the terms of that treaty, as I construe them, do not control in this matter to any degree—but if we are to make any accounting it will be an accounting which will be accompanied by an accounting from Germany, and in which accounting the balance will be, I am sure, in favor of American citizens and the American Government and not in favor of Germany.

This amendment simply provides that this property shall be put fairly on the market; that it shall be sold; and that the proceeds shall be put in the Treasury of the United States and invested in liberty bonds or the proceeds in some way used for the prosecution of this war, which has been precipitated upon us by the barbarous conduct of the German Empire. We do not go at all into the policy after the war. We can not do that. That is a matter of the future; but we can fix the value of the property by putting it on the market now, and not enhance the value of the property by operating it and making enormous profits to be brought into the accounting at the end of the war.

Mr. President, I believe that presents the matter about as succintly as I can present it, and about as it was brought to the attention of the committee by Mr. Palmer, who said he was tired of operating these properties and making enormous profits that will have to be accounted for to the German people, our enemies, when the war is over.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I understood the Senator to say that Mr. Palmer is now operating certain breweries. Is that true?

Mr. MARTIN. I think so; yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Is there not reason to believe that if we sell those breweries now they are worth a great deal more money at the present time than they will be a little later on, and that the Government would lose a great deal of money by that transaction? And is it not also true that the President of the United States has the power to prohibit any food product or any grain going into the manufacture of these alcoholic liquors during the war? It seems to me that the breweries should not be operated by the Government during the period of the war, and that it is not necessary to sell them, and if sold it will be to the advantage of the German Empire and it will protect their interests, and this Government would lose by the transaction.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, it is not made obligatory on Mr. Palmer to sell any of this property. He is given the discretionary power, under the guidance and direction of the President of the United States, to sell such of it as will best promote the welfare and the interests of the American Government and the people of the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. I am not opposing the Senator's amendment at all; but I simply wanted to make this observation: I think it would be unwise for this Government to sell property which may be valuable at this time and which I have reason to believe will not be so valuable a little later on.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, that is left entirely in the discretion of Mr. Palmer, who has shown himself a most admirable agent of the Government in this matter. He surprised me with the thoroughness with which he has gone into the matter. He has sought out and taken over all the German-owned property that he could get in touch with anywhere. He is a man of broad views and patriotic purposes, and he is under the control of the President of the United States. This amendment simply gives him the discretionary power to sell such of this property as he believes will best promote the prosperity and welfare of the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I notice in the report of the hearings of Mr. Palmer that he mentions several industrial plants in New Jersey that are manufacturing woolens, which, in part, are owned by German capital. Now, I agree with the Senator from Virginia that we should remove every bit of German influence that exists in this country. I agree with the Senator from Virginia that the Germans who have invested money in this country should be deprived of the unusual profits which have been afforded by this war. But when we are liquidating those German interests and granting powers to an alien-property custodian who has autocratic powers without any provisions for review, we should be careful that American interests are not interfered with.

Mr. Palmer in his evidence states that there are six or seven factories in a certain town in New Jersey whose stock is owned either wholly or in part by Germans. That is true, I believe. I am not well informed as to what amount their interest is; but I do know that in Passaic, N. J., there are several large woolen mills, one of which is owned to the extent of 80 per cent, I believe, by German citizens.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think I stated it before, but Mr. Palmer said he had not taken over any of the stock in any of these enterprises except what was absolutely owned by German citizens. The American owners are getting their dividends now as heretofore. He has not interfered, and will not interfere, with the ownership of a single share in any of those properties that is in American ownership.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that that is the fact; but that is an expression of good will only. I am referring to the powers that are given to Mr. Palmer in this measure.

When Mr. Palmer made his statement before the committee there was almost a panic in that little industrial town. The statement that was made was garbled, of course, but the statement was made that the Government was going to take those mills and close them down because they were partly owned by German interests. What I am interested in is that the powers of the custodian shall be so limited that if there is any injury to American interests those interests will have the right of review, the right of protection; but this grants him arbitrary powers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator understand this bill to authorize the Alien Property Custodian to sell the factory, or simply to sell the stock that the Germans own?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will read the act to the Senator from Georgia. It says that he shall exercise any rights or powers which may be or become appurtenant thereto, or to the ownership thereof, in like manner as if he were an absolute owner thereof.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would not that mean simply the ownership of the stock? I agree with the Senator that it certainly ought to be limited to the question of the stock; that he ought not to have the right to interfere with the property where a part interest in that property belongs to a citizen; but if we can so shape it that it would be clearly limited to the stock, would not the objection of the Senator be removed?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Palmer made that perfectly clear, if the Senator will permit me. He was asked:

> Senator SHAFROTH. What do you do in the case of an American minority stockholder where the German stockholders are in the majority? Do you pay the American his dividends or not?
> Mr. PALMER. Oh, certainly.
> Senator SHAFROTH. But you hold the other part in the custodian's fund?
> Mr. PALMER. Exactly. We simply take the stock of the enemy, so that the corporation pays the dividends to the American stockholders and pays the enemy stockholders' dividends to us.

It is not proposed anywhere that he shall take into custody a single dollar of American-owned property. He has not suggested it. The law does not authorize it. It only authorizes him to take into possession and make disposition of enemy property. There is nothing else in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Was not Mr. Palmer referring to what he had already done under existing conditions—that he held the alien stock; not the American citizen's stock; an American citizen was paid his dividends as in the past and the dividend of the alien was put in the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. MARTIN. That is exactly what he said. He said he had not the slightest idea of interfering with a dollar that belonged to an American citizen; that he had not done that and would not do that; that he was only taking enemy-owned shares of stock.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that was under the power that he had to-day. I think the Senator from New Jersey was discussing the question as to what would be his attitude after the power proposed in this amendment was granted him; or, in other words, if he had the power, then what could he do with that stock?

Mr. MARTIN. He has no power except to sell enemy-owned property. Absolutely no power is given him by this bill to sell any property owned by an American citizen, but only to sell enemy-owned property. Certainly I would not take one iota from an American citizen; neither will I extend by an iota German rights. I will give them what we are bound to give them at the end of this war; but it will be mighty hard to convince me that we ought to give them anything, and certainly we ought not to give them anything until they account to American citizens for the loss, damage, and injury which they have inflicted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the proposed law, then, in the case, for instance, of a minority stockholder of a corporation running a manufacturing concern, the custodian would only sell the stock of that corporation that is owned by the German citizen?

Mr. MARTIN. Beyond a doubt. That is all the power that we give him; that is all he asks and all he would exercise.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is the case, I do not see how that will hurt any American citizens who happen to be the owners of the balance of the stock.

Mr. MARTIN. It will not. I am as much for protecting American interests as anybody else; but God forbid that I should protect any interest of a German citizen any more than I am compelled to protect it. When they get a dollar by a vote of mine, they will account for every dollar of destruction they have wrought on the American people.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I am not in any way defending the interests of any German citizen, and it is not necessary for me to state that again. I believe that the powers conferred in this amendment upon the alien-property custodian not only extend to the power of sale but to the power of direction, because the general statute which this amendment demands gives him power to manage. Already the alien-property custodian has placed directors in these plants to represent the interests of his trusteeship. I may say that these industries employ, I think, about 25,000 hands. At the present time some of them are manufacturing uniform cloth for the United States Government. What those proprietors and the employees fear is that there will be some interference with the continuity of that enterprise. If the alien-property custodian in selling that property should sell it to an unfriendly interest—and he has the right to do it, without any power of review or restraint—the enterprise might be ruined. What I am contending for is that the act ought to be amended in some way so that there is a power of review on the part of somebody against any unjust act by the alien-property custodian which might affect American interests.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to take the floor. I am just seeking light, and I want to ask the Senator a question.

Of course, I agree with the Senator that I do not want to see any American interests injured; but I can not understand the logic of the argument of the Senator when he says that the employees or minority stockholders are afraid that this custodian will sell to unfriendly interests the controlling interest that is now owned by German citizens.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. He has that power.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand; but these people would not be as much afraid of the custodian, representing the Government of the United States, doing such a thing as they would be of the Germans themselves making such a sale; and they have the ownership now. The custodian would not have any greater power in making the sale than the owners of the property themselves would have; and certainly it would be to his interest not to interfere with the operation of those plants, much more so than though he did not have possession and the German owners were trying to make the sale. I can see why they might want to interfere with the continuity of the work.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The act should be so framed that if there should be any unwise action it could be reviewed. It depends upon the wisdom and probably the business judgment of the Alien Property Custodian. It might be contrary to their policy of business; but his ruling is arbitrary. There should be some board of appeal or some power of review. It depends upon the whim of the Alien Property Custodian, which might destroy an industry. I think the amendment is too broad and confers too great powers.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator this question: While I concede that it is possible that that power might be abused, take it as it is now. Suppose that the Alien Property Custodian is not given authority to do this. Would it not be more to the interest of these German owners than to the interest of the custodian to do something of the kind?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Oh, I am not opposing the sale of the property.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; but they have that power now. They might put a German spy in there to operate the plant.

It seems to me that while we do not escape danger by taking this action, and I can see that a mistake might be made somewhere, we are improving the matter a great deal by putting it in the hands of any American citizen, rather than leaving it, as it is now, in the hands of an alien enemy.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in asking the chairman of the committee to make an explanation, as I did when this amendment was offered, I did it for the purpose of bringing the attention of the Senate to what I think is a very unwise course of action in connection with the consideration of these appropriation bills.

After the examination of this bill had been completed, the amendment which was adopted to-day without debate—the one authorizing the President of the United States to purchase all of the great wharf and dock property in New York formerly occupied by the North German Lloyd Line and the Hamburg-American Line, and, in case of failure to purchase, to institute proceedings for the condemnation of that property—came to the committee, and the committee was called together at 15 minutes before 12. The committee had no information whatever regarding the necessity for such action on that amendment, and they adjourned without taking action. Two days later Mr. Palmer came before the committee to explain that amendment, and from that explanation it appears that the Government is now in possession of the dock property, occupying it, using it in every way. Mr. Palmer's testimony states no reason for haste in securing title to the property, if indeed we ever want such title. It further appeared from Mr. Palmer's statement that such dock property is now owned by corporations formed under the laws of New Jersey, the share owners of which are wholly German citizens, as I understand him to say. He has as Alien Property Custodian taken over that stock and is holding it. If the President is authorized to purchase that property, under this amendment, he must purchase it of Mr. Palmer, and Mr. Palmer under the present law—the alien-property act—has not the power to sell it, and so he seeks the amendment which is now under consideration in order that he may have power to sell it.

Beyond what I have stated I know nothing about the necessity of the purchase of this property by the Government at this time. I do not think any member of the committee has any knowledge as to the necessity of purchasing that property at the present time. Certainly none was given that I now recall.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly; very gladly.

Mr. MARTIN. The Senator is referring to the wharf property, I believe.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. I will call the Senator's attention to a matter which has not gotten into the record, because I had not heard of it, and therefore did not ask Mr. Palmer; but I got him over the telephone, and told him I had heard that the condition of those wharves, or the condition of business of the United States at those wharves, was such that large expenditures were necessary for the full utilization of the wharves for Government purposes. He said that he had omitted to mention it, but he authorized me to quote him in the fullest and broadest way to the effect that it was necessary—immediately necessary, urgently necessary—to make very large expenditures on those wharves at Hoboken, so large that he did not think it would be expedient or proper for the Government to make those expenditures until after it had taken over the title.

That reason for the acquisition of the title at this time did not go into the record, because I had not previously heard the suggestion. As soon as I heard it, I called up Mr. Palmer, and I have his authority for quoting him in the broadest sense, as I have stated, as to the absolute and urgent necessity for very large expenditures by the United States in order to get the proper use from those wharves—such a large expenditure that he thought it ought not to be made until the title was taken over.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And it is a remarkable fact, Mr. President, that Mr. Palmer—who came before that committee on purpose to tell us why that amendment should be adopted—failed, after speaking an hour, to give the only reason that has been urged, the one just given by the Senator from Virginia.

It occurred to me, as I heard that testimony, that there was another reason, for Mr. Palmer testified as follows: and if the Senators care to follow it, they will find it on the fifth page of his testimony. He says:

> The President has advised you, I take it, that he thinks it is wise that the Government should take over the possession and title of these properties.

Then he goes on to say this, which I call to the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania, because he inquired of the chairman as to the policy of Mr. Palmer. He says:

> It is also believed that it would be helpful to the general plans and purposes of the Alien Property Custodian with respect to enemy property, in conjunction with this power which is to be granted if this rider on the appropriation bill is passed, if there could be at the same time an amendment to the trading with the enemy act which would give to the Alien Property Custodian the general power of sale of enemy property in this country. In other words, it is desired to bring the trading with the enemy act back to the terms which were written into the law by the Senate, and to strike out the change which was subsequently made, I think in conference, restricting the power of the Alien Property Custodian to sell enemy property in this country.

Further on he says:

> Since we have become acquainted with the enemy property in this country, since we have seen how the German Empire, through its financial operations, has put an industrial and commercial chain all the way across this country and through our insular possessions, we have become thoroughly convinced that it would be wise and proper and highly desirable at this time if the enemy ownership in some of those properties could be permanently taken away.

At this point there was a conversation as to the action of Germany, although at that time in the committee none of us were aware of the existence of the treaty that has been referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania. Senator HARDWICK put the following question:

> Mr. Palmer, right there, does Germany do that with us now?
> Mr. PALMER. Germany is doing with us exactly what we are doing with her. She is following along. She is making inquiry constantly to find out just how far we are going with German property.
>
> Senator HARDWICK. She will do, of course, whatever we do?
>
> Mr. PALMER. She will do what we do; exactly.
>
> Senator HARDWICK. And she is now doing just what we are doing?
> Mr. PALMER. She is now doing what we are doing; and she may take no step in advance of what we do because the balance is against her.

Going over to page 7 of the testimony, Mr. Palmer began in the language which has already been read and from which it appears that the properties in his hands have no American stockholders, if I understand his language correctly. He says:

> Mr. PALMER. Why, there is a city in this country which is a little Germany in that respect, a great industrial town where seven or eight great mills are entirely German owned, and from some of which the American flag has never flown until the Alien Property Custodian took over the enemy's stock and put his own directors into those corporations.
> It is a part of the German trust in that industry; there is no question about that, and it is a very interesting question, at least, whether as an effective weapon in the war we ought not to consider Americanizing that sort of a concern and putting the proceeds in cash in the Treasury of the United States to await distribution at the end of the war.
> Otherwise I find myself in this position: I am to-day operating factories and mills and industries all over the United States. Through my directors representing the enemy stock I am making chocolate in Connecticut, rails in Pennsylvania, woolens and worsteds in New Jersey, dyes and chemicals in New York, lumber in Florida, raising sugar in Porto Rico and Hawaii, raising tobacco in many States in the South, making beer in Chicago, lead pencils in New Jersey, and conducting all these various kinds of business and many others, most of which are making enormous profits by reason of the very conditions for which the enemy is responsible, namely, the war conditions. If I must simply sit here, holding the stock of these companies making these enormous profits out of the war, with the possibility of returning both principal and profits to the German owners at the end of the war, I am doing a tremendous favor to the German Empire, our enemy.

Senator GALLINGER. What would be the alternative, Mr. Palmer?

Mr. PALMER. The alternative would be to account for these properties as of their value at the time I took them over when the war broke out, sell them to American capital, let the Americans run them, separate them permanently and entirely from German control, put the money in the Treasury, invest it in Government bonds to fight the war with, and when the war is over, if any accounting has to be made, say to those who claim an accounting: "Here is the value of your property when the war broke out in the Treasury of the United States in cash."

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire of the Senator, he being a member of the committee, whether Mr. Palmer stated to the committee if they could do this, notwithstanding the treaty, or whether they could do it within the terms of the treaty and under the general rules that prevail in war?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania I will say that the treaty was not discussed. A question was asked whether there was a treaty, and a prominent member of the committee assured us there was no treaty with Germany, and the matter went without further discussion from that standpoint of the case.

Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy the attention of the Senate any longer in reading the testimony. I have gone thus far to call the attention of the Senate to a situation in which it appears that we have a treaty with Germany covering this very subject, a treaty to the terms of which Germany has lived up to, as appears from the testimony of Mr. Palmer.

Now, then, I do not know what situation the adoption of this legislation will bring our Government into. It looks to me like a very serious matter. I am in full sympathy with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], but I think it is all wrong to have these amendments brought in on an appropriation bill and without consideration by any committee with the treaty before them. I think both these amendments—the one that has already been adopted and the pending amendment as well—ought to be defeated. The subject matter of both could then be presented in the form of a bill and be referred to the appropriate committee—the Committee on Foreign Relations—where it could be fully and carefully considered from the standpoint of international law and of our treaty relations. That committee could advise us whether we are going blindly and could guard us against a policy that may trouble us exceedingly in the future.

I do not know but that the Senate ought to adopt both these amendments. On the other hand, I do not know that the Senate ought to adopt them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think one of the most important features of legislation that has come before this Congress is the pending measure. I have listened to what my good friend on the committee has said about legislation on an appropriation bill, and under ordinary circumstances and conditions I would agree with him; but we have written much legislation on urgent deficiency appropriation bills that have passed since the war began. It is the speedy way to accomplish a result. We wrote the legislation by a Senate amendment which created the present Aviation Corps in the United States; we wrote the legislation by a Senate amendment on an urgent deficiency bill that started the building of the great merchant fleet that must save our country from defeat on the battle fields of Europe, and to-day we offer an amendment on this bill because the President of the United States has sent word to the Congress of the United States that speedy action is necessary.

Mr. President, there is more justification for writing this amendment on this bill than any of the other propositions that have come before Congress, not only justification on account of the merits of the proposition but justification because the Senate has fully considered this proposition before and acted on it favorably.

The amendment which I hold in my hand and which has been offered in the Senate is the identical language that was adopted by the Senate when it passed the alien-property custodian act. It is the identical amendment that was reported by your committee to the Senate, not as the law stands to-day but worded as it is proposed in this amendment.

More than that, the House of Representatives concurred in the language that is proposed in this amendment. Yet we find that somewhere and somehow, after the language that authorized the alien custodian to sell this property as it appears on page 4 of the amendment, where it is provided that he shall have the power to manage the property "and do any act or things in respect thereof, or make any disposition thereof or of any part thereof, by sale or otherwise," in some way these weazel words were injected into the law, "when necessary to prevent waste or for the protection of the property," destroying the intention of Congress as expressed by the Senate when it passed upon the bill originally.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will not object to my saying in his behalf or my own behalf that those words were injected in a conference report without the authority of either House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. SMOOT. They were put in in conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; they crept in the bill in conference against the express will of both Houses of Congress. We find them here standing as a barrier against our winning this war.

The purpose of the alien property custodian act was to hold up the hands of the Federal Government in the conduct of the war. It was to take out of their hands the great power that it exercised in the control of German-owned corporations and German-owned property. It is not only the wharves and the docks that they own. The great American Metals Co.—I think I use the name correctly, although I am not sure—whose power extends all over the United States in the manufacture of steel and many other metallic goods is absolutely German-owned and German controlled. Great woolen properties, when we need the goods to clothe the boys who are going to the trenches, have been German owned and German controlled, and their products may be delayed if we do not take possession.

Now, we have taken possession. If there is any violation of the treaty, which I do not believe, if there has been any violation of the treaty made in 1799 with the small Kingdom of Prussia, which was made when this alien property was taken over and the property physically taken away from the Germans——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator if, at the time of the passage of the alien property custodian act, this question of its being violative of any treaty was raised?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not recall that it was. I was not on the committee that reported it, and I was probably out of the Senate a part of the time while it was being discussed, so that I will not speak with a degree of positiveness; but during the time I was on the floor of the Senate I never heard the question raised. Yet this clause of the alien-custodian act when it was before the Senate and passed by the Senate was in the exact language that is used in this amendment offered now.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator conclude that if the one we are considering is violative of our treaty, we have already violated it by previous legislation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do. That is exactly the position I take, that the Senate violated it itself by passing this language before. But, more than that, I say it is no more a violation of the treaty to sell this German property than it was a violation of the treaty to take it. If there is a treaty right that protects this property in German control, we violated it by taking it away from them, and it is no further violation of that treaty after we have gotten possession of it to sell it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator understand that it is contended that the treaty prevents our Government from taking property of this character when the owners are out of the country and in Germany? Is there any language in the treaty which would reach such a case?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. None that I know of, and I do not know that that is contended.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me say to the Senator, in response to the question, that Mr. Gerard in his Four Years in Germany gives a very graphic account, beginning at page 378, of the threat which the German Government made to compel him to sign an additional series of articles in recognition of a rule amendatory to article 23 of the treaty of 1799, designed, among other things, to cover that species of property and which, of course, our ambassador refused to sign. So the construction given in Germany to the article I refer to excludes the consideration of property owned in this country by nonresident aliens.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Whether we are willing to accept the German construction of the treaty or not, it seems to me clearly in what I heard read there is nothing in the treaty which would exempt the right of the United States Government to seize this class of property and keep it—certainly to seize it and sell it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And even if we did not follow you, that having possibly violated the treaty in some former act we should violate it again, we can certainly follow you in saying we did not violate it in the first act and we will not be violating it now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly. There is nothing in the treaty of 1799 that refers in any way whatever to property owned by aliens who are out of our country. But, more than that, the treaty of 1799 is the only act that is recognized by our Government. I understand the attempt to ratify it in 1828 is not recognized by our Government and the language used at that time is not considered as binding on the Government.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I beg to correct the Senator from Alabama. The treaty of 1828 expressly revives the two sections which are pertinent in the treaty of 1799.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I understand it, the State Department does not recognize that as an existing fact. I am not stating that the Senator is not correct that the effort was made to revive it, but I understand our State Department does not recognize that it was revived.

Mr. KNOX. Here is the publication of the treaties in force in the United States. This treaty shows the signature of Henry Clay, representing the United States, and Ludwig Niederstetter, representing Germany, and the twelfth article of the treaty of 1828 reads:

> The twelfth article of the treaty of amity and commerce concluded between the parties in 1785 and the articles from the thirteenth to the twenty-fourth, inclusive, of that which was concluded at Berlin in 1799, with the exception of the last paragraph in the nineteenth article, relating to treaties with Great Britain, are hereby revived with the same force and virtue as if they made part of the context of the present treaty.

Now how anybody, whether he belongs to the State or any other department, can say in the face of the language of the treaty itself that that provision is not in operation I can not understand.

But I want to add one other word. I think the Senator from Alabama is absolutely correct that there is not a syllable in this treaty that has to do with any property of an alien enemy who does not reside within the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I wish to inquire if that was not the same treaty, renewed by the same provision, where the Prussian Government, now the German Empire, agreed that in case of war our vessels might trade with the other belligerents, and in such a case as that they should be allowed free passage, only that they might be subject to call and to search, and that even if we were carrying all sorts of contraband the only thing that was necessary was that the captains of our vessels should deliver that contraband to the visiting vessel. Is that the same treaty and the same provision?

Mr. KNOX. That is the same treaty, which Germany has violated in that respect and many other respects. What I have been trying to ascertain is why do the Government of the United States regard that treaty in force. Do they regard a treaty in force the provisions of which have not been adhered to as sacredly as the law of nature and the law of nations prescribe, when not only the law of nature and the law of nations have been defied by our enemies in this contest but the specific provisions of the treaty itself?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was coming to that. I have been first discussing this question from the standpoint as to whether we are violating the treaty. I do not think we are. The treaty in no way relates to any enemy-owned property when the enemy is out of the United States. It does not relate to enemy-owned property in the United States, because its very terms provide that the enemy shall have nine months in which to take that property out of the country, and the nine months have expired. So I do not think there is a question involved as to our violating a treaty right. But should we, the Congress of the United States, hesitate on the firing line of our country when we are sending men by the thousands to the battle fields of France? Shall we show a lack of courage, a lack of our patriotism, by failing to face the issue, and face it now, when our country needs action, because somebody may be hurt?

As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has called to the attention of the Senate, when our ambassador was leaving Germany, the declaration of war having been made by Germany by firing on our flag and sinking our ships, the German Emperor demanded of him as the basis for receiving his free passport that he should guarantee the protection of German property in this country and should sign an agreement to that effect—a threat, of course—a threat that the representative of the American Nation had too much courage, too much patriotism, to yield to.

But it showed the concern of the Imperial Government of Germany in the desire to protect the industrial properties of German citizens in this country; and why? According to the testimony of Mr. Palmer before this committee, it is entirely probable that the German Emperor, holding in the name of other people, owns a large part of the property involved.

Now, so far as I am concerned, when they have taken this treaty of 1799 and violated its provisions in every respect, trampled on it, regarded it as a mere scrap of paper, brought on this war by a violation of the treaty themselves, because under the treaty they have declared in favor of the free seas for our ships and their ships in times of war, and yet when our ships were sailing home, returning without a cargo, in violation of this very treaty they fire on the flag and sink the ship and force this Republic into war; to say that that treaty can stand as a barrier against our own defenses and the protection of our own people, against our striking a blow that will be felt by the classes in Germany that urged this war and have brought on its horrors and are continuing the autocracy of Germany, I say should not stand for one minute in our way.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow an inquiry?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The Senator's argument is very interesting. I was wondering what he would say about the status of private property owned by Germans in this country, as to the effect of the war and of the treaty upon that property.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I said, I do not think this treaty applies to it at all. All the terms of this treaty have passed by. It did not apply to foreign-owned property. The nine months in which it would apply to property owned by German citizens living here has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator if he construes that nine-months provision as applying to any one but merchants?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It probably does not apply to anybody but merchants, but I was giving the broadest construction to it that was possible, that it applied to all.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think it is susceptible of that construction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not either. I agree with the Senator about that, but in order that there might be no contention about it, I am applying the term property of merchants to every German who lives in the United States, and the time is up.

Now, why is this a blow to the German interests, and why is it necessary to protect our country that this provision should be passed? We are fighting the German peasant behind San Mihiel. We are attempting to destroy the lives of men who had nothing to do with bringing on this war, who probably have no desire to continue it, and who are doing it because they are hurled to the battlefield by an autocratic power. What we want to do is to wipe them out of the way so that we can win the victory. But this property is owned by the junker class of Germany, not the men on the battlefield but the millionaires, the titled class, lords of the manor, the Kaiser himself, and they have shown every hour and by every act their desire to protect this property, own it, and control it when the war is over. I would far rather fire a shot at Berlin and at the junker class of Berlin, who brought on this war and keep it going, than I would fire a shot behind San Mihiel at the peasant of Germany.

It is necessary for us to take over this property, not only its control and possessions but absolutely to Americanize it, to protect American interests during the war. It is necessary for us to take it over and let the German junker class know that America has her back against the wall, that we are fighting this war in earnest, that we are willing to fight it all along the line, and that there is no surrender on our part until a victorious settlement of the issues involved. We are too slow already. We ought to move faster.

I can understand how there are some interests in America that are apprehensive against the passage of this legislation. There are some interests in America that own property in Germany. I understand from Mr. Palmer's testimony—he so states—the largest ownership of property in Germany is the Standard Oil Co. Most of the property that American citizens own in Germany is controlled by great corporations. Now, I do not desire to see their property confiscated in Germany, but Mr. Palmer said, and we know it to be a fact, that where there is one dollar's worth of American property invested in Germany there are more than a hundred dollars of German property in America. Where they strike one blow at us in confiscating American property we strike the blow a hundredfold in taking theirs.

More than that, if you read this provision as it stands, and this declaration of Congress as it stands, with these weasel words in the belly of the act to-day, that this property shall be held by the custodian and can only be sold if it be necessary to prevent waste or for the protection of the property; it is a clear declaration that we are holding this property as a protection to the German millionaire and the German junker.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARREN in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to see if I understand this proposition. Under the original alien-enemy property act, it was the property of alien enemies not residing in this country which could be taken and sold?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the Senator is wrong.

Mr. KELLOGG. I thought I so understood the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My friend from Minnesota was not present when I made my original statement.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I was not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The amendment that is before the Senate does not change the law as it is on the statute books, except in one particular. It does not change it at all as it passed the Senate originally. In conference, after the authority to sell, which was given by the Senate and given in the original act, somehow these words crept in, "if and when necessary to prevent waste and for the protection of the property," which, of course, limited the power of sale to that purpose. The amendment that is offered by the Senate committee, although it is long, leaves out those words and does not change it in any other respect.

The amendment, as does the law to-day and as it is presented here, allows the alien-enemy property custodian to take over any alien property, whether it be foreign owned or domestic owned. That is the law now, but when he gets it the law now requires him to keep it for the benefit of the German citizen.

Mr. KELLOGG. I thought that was the law, but I misunderstood the Senator's statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The law requires him to keep it for the benefit of the German citizen. Mr. Palmer states, and it is true, that a vast deal of this property is well invested, is paying property, and is making vast profits.

If we keep this property in the custody of the Government of the United States, we will run it profitably, and we have got to do that, for we want the property; a great deal of it is making the munitions of war that we want to use; it is making the clothes for the soldiers; it is making shoes for the soldiers. Of course, it will be sold on the same market price as other property. When the proceeds of the sale go into the custodian's hands we shall be vastly multiplying the German interests and building up their property.

I do not know what is going to happen when the treaty of peace is made. I do not know whether any of this property will ever go back to the Germans or that its money value will go back to them. Certainly not one dollar ought to go back to them until they have paid for the American ships that they have sunk in violation of this treaty, and until they have paid for the property of American citizens which they have destroyed. When they agree to do that it will be time enough for us to agree to return their property. But in no event ought they to get more than the value of the property as it stood when war was declared. If you leave this proposed act unamended, in the Treasury of the United States are accumulating vast sums of money for the junker class of Germany, without threat and without danger, to encourage them to carry on the war.

I say that the passage of this provision is just as necessary for the preservation of the American Republic, for the upholding of the hands of our soldiers on the battle front, as was the other great legislation that has been passed in these appropriation bills. I say that in my judgment this legislation ought to appeal to the patriotism of the Senate and to that of the American people; it should be put on the statute books at once, so as to deliver the most telling blow that I think can be delivered to the very men in Germany who have forced this war on the American Republic.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am impelled to say a word in view of what appears to be the general assumption of those Senators who have participated in the debate on this amendment, that Germany is acting toward the property of American citizens just as the United States is acting toward the property of German subjects. The disposition of this very important question seems about to be made on that basis.

I am not myself informed as to just what the German Government is doing with property in Germany which is owned by American citizens. I assume that that Government is pursuing, as she always does, a policy of an enlightened or an unenlightened self-interest. I assume that property, subject to the taxes of the German Government, subject to be commandeered as other property may be by that Government for the carrying on of this wanton war of conquest which Germany started, and which she is now conducting, she may protect and preserve; but I was not under the impression that this Government had adopted the same policy toward the property of German citizens, either in Germany or in the United States or upon the high seas, that not only German subjects but the German Government has adopted, not only toward the property in this country but toward the lives of American citizens. I was not aware that the ambassador, for instance, of the United States at Berlin, while he was enjoying there the protection of the German Government, while police were beating their march back and forth in front of the American Embassy, was at the same time behind closed doors in the secret chambers of that embassy collecting money and hiring spies and murderers to burn or dynamite the property of German subjects, and to ruthlessly destroy the lives of all who might be occupying that property; and yet it seems to me that it is not long since it was quite a familiar story, founded upon documentary evidence that is now on file in the State Department and in the secret archives of the Department of Justice, that the German ambassador in this country—and I have walked frequently by the building which sheltered him during the stay which we hospitably offered him here and have seen the protection of the police jealously guarding him and his property and the property of his Government from any injury whatever—and yet those documents show that, while he was the subject of our particular care, he himself was employing individuals to go out with dynamite and with torch to destroy and to burn the property of American citizens and take the lives of American workmen who were employed in our factories.

I am somewhat surprised to hear this question debated now as though we had pursued that policy toward Germany and it was a question of balancing the one treatment against the other. Why, it is not very long, Mr. President, since there were published in important newspapers in New York City advertisements to the effect that American citizens who pursued their rights to take passage upon a merchant vessel would do so at the risk of being drowned, by order of the German Government, without warning and without notice. I do not remember any incident in the conduct of the United States toward Germany of that kind; yet we hear talk of treaties and very punctilious regard for the treaty of 1799 between the United States and Germany. Why, have the Senators who are so particular that we must abide by the very spirit and letter of the treaty of 1799 with Prussia, assured themselves that that was not one of the treaties that Bethmann von Hollweg tore up as a "scrap of paper"? I think the world has been more or less familiar with the tearing up of treaties by Germany. There are treaties with the German Government that protected the rights of neutrals engaged in commerce upon the seas; there are treaties with the German Government that gave this Government certain rights upon the high seas. Is this one of the treaties that were torn up when the German Government undertook to go upon the high seas and to mark out certain areas and to say that the citizens of the United States could not pass that way?

There are certain treaties, Mr. President, that protect the rights of neutral countries. We ourselves were a party to a treaty, which was also signed by the German Emperor—and I think those were the two first signatures upon it—that protected the rights of Belgium. Is this treaty of 1799 more sacred than that one or of more importance?

There is a treaty with the German Government, Mr. President, which binds that Government to abide by those principles of humanity which were attempted to be embodied in The Hague treaty protecting the rights of neutrals, defining the rights of belligerents upon the high seas and on land, and enforcing the rules of civilized warfare. Is that treaty of 1799 among those which were violated when the Germans lined up women and children in Belgium and shot them and mutilated the bodies of the innocent victims of a war of conquest against a peaceful and neutral country?

While we are caring for German prisoners at Hot Springs, at Asheville, and at other pleasant resorts, and in pursuance of old treaties paying them salaries which the men and officers of equal rank in our Army and Navy receive, they are cutting out the tongues and subjecting to starvation and brutality of every imaginable kind the prisoners of this country whom they have captured. And are we to say, in the face of all those things, that because there are certain provisions which are of doubtful application to the question involved in this amendment we are to resolve all those doubts in favor of the German Government and to hesitate in protecting our own interests in the disposition of this vast property, which Germany, in pursuance of a deliberate plan of universal power, has built up in the United States, as she has in almost every other country in the world?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. May I make an inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Does the Senator understand that any Senator is arguing on the floor that that treaty has any force or that it should cover these properties, or that we can not with propriety pass this proposed legislation? If he has that impression about anything that I have said in calling attention to the treaty, I want to disabuse his mind of it. My whole purpose was to ascertain whether that branch of the Government which deals primarily and almost exclusively with our foreign affairs regarded this treaty of 1799 as in force or not. That was the whole object I had in bringing the treaty to the attention of the Senate.

Mr POINDEXTER. I think I understand the position of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I am very glad he has made it clear, although the Senator inquired whether this property was to be disposed of under the terms of that treaty or not.

Mr. KNOX. Whether that was the administration's view.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And other Senators—I think among them the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]—argued that we should be very careful about the enactment of this proposed legislation until we had carefully studied the terms of the treaty of 1799. I had also in mind——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think if the Senator had been present and heard me that he would admit that the whole purpose of my remarks was to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that this amendment had received no consideration while it was in the committee; that the existence of the treaty of 1799 was not known, I think, by any member of the committee, and that it was a mistaken practice, which we have grown into to bring in important amendments, which may involve international questions, and ask the Senate to consider them before they first have been considered by the appropriate committee. I expressed the hope that this amendment might be defeated for the purpose of having it sent to the appropriate committee for consideration and report so that the Senate might act with full information.

It has been suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] that we do not know what the policy of our Government is on this question. If the question had been submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations and inquiry had been made, we would have learned precisely what policy our Government has adopted in respect to the treaty in question and whether it is believed because the treaty has been violated in other respects, it should be treated as of no consequence in respect of this particular question.

That is the only object that I had in bringing this matter up. I did not like the way it was brought into the committee nor the way it was reported to the Senate, and I wanted to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate. That was the whole object I had in taking the course I did.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand that was the Senator's attitude, and yet the matter is now being discussed upon the basis of the treaty of 1799, undoubtedly without the consideration that the Senator very justly says it should have had in the committee.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. As in the case of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I thought the Senator's remarks were perhaps leaving a false impression.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am glad the Senator has corrected that, if it has existed. The treaty of 1799 has been the subject of a good deal of public discussion; it was before the Federal court at Norfolk in the case of the disposition of the Appam, a British vessel that was captured by the Germans and brought into that port by a prize crew. At that time we became more or less familiar with the application of the treaty from the daily reports of the progress of that case. But to say, Mr. President, that in the determination of the policy of the United States with regard to this astonishing interest of Germany in the industrial and mercantile affairs of this country we are bound by the verbiage of obsolete treaties with Prussia, while she is casting all treaties, all humanity, all the teachings of civilization, to the wind, seems to me to put us in more or less of an absurd situation.

I agree entirely with what has been said by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] that the policy which should be pursued in this case in regard to this property is that policy which our judgment dictates. I believe that it should be a beneficent policy, but it should be a just policy. If Germany has cast behind her the teachings of a thousand years of civilization, if she has set up the doctrine of brute force against the teachings of humanity, which the experience of mankind has shown to be for their best interests, if she has leagued herself with anarchists and bolsheviki and their counterparts in the United States in the doctrine that might is the only supreme law, it does not follow that the United States must imitate her example; but I maintain that at least we are free to decide, and ought to decide, upon the merits of the case according to our own judgment as to the disposition to be made of this property, regardless of the wishes or the desires of Germany or the terms of past treaties which have been disregarded by that Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, while we deliberate the German Government destroys; while we are scrupulously weighing the rights of the respective citizens or subjects of the German Government under treaties that are suspended, as a matter of fact, by the clash of arms, the German Government is levying tribute upon the inhabitants of conquered territory, upon the mayors and the legislative authorities in the various municipalities, is taking their property without scruple, without question of treaty rights, of international law, or of the municipal law of the country concerned. They are interested solely in what they have the power to do at the point of the sword.

Among the German authorities to-day there is not being debated the question of the rights of American citizens under a treaty; if they are debating anything at all they are debating what they can take and what they can hold.

It is a striking commentary on the difference between the two Governments and the two forms of rulers that we in the Senate are to-day discussing the rights of German aliens nonresident here, while Germany herself is engaged, not in discussing the rights of the conquered territory of Russia or of Belgium or of any of the Balkan States, but merely in discussing the best way of taking what she can by force and holding it. It seems to me, instead of scrupulously weighing the rights of nonresident aliens—and belligerents at that—under treaties of 100 years ago, I would prefer for myself to decide my vote this afternoon or hereafter on the question as to how that Government is conducting itself in the treatment of the personal and property rights not of our own people alone but, what is of infinitely more concern, the peoples that are in her grasp. If she were holding persons and property and territory within the limits of the United States Germany would not be debating this afternoon about our rights, but she would be taking the property, putting it into condition to carry it as an engine of war against us in conducting successfully to a conclusion the combat in which she is engaged with us.

Now, Mr. President, so much of the treaties as may be in force can be considered when we and our allies sit at some future time in the settlement of that question. I do not believe in suspending treaties merely because the country is at war, but I believe in taking out of the hands of the enemy within our territory every possible instrumentality that can be used against us.

There is a very significant feature of Mr. Palmer's testimony before the committee. I heard him give it, and it loses nothing of its strength by being read in cold type. Speaking of the Hamburg-American Line and of the North German Lloyd Line, he speaks of the efforts that they had been making in the transfer of ships, right at the time war was declared, which were lying in a neutral port without the continental United States. Arrangements were practically concluded for the purchase of those ships between the two Governments at a price of $1,900,000. Then they superadded conditions to that which were rejected by the representatives of this Government, under which they would have $2,500,000 lying in the United States Treasury as a fund with which to begin business, with their terminal facilities at Hoboken of these two companies, to compete with us commercially at the end of the war, fully equipped for trade. They are looking out for that at this time.

Their representatives in this country frankly said—that their idea was that when the war was over they should have a capital fund of $2,500,000, their terminal facilities at Hoboken, and their home office in New York to immediately start to do business; and it looked like too big a price to pay for those two ships.

Says Mr. Palmer—

And so the terms were rejected.

Apart from that, I am not responsible for the shipping-bill act which was passed. I voted against it, but it is the law of this country. We are now using its facilities for the creation of a vast merchant and transport fleet, and a very large sum of money will be expended for that purpose. When the war ends, or before, we will have constructed a great merchant shipping. These terminal facilities owned by the North German Lloyd and the Hamburg-American Line are facilities, piers, and wharves that ought to be owned by the United States. When the war is over the shipping facilities, our merchant ships, and all the transport service, and everything that goes with the operations of the Shipping Board, will be the property of the United States in fact. Now, what is the use of having naked vessels afloat on the ocean and no terminal facilities, even when the war is over? Say nothing of it when the war is in progress; we can justify it as a war measure now; but when the war is ended we will have a vast fleet in the transport and merchant service of the country, with no adequate terminal facilities at the principal harbor or port in the United States.

Mere considerations of business prudence, apart from war purposes, if we looked at the matter no further than that, would induce us to take the title to this property and hold it as a necessary incident of the program of the Shipping Board. It is true that we will pay something for it. Let that be so; but when we pay for it, it is the property of the United States. After the war ends, in five years, unless Congress should amend the shipping act, we will dispose of all this great merchant fleet. When we dispose of the merchant ships, if we have the terminal facilities we can the better not only dispose of the ships but of the terminal facilities as an entirety. It is like a railroad. Terminal facilities for a railroad are almost as important as the carriers themselves. If we have these facilities taken over as contemplated by this amendment, we can sell them in time of peace for more, in all probability, than they will cost us even at war prices. It is the part of good business prudence to do so.

There is another reason Mr. Palmer gave which I think is a sound business reason. Why should we keep these properties in time of war and operate them, all the way from brewing beer in Chicago to making lead pencils in New Jersey, with all the consequent profit that grows out of war operations, and then, at the end of the war, turn back the plant, the principal, to the German citizens with a profit attached? I do not believe in that. I believe in taking the title to this property, and if there is anything earned during the war let it go into the Public Treasury, and let the principal that is represented at the time we take the property remain in the Treasury and be turned over to the German citizens at the conclusion of the war.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senate should feel under obligations to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] for directing our attention to the provisions of the treaty of 1799 with Prussia in connection with this very important measure. The fact that the treaty was not considered at all by the committee reporting the bill is the best possible reason for our considering it before we take a final vote upon the bill.

The United States has justly prided itself upon the strictness with which it has observed its treaty obligations. With one most unfortunate and deplorable exception, our treaties have been justly regarded, as the Constitution itself provides, as part of the supreme law of the land. Whatever other nations with which we have treaty obligations may have done, we have been and should be guided in these matters by what our covenants provide; and if it be true that this treaty may restrain us from interfering with the property of Prussian nationals in this country to the extent provided by this amendment we should give it very grave consideration before final action is taken.

Article 23 of the treaty of 1799 has been read to the Senate in connection with the last sentence of the succeeding article, which recites in substance that it and the preceding article were made for the express purpose of defining our conduct during war, and therefore could not be abrogated upon the pretext that war nullifies all treaties.

So far as I am concerned, and forgetting for a moment the brutalities of our enemy, if I were of opinion that the treaty obligation outlined in article 23 bound us to such a strict observance of its requirements as to necessitate the rejection of the proposed amendment, I should, notwithstanding my convictions of the right and necessity of the law, hesitate before I would vote for it.

Mr. President, the treaty of 1799 is composed of a considerable number of articles, and was evidently designed to cover all subjects that might become important in the relations of the two countries with each other. They must be 30 or 35 in number. The first question which addressed itself to my mind—and I want to discuss the subject, as far as I can, from a purely legal standpoint—is the extent to which article 23 goes. Does it prevent our interfering with or taking possession of the property of German nationals in this country? And, of course, that question should be first considered independently of Germany's conduct regarding other articles of the treaty, to which I will come later.

The most remarkable circumstance relating to this question has been furnished by Germany herself. I called the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to it before he yielded the floor. I refer to the proposed addition or amendment to that article of the treaty which the German Government sought to impose upon our ambassador after our diplomatic relations were severed as a condition to his receiving his passports and safe conduct from Berlin to the United States. It is evident that the German Government never would have sought to exact this remarkable addition to that article, so far as it affects this question, unless it were of the opinion that its provisions were insufficient to safeguard all property of German subjects in the United States during the war.

Mr. Gerard says that one of the ministers of the foreign office, Count Montgelas, presented to him and demanded his signature to a document entitled "Agreement between Germany and the United States of America concerning the treatment of each other's citizens and their private property after the severance of diplomatic relations." I shall not read it all. It consists of nine specific articles. Articles 1 and 4 are important, however, and I will read them:

ARTICLE 1. After the severance of diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States of America and in the event of the outbreak of war between the two powers the citizens of either party and their private property in the territory of the other party shall be treated according to article 23—

And I digress here to say that that is the only article of the existing treaties between the two countries referred to in this proposed supplement—

according to article 23 of the treaty of amity and commerce between Prussia and the United States of July 11, 1799, with the following explanatory and supplementary clauses.

Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, without reading, the entire proposed agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Agreement between Germany and the United States of America concerning the treatment of each other's citizens and their private property after the severance of diplomatic relations.

ARTICLE 1. After the severance of diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States of America, and in the event of the outbreak of war between the two powers, the citizens of either party and their private property in the territory of the other party shall be treated according to article 23 of the treaty of amity and commerce between Prussia and the United States of July 11, 1799, with the following explanatory and supplementary clauses:

ART. 2. German merchants in the United States and American merchants in Germany shall, so far as the treatment of their persons and their property is concerned, be held in every respect on a par with the other persons mentioned in article 23. Accordingly they shall, even after the period provided for in article 23 has elapsed, be entitled to remain and continue their profession in the country of their residence.

Merchants, as well as the other persons mentioned in article 23, may be excluded from fortified places or other places of military importance.

ART. 3. Germans in the United States and Americans in Germany shall be free to leave the country of their residence within the times and by the routes that shall be assigned to them by the proper authorities.

The persons departing shall be entitled to take along their personal property, including money, valuables, and bank accounts, excepting such property the exportation of which is prohibited according to general provisions.

ART. 4. The protection of Germans in the United States and of Americans in Germany, and of their property, shall be guaranteed in accordance with the laws existing in the countries of either party. They shall be under no other restrictions concerning the enjoyment of their private rights and the judicial enforcement of their rights than neutral residents; they may accordingly not be transferred to concentration camps, nor shall their private property be subject to sequestration or liquidation or other compulsory alienation, except in cases that under the existing laws apply also to neutrals.

As a general rule, German property in the United States and American property in Germany shall not be subject to sequestration or liquidation or other compulsory alienation under other conditions than neutral property.

ART. 5. Patent rights or other protected rights held by Germans in the United States or Americans in Germany shall not be declared void, nor shall the exercise of such rights be impeded nor shall such rights be transferred to others without the consent of the person entitled thereto; provided that regulations made exclusively in the interest of the State shall apply.

ART. 6. Contracts made between Germans and Americans before or after the severance of diplomatic relations, also obligations of all kinds between Germans and Americans, shall not be declared canceled, void, or in suspension, except under provisions applicable to neutrals.

Likewise the citizens of either party shall not be impeded in fulfilling their liabilities arising from such obligations either by injunctions or by other provisions unless these apply also to neutrals.

ART. 7. The provisions of the Sixth Hague Convention relative to the treatment of enemy merchant ships at outbreak of hostilities shall apply to the merchant vessels of either party and their cargo.

The aforesaid ships may not be forced to leave port unless at the same time they be given a pass recognized as binding by all the enemy sea powers to a home port or a port of an allied country or to another port of the country in which the ship happens to be.

ART. 8. The regulations of chapter 3 of the Eleventh Hague Convention relative to certain restrictions in the exercise of the right of capture in maritime war shall apply to the captains, officers, and members of the crews of merchant ships specified in article 7 and of such merchant ships that may be captured in the course of a possible war.

ART. 9. This agreement shall apply also to the colonies and other foreign possessions of either party.

Berlin, February —, 1917.

Mr. THOMAS. Article 4 of that document reads as follows:

The protection of Germans in the United States and of Americans in Germany and of their property shall be guaranteed in accordance with the laws existing in the countries of either party.

Not by this treaty, but by the laws of the United States with regard to German subjects and their property, and the laws of Germany with regard to American citizens and their property.

They shall be under no other restrictions concerning the enjoyment of their private rights and the judicial enforcement of their rights than neutral residents; they may accordingly not be transferred to concentration camps nor shall their private property be subject to sequestration or liquidation or other compulsory alienation except in cases that under the existing laws apply also to neutrals.

As a general rule German property in the United States and American property in Germany shall not be subject to sequestration or liquidation or other compulsory alienation under other conditions than neutral property.

Mr. President, the German foreign office is generally represented by the keenest intellects in the Empire. They are thoroughly familiar with their treaty obligations, notwithstanding that it has become their custom to disregard or violate them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, is this an interpretation placed upon this treaty by the foreign office?

Mr. THOMAS. I so consider it. Of course, my opinion may be incorrect, but I am unable to understand why the German Government took advantage of the necessity then confronting our ambassador of securing passports and safe conduct by trying to compel him to sign this document as a condition to his receipt of his passports, if the German foreign office considered the existing treaty obligations with this country as being sufficient to protect and safeguard the property of German subjects in the United States in the event of war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. To say the least, if our ambassador had signed such a document, it would not have risen to the dignity of a treaty.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, of course not. The ambassador's signature to these articles would have been of no binding force upon the United States. But Germany wanted it; and the fact that she wanted it at that time and by these means seems the best possible evidence of her construction of the treaty as being insufficient to accomplish the objects for which article 23 was designed. She felt, in all probability, that, given this agreement, she could utilize it during the war, and in the event she was victorious she could enforce its provisions after the war, and demand reparation from us had we failed to recognize it.

But, Mr. President, there is another view of the situation with regard to article 23. It is very specific. It distinguishes merchants and their property from other individuals in other classes of occupation. Merchants are given nine months in which to arrange their affairs, dispose of their effects, and leave the country. All others are permitted to continue their usual employment, and shall not be interfered with. Of course, merchants failing to take advantage of the nine-months' provision can no longer claim exemption. On the other hand, in 1799, as the Senator from Pennsylvania suggested, there existed no great combinations of capital engaged in the production of manufactures upon a colossal scale. Perhaps they were not dreamed of, and there is nothing in the phraseology of this article which is broad enough to require us, either legally or morally, to include corporations—these huge manufacturing combinations, these artificial persons—within the purview of this article; that perhaps was one of the reasons which moved the German foreign office to demand the expansion of this clause. If I am correctly informed, all of the property which has been seized by the Alien Property Custodian is the property of corporations. I ask the Senator from Alabama if that is not correct?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I think that is correct. I can not speak with absolute authority, but my understanding is that practically all the property that has been seized is corporate property.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly it must be true that no alien in the peaceable pursuit of his employment, and owning property, has been interfered with.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is absolutely the fact.

Mr. THOMAS. That being the case, although I quite agree with the Senator from Alabama that if there has been a violation of this treaty it has already occurred in the enactment of the alien-property law, then the literal provisions of the article have been adhered to; the property of merchants is now subject to sequestration and confiscation, the nine months having expired; the property of others mentioned in the article has not been interfered with, but we have seized that class of property belonging to artificial creations coming into existence subsequent to this treaty, and which, of course, could not then have been contemplated.

Furthermore, Mr. President, these huge organizations have been, and unless they had been interfered with might have continued, in the exercise of their occupations in the production of vast quantities of manufactured goods, to be used inimically to the interests and welfare of this country, either directly or through the vast profits which are made in their manufacture, thus placing a large fund in the hands of alien enemies in this country having an artificial corporate existence. Now, the law of self-preservation, Mr. President, is the first law of nations, as of individuals; and under such circumstances, in the absence of some specific treaty prohibition, coupled with the absence of a violation of the treaty by the German Empire upon its part, that principle of self-preservation requires us to take this property and to hold it, lest it be otherwise used to the detriment of the Republic.

So that my own view is—though I have not been able to give the question that earnest and serious consideration that it deserves in the brief time that has elapsed since it has been brought before the Senate—in consideration of these circumstances, the Congress rightly passed the alien-property law; and this is merely the logical sequence of that statute, since otherwise these huge accumulations and the conduct of these businesses would only tend in the long run to embarrass, if it did not seriously interfere with, the progress of the war.

But, Mr. President, there are other provisions in this treaty relating to the use of ports and harbors which Germany and her subjects have disregarded, thus justifying our abrogation of the whole. We know that all German vessels of any consequence interned in our harbors by the war have been converted into arsenals, into the meeting places of conspirators against the citizens and the Government of the United States. We know that destructive machines of various kinds were made in these ships while sheltered under the provision of the treaty which forbids search and seizure except under circumstances specified therein. We know, Mr. President, that many a neutral ship has been sent to the bottom of the sea since this war began by bombs manufactured in the holds of German vessels enjoying the protection of neutrality in the harbors of New York and the other ports of this country, and we also know that from them have issued, from time to time, in distinct violation of other provisions of this treaty, weapons and sustenance to conspirators charged with the obligation and armed to destroy American factories, make war upon friendly neighboring neutral countries, and in other ways promoting the cause of Germany in this world-wide war under the shield of our neutrality. Knowing this, in addition to the deficiencies of this particular article, we have the right to conclude, because the facts justify it, that Germany herself, before we entered this war, violated other provisions of this treaty, and therefore released us from all legal or moral obligation to regard it at all.

So, Mr. President, I think we can with perfect impunity, and especially in view of the opinion of the State Department that this treaty obligation will not be in anywise infringed by the enactment of the proposed measure, write it upon the statute books of the country, so that this vast enemy property may be made to contribute instead of antagonize our prosecution of this war.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have waited until the conclusion of the debate upon this amendment to say what I am now about to say, and to say which will require only a few moments.

On Saturday the deficiency bill, now pending, was brought before the Senate at about this hour—that is to say, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Just about that time a distinguished Senator of long service and high character said to me that he was of the opinion that the amendment now under discussion was probably violative of our international or treaty obligations. Shortly thereafter the Senator from Virginia presented this amendment. When it was offered from the floor I had had no time to examine it; and so, in view of what I have stated, I asked the Senator from Virginia, in charge of the bill, to let it go over until the next legislative day, which is to-day. I asked that because of what had been said to me; I desired to examine the amendment and to examine for my own satisfaction the question or questions involved which had been suggested to me. That was my reason for requesting that the amendment should lie over for the day.

Mr. President, for myself, I felt that if it were true, or if in my opinion I found it to be true, that the proposed amendment was violative of our obligations under any treaty we had made, we ought not to follow a bad example of regarding treaties made by the United States as "scraps of paper." I felt, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has expressed his feeling, that one of the proud things in our national life is that the United States stands by its plighted faith. I want that record maintained now even more than ever, no matter whether to our advantage or not. Never has there been a time when our Government should be more scrupulous in this regard. Therefore I wanted to look into the matter before acting. In the interval I have looked into it as far as I could.

I have reviewed the treaties between the United States and Prussia of 1799 and 1828—the treaties that seem to be relevant to the consideration of this particular question. Moreover, I have reviewed several of the standard works on international law bearing upon the question as to the effects of war upon treaties when the contracting powers subsequently become engaged in war with each other. I need hardly say that I noted the provisions of these treaties which refer to conditions growing out of a possible war between the contracting powers. I went over the whole case as well as I could in the brief time at my command.

Mr. President, I have no thought of entering into this discussion; I suppose the discussion is at an end. Anyhow, I do not wish to prolong it. I desired merely to say that as the result of my investigation of the subject I concluded that this legislation was proper, that it was permissible—that, considering all the circumstances, this law could be enacted without violating our national good faith.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not understand what the Senator's conclusion was. I did not hear what he said after he spoke of having read the treaties.

Mr. STONE. I stated that after reading the treaties and after examining authorities outside the treaties, my conclusion was that the legislation proposed can be enacted without a violation of our obligations to Prussia under the treaties. Possibly the question may be said to be a debatable one, but even if the scales were fairly balanced it is better for us in a time of desperate war to decide for our own country.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That any property, other than that sold to the United States, sold under this act shall be sold at public auction to citizens of the United States only and to the highest bidder.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I am not going to debate the amendment to the amendment. I am simply going to say that I hope sincerely the administration of this law will not be embarrassed by requiring an auction sale, but we will leave that to Mr. Palmer.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I simply want to say that the Alien Property Custodian if compelled to sell this property should offer it at public sale in order to protect minority stockholders so that they might have the opportunity to bid for the property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if in order, and I think it is, I ask that the amendment to the amendment be again read.

The Secretary again read Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LODGE] is absent, attending to important business.

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is absent on business of importance. He is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and withhold my vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily absent, to my colleague [Mr. PAGE], who is also necessarily absent, and I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to inquire if the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In that case I transfer my general pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] are detained by illness. I also wish to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Baird	Gronna	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Hale	New	Sterling
Calder	Hardwick	Norris	Sutherland

So Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], chairman of the committee, on behalf of the committee, as amended.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement I made on the former vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before, I vote

"yea." I should like to state that my colleague [Mr. LODGE], if present, would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] are detained by illness. I also wish to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are detained on official business.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. For that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], but I am informed that he would vote the same way that I did, and I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but as the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] announced that his colleague would vote as I would vote, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will state that if he were present he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 64, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—64.

Baird	Hollis	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Smith, S. C.

So Mr. MARTIN's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee if it is his intention to finish the bill to-night?

Mr. MARTIN. I think it is impossible to finish the bill to-night, and I intend to ask the Senate to take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to call attention to the item which I observe has been stricken from the bill on page 78. It is an appropriation of $250,000 for the Indian schools.

Mr. MARTIN. That was stricken out because a similar appropriation is in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that is true. Mr. President, but I want to call attention to the fact that in the Indian country many of these schools are about to close, and it may be three weeks or a month perhaps before the Indian appropriation bill is passed. I sincerely hope that the committee will reinsert this provision. It would be a tremendous loss to those schools to have them closed, and I am quite sure the Senate is unwilling to do that. I do not apprehend that there will be any objection to the appropriation. It was estimated for by the Indian Bureau.

Mr. MARTIN. The Indian appropriation bill is on the calendar, and I hesitate to carry the same item on two bills pending in the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to assure the Senator that it is not my desire to have it provided for in more than one bill; but I am quite sure it will take some time before we pass the Indian appropriation bill, and I see no reason why we can not just as well include the item in this bill as in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN. The Senator can bring it up to-morrow; but I must confess my objection to carrying an Indian appropriation bill item in this bill when the other bill is on the calendar. The Senator can, however, bring the question up to-morrow.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator objects to it, of course I will probably have to be content.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., Monday, March 11, 1918) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate March 11 (legislative day of March 8), 1918.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Wilson S. Hill, of Clarksdale, to be United States attorney, northern district of Mississippi.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 11, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God our Heavenly Father, whose ways are past finding out, we approach Thee in perfect faith and confidence, believing that Thou art supreme.

That in spite of all the terrible tragedies enacted about us and the awful disasters which overtake us, Thou dost rule and overrule for the eternal good of Thy children.

We pray for light to guide us in our undertakings, for strength to sustain us in right doing; that we may work together with Thee for the upbuilding of Thy Kingdom; that Thy will may be done in all hearts, in the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journals of the proceedings of Saturday March 9, 1918, and Sunday, March 10, 1918, were read and approved.

GIFT TO EX-REPRESENTATIVE FITZGERALD.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the gentlemen who acted as a committee in arranging for the gift to our former colleague, the Hon. John J. Fitzgerald, I ask to present a report, addressed to you, and to have it read by the Clerk, as well as Mr. Fitzgerald's response.

The SPEAKER. While this is not strictly a House matter, it pertains so closely to it that the Chair feels justified in having it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1918.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The committee having in charge the collection of funds for presentation of a suitable gift to Hon. John J. Fitzgerald upon his retirement from the House of Representatives beg leave to report as follows:

The total amount collected from Members of the House was $1,023. Mr. Fitzgerald was asked to make such selection of present as he, in consultation with Mrs. Fitzgerald, might desire. He has notified the committee of a purchase of a complete set of sterling-silver tableware in a suitable chest, 25 per cent more in quantity than actual cash paid therefor.

This bill has been paid by the committee, together with the bill for Christmas gift to Hon. JAMES R. MANN, who, at the time of the collection, was ill in a hospital in Baltimore.

There is a balance on hand of $4.09, which the committee has asked Mr. Fitzgerald to contribute to some war-charity fund. Mr. Fitzgerald's letter of acknowledgment accompanies this report.

Yours, very truly,

JAS. MCANDREWS.
JOHN J. EAGAN.
ALLEN T. TREADWAY.

NEW YORK, March 7, 1918.

Hon. ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR ALLEN: As I recently informed you, Mrs. Fitzgerald suggested that the memento from the House be some flat silver, her notion being that it would be something the use of which would constantly recall the great kindness of the Members, and could more readily be apportioned between our little girls after we are gone.

The chest of silver of more than 250 pieces has been delivered. It is a beautiful gift, and appreciated more than I can adequately express.

The brief period that has elapsed since my retirement has given me an opportunity to realize much more keenly the wonderful, wholehearted, and sincere friendship of my colleagues. It is a memory which is cherished most highly, and is the most precious heritage I shall leave my children.

May I again most heartily thank the House and acknowledge my great indebtedness to my former colleagues for their consideration.

As ever, very sincerely, yours,

JOHN J. FITZGERALD.

[Applause.]

LATE REPRESENTATIVE MAJ. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER.

Mr. LUFKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a copy of the resolutions adopted by the Massachusetts delegation in Congress on the occasion of the death of their former colleague, Maj. Augustus P. Gardner.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the resolutions of the Massachusetts delegation touching the death of Maj. Augustus P. Gardner. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUFKIN. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the permission given me by the House, I am presenting below a copy of the resolutions adopted by the members of the Massachusetts delegation in the House of Representatives on the death of their former colleague, Maj. Augustus P. Gardner. These resolutions were signed by every member of the delegation, regardless of party.

MEMORIAL.

We, the members of the Massachusetts delegation to the United States House of Representatives, subscribe to this memorial to the late Maj. Augustus Peabody Gardner, in manifestation of our deep affection for him and our high appreciation of his life service to his country. In his death we suffer the great personal loss of men who have known, from intimate association with him, his personal graciousness, charm, and unswerving loyalty.

We shall not, in this memorial, indeed we need not, make allusion to Maj. Gardner's high character, his great and varied abilities, his unrelenting industry, his stalwart and forceful personality. These are known to all men. We desire rather to refer to one phase of his career—the phase which history will emphasize as his greatest contribution to his country.

Maj. Gardner was in the truest and largest sense the proponent in the United States of the movement for its adequate military and naval defense. Before the echoes of the battle of the Marne had ceased Maj. Gardner had embarked upon his campaign. To it, for more than three years, he devoted himself, body and mind, with an energy and absorption which have seldom been equaled. It was a task requiring genuine courage and perseverance to arouse a peace-loving Nation to realization of the dangers of aggression from over seas. He met opposition, censure, and even insult. Undismayed and undeterred, however, he pressed unswervingly onward. The Nation has at length recognized the dangers which he foretold and the need of the remedies for which he appealed. To-day we are able to appraise, although, perhaps, still imperfectly, the supreme importance of the mission which he made his.

When war came to the Nation he at once resigned his seat in the House of Representatives. The insistent advocate in time of peace of national defense became in time of war one of the Nation's active defenders. His resignation in order to enter the Army was characteristic of the man, and indeed to those who knew him, inevitable. He deemed it his duty to fight. However great the sacrifice, he instantly made the decision and gave up the high place in Congress which 15 years of earnest labor had won for him.

Perhaps in a measure his life work—the awakening of the Nation—is accomplished. We hope that he died with that thought to comfort him. We hope that to his family there may be solace in the knowledge. But we wish that his great desire might have been fulfilled—the desire for which he sought and obtained not promotion but demotion in rank—the desire to go "over the top" in command of his men and in defense of his country.

He was a true friend, a true man, a true patriot. We shall miss him every day.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3471) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowance to enlisted men of the Army of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HOLLIS, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 7998. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village of East Dundee and the village of West Dundee to construct a bridge across the Fox River.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. POLK, for to-day, on account of important business; and

To Mr. CANTRILL, for three days, on account of death of a relative.

TAXES ON INCOMES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9248.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] makes the point that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the House resolving itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the bill H. R. 9248 will, when their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 312, nays 8, not voting 108, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] in the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with Mr. RUCKER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9248, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I want to ask whether or not general debate has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The first paragraph was read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the term "real estate" as herein used shall be construed to include lands, buildings, parts of buildings, houses, dwellings, apartments, rooms, suites of rooms, and every other improvement or structure whatsoever on land situated and being in the District of Columbia.

The word "person" when used in this act shall be construed to include individuals, partnerships, joint-stock companies, associations, corporations, societies, or bodies corporate.

Any word in this act importing the masculine gender shall be construed to extend and be applicable to females or artificial persons or bodies.

The term "income from real estate" as herein used shall be construed to include all amounts received for the daily, weekly, monthly or yearly use or occupancy of real estate or for any part of any of such periods of time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 1, line 4, by inserting the word "hotels" after the word "buildings." I myself do not believe that it is necessary, but since so many gentlemen have inquired of me as to whether or not it included hotels, I am apprehensive that perhaps they do not agree with me, and therefore I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 1, line 4, after the word "buildings," insert the word "hotels."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In connection with the amendment just offered, I wish to inquire whether this bill in its phraseology would extend to the charges made by the hotels in the local district and the incomes resulting therefrom in case the hotel property was leased to a third party? For instance, some years ago I remember reading that the Shoreham Hotel was leased to a certain manager at a rental—I have forgotten now what the amount was—for a term of years. The landlord is receiving a stated rental as provided in the contract of lease. I am not acquainted with the charges made at the Shoreham Hotel, but I am acquainted with the outrageous charges made by some hotel proprietors. Assuming that the manager of the Shoreham Hotel is exacting outrageous charges from guests that come here, as is the wont with some hotel proprietors, so that the income that he receives may be doubled or trebled over what he was receiving prior to December 31, 1916, would he be subject to the provisions of this act to the taxes herein provided?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My answer to the gentleman is that the bill would apply to both the owner and the lessee of the hotel property.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is there language that shows that it will apply to both?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is on page 5, in line 15. I may say to the gentleman that when we get to that place—and I wish he had reserved his inquiry until we get to it—I will move to strike out the words "real estate" and insert the word "property" or some other suitable amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Unless the gentleman wishes me to reserve the inquiry, let us see if the bill applies to the lessee. Would it apply to the income derived by the owner of the concession on the hotel property like a news stand or a floral stand?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not that be income from the use of real estate just as in the case of a lessee of hotel property who receives income?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will offer an amendment taking in those——

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am seeking to reach such a lessee of the hotel property.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman will not permit me to answer him.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am waiting for the gentleman to answer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No. The gentleman broke in on me every time I attempted to answer.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not intentionally do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I desired to say, and I now say, that in drafting the bill I had no intention to tax the girl who keeps the hats in the hotel or the canes or the umbrellas or any other of those little concessions. I did not bother with them. I thought the other was of sufficient magnitude to take up the attention of the House. I have no disposition to bother with those little concessions now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think any of us have. My inquiry is whether the bill in its present phraseology will reach the lessees of hotel property who are charging outrageous rates?

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have serious question about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will look at the definition in the bill he will find what he is after.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what does the gentleman refer, if I may ask?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Wisconsin is through, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question or two.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. This is an effort to tax the increased incomes upon real estate within certain limits in the District defined by the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is.

Mr. CANNON. And that applies to the owner or lessee, or whoever is in possession, I take it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The intention of the bill is to tax the income derived from every piece of real estate which is being excessively rented, no matter whether it be in the hands of the owner or a tenant.

Mr. CANNON. From 1916 up to the present time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I was busy in the committee room when the debate was held upon this bill. I have glanced at it, but only hastily. Does the gentleman anticipate that in the District of Columbia he breaks the way to outline similar legislation that will cover the whole United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would be very glad if it would.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can not speak for the other committees that may originate such bills?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No. That question has been put to me a number of times, and I have said that the District Committee has gone as far as its jurisdiction has permitted it to go in the premises.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Very well.

Mr. CANNON. The prices of rent and real estate have all gone up in ordinary parlance. Stating it in another way the purchasing power of money has gone down. That might be stated with equal truth. Now, take a man with $1,000,000 worth or $100,000 worth of merchandise, say, in a department store, who had that store in 1916. The price has advanced from 25 to 100 per cent. As money has decreased in its purchasing power the property on hand has advanced rapidly. Has any effort been made to reach those plutocrats?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know that I exactly understand the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I mean a man who in 1916 had $100,000 invested in goods in a department store, and who now sells them at 10 per cent or 25 per cent or 50 per cent greater profit than he would have made in the event that we had not had a war. Has there been any effort made to catch the wicked holders of personal property, as well as the holders of real estate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; the bill deals only with tax on incomes from real estate. I might say to the gentleman, however, that I am reliably informed that one of the ablest Members on the floor of this House was downtown a few days ago in company with a shoe manufacturer from his district, and the two gentlemen called upon a local retail shoe dealer who was handling the shoes made by this manufacturer, and when they walked into the store they caught the retail dealer in the act of selling for $12 a pair of shoes which the shoe manufacturer had sold to the retail dealer for $3.75. The shoe manufacturer remonstrated with him, but the fellow said, "Oh, I can get that here in Washington, and I shall continue to charge it." I wish that something could be done to cure that situation, but it has not been attempted in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. That is true all over the country, and not only in Washington, as I know from experience touching shoes and so forth. Does the gentleman suppose there is any public sentiment that would attempt to reach the corn and the wheat and the cattle and the horses and the whisky, and so forth, that have advanced in price as money has decreased in its purchasing power, and is there any attempt to handle those things in the District here by any such legislation as this?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. None that I know of. There is none in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. If we have the power to pass this bill, and if it should be sustained by the courts, then we could run and glorify, I take it, touching any property.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I shall be glad to cooperate with the gentleman in checking extortion wherever it may appear.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. What does the gentleman call extortion? Would he call it extortion in the case of Kentucky whisky, made at a cost of 12½ cents a gallon, that is now sold for I do not know what—$10 or $15 a gallon, is it not?

Mr. HOWARD. Whatever price the gentleman paid for the last that he bought. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I did not buy it. I am indebted to a distinguished Member of the House for a bottle of the best whisky I ever saw. I have not tasted any of it, but it has a wonderfully fine odor. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the price of whisky has been increased largely because of the additional tax on it, and also because the manufacture of it has been stopped—a proposition for which I voted.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; but in practice is that wicked man to be allowed to get that extraordinary advance on the price?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think the gentleman should undertake to justify the charging of exorbitant rents in the District of Columbia by comparing that with exorbitant prices for whisky.

Mr. CANNON. It runs all along the line. If there is equity in the one case, there ought to be in all of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment; but before speaking on it I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether or not at the hearing before the committee any evidence was given as to the percentage of real estate rentals in the District of Columbia to which this bill might apply? In other words, has evidence been produced showing how extensively so-called profiteering has been practiced?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Real Estate Brokers' Association appeared before our committee and said they could not find where advances had exceeded about 1 per cent; but I did not believe one-hundredth part of that statement.

Mr. TREADWAY. Have you found evidence that it does exceed 1 per cent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, I have received innumerable letters——

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize that the gentleman has a great many instances; but about what is the percentage of actual rentals in the city to which he thinks his bill will apply?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have not undertaken to make any percentages. The job is too big, either for me or for the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman whether the increases to which he refers have to do with the direct rental of the real estate or with the subletting by tenants?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Both; and the bill treats them all alike.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask which predominates in the records which the gentleman has?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I believe that the letters, telephone messages, and personal visitors who have come to me relative to these things show that the greater number of cases of raising the rent is by the owners and not by the tenants. I had a communication this morning giving a number of them. I received this communication just before I came over to the House. If the gentleman wants to hear the names, I will read them. The writer of this communication does not ask me to withhold his name, as a great many of them do. This communication is from William S. Waudby, an employee of the Census Bureau. He cites some instances that have come to his knowledge, in his neighborhood I believe, where the rents have been raised on the tenants by the owners of the property. The first case he mentioned is that of W. D. Ferguson, 3536 Warder Street NW., notice to buy or vacate by March 15. Owner, C. M. Clark, 1820 Kilbourne Street.

I may say just here that the owners recently have resorted to the scheme to raise rent by putting up to the tenant the proposition that he can either buy or get out. Of course, in most cases the tenant is not able to buy; and there is nothing left for him to do except to get out in the street, and then the owner rents the property to another tenant at a greater price.

Another instance is that of the writer of the letter himself, W. S. Waudby, 3408 Warder Street NW.; notice to quit April 3. Owner E. H. Gottwals, 3123 Warder Street.

Another instance is that of Arthur Jarvis, 811 Allison Street NW.; notice to vacate April 1; Jesse L. Heiskell, agent.

Another case is that of William L. Austin, 1412 Delafield Place; notice to vacate by July 1, by the owner.

Another is Ira Baker, 116 Fifth Street NE.; notice to buy or move, by Mr. Shields, agent or owner.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman does not suggest that a man should not be permitted to offer his property for sale?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Missouri had heard what I said a moment ago, that they were resorting to these subterfuges because some now have got cold feet about going to the tenant and exacting a greater rental.

Mr. MEEKER. I heard what the gentleman said, but the proposition is for the man to purchase the property or vacate it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He has to do one or the other.

Mr. MEEKER. Does the gentleman object to that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not if it is for a bona fide purpose; but if it is done as a subterfuge, I do object.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is there any principle under which this Congress can enact this character of legislation that would not give it the same right and authority over every article of commerce?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In my opinion, the Government has the right to impose an income tax on the profits derived from anything.

Mr. HARDY. And to make it so onerous that it practically amounts to price fixing by the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; to make it so onerous that it would prevent people from fixing exorbitant prices.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Now, will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will, but I want a little of the time myself.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman believe that the Government has the right directly to fix the price of rents?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That question is not involved in this bill.

Mr. HARDY. Has the Government the right to do indirectly what it can not do morally or legally or constitutionally?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I should say no, the Government could not do anything morally wrong.

Mr. HARDY. Can it do indirectly what it has not the right to do directly?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Whether it has that right or not, the Government has the right to fix an income tax on people who are extortioning. If that is what the gentleman means to inquire, I say, yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman claim that the Government has the right to fix prices?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman is as capable of answering that question for himself as I am for him. It is an argument instead of a question for information.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to this matter. There is a real estate exchange here, is there not, in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The ones who have been active in this matter call themselves the "Real Estate Brokers' Association."

Mr. TREADWAY. Whatever the title may be, is there any doubt that it is a reputable organization?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I regard it as a reputable organization.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thought I understood the gentleman to say that he did not believe one one-hundredth part of what they said.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is true; I do not think their information is correct.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood the gentleman to say that he would not believe one one-hundredth of the statements made before his committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I qualify that statement by saying that I do not believe that they have the information.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have had submitted to me what I think is bona fide evidence, and it is contrary to the gentleman's information. I am going to submit this information to the House rather than to the gentleman, as the gentleman has said he does not believe it. I am informed that that association is composed of 48 real estate owners or agents in the city, who have 26,000 tenants who pay $600,000 monthly in rentals, and that it shows an increase since September 30, 1916, of less than 1 per cent. So that all the profiteering that has been done, according to this testimony, has been done by people other than the original owners of the property.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman answer a question right there.

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If that statement is true, will this bill hurt anyone?

Mr. TREADWAY. But what earthly good is the bill if that statement is true and the gentleman can not submit evidence showing the percentage of the so-called profiteering? I realize that the gentleman has in his possession numerous cases, but where there are thousands and thousands of rentals in the city why should we legislate against a few who may perhaps be taking an unfair advantage of the tremendous demand for property here? That does not apply solely to Washington. Go to any city to-day and see if you can buy the same quality of shoes that the gentleman spoke of a moment ago at any better price. It is the case of supply and demand.

Let me make one illustration. I happen to have personal knowledge of this instance, in which a person having a rental of an apartment—and I know the person very well—the apartment was offered to be sublet for a period beginning the 1st of March. A customer was secured at the price which the person asked for it, and the very next day some one else came along and offered this tenant $50 per month more than the bargain had been made for the day before. It was an absolute offer of $50 a month, not in the way of trying to force anybody to rent the property at an advanced price, but the property had been rented to the tenant at a fair rental agreed upon, and the person voluntarily offered $50 a month more. Now, then, if there are many illustrations of that, as different Members can bring forward, why force impracticable and impossible legislation on the District just because we seem to have the power to do it? That is the attitude, it seems to me, of this whole matter.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get about three minutes in opposition to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, my judgment about this situation is this: Practically overnight 68,000 people have been added to the population of the city of Washington. I have had a good many personal experiences with constituents who have come here as clerks. For instance, they would get a wire from the War Department that they were wanted here to report as stenographers at $1,200 a year. They were probably getting $70 a month at home. They would get on a train and come up here, and then when they got here the main question in their mind was to get a place to lay their heads after they had finished their duties of the day. They would then start out to hunt a place. I had one constituent who came up here last Thursday as a stenographer in the War Department at $1,200 a year.

Mr. LANGLEY. Under civil service? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. A civil-service employee. That seems to interest the gentleman from Kentucky very much, because he has so few people in his district who can stand the civil-service examination. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. He has always been against the civil service on that account. I shall not yield right now, as I have something serious to say.

Mr. LANGLEY. I did not think the gentleman would. I could give the gentleman a poser if he would.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to say to the gentleman that I have not been able to get anybody appointed, because they are Republicans down in my district, although this is supposed to be a nonpartisan administration.

Mr. HOWARD. I knew, of course, that the people of the gentleman's district were dense ignorant, or they would not belong to the Republican Party. Getting back to this most serious question, let us start at the top and work down and see where the abuses have been carried on. As I started to say when I was interrupted by my genial friend from Kentucky, this young lady came up here, and she went out to procure board. She could not get board practically anywhere in Washington. All of the boarding houses were filled. Then she went to seek a room, and she had various and sundry offers made to her. The cheapest room she could get in the city of Washington in a private residence was $25 a month. They said, "If you do not want it, you need not take it; there will be plenty of people here who will pay it."

I know personally of a person who lives in my district who is paying $75 a month rent for a house in normal times. That lady has rented three rooms in her house, the three smallest and most inconvenient rooms in the House, and she gets $10 a month more for the three rooms than she is paying under the lease for the entire house.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. In just a minute. Let us take the Raleigh Hotel. I had a friend that came here in November, 1916. He brought his wife with him. It happened that he was assigned in 1916 to room 811 in the Raleigh Hotel. At that time, and his bill will show it, he paid $7 a day for that room. He was up here to spend last week and happened to occupy the identical room, and he paid $12 a day for it. Here is what is the matter—I do not believe there is going to be any very great necessity for this bill if we will do what we ought to do, and if you do not do it you are going to be hampered in getting the proper clerical force here to conduct this war. The Government of the United States ought to construct some buildings here, temporary in character, and let the bona fide clerks in the departments have those rooms at a nominal cost.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. And if you do not do it, you are not going to get any help. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROSE. I just want to say, in line with what the gentleman is saying, that a lady from the district I have the honor to represent came here and obtained a position. She found a room in which three other girls were placed, and was required to pay $1 a night for it.

Mr. HOWARD. I will tell you what the truth is. Any sane clerk who will come to Washington from your district or mine on a hundred-dollar-a-month salary under the present conditions ought to be bored for the hollow horn, because they can not get out on it.

Mr. HARDY. Would it not be a really wiser policy for the Government to expend even $100,000,000 to house these employees than to go into this scheme of fixing the price of everything?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know. This thing is dangerous, because I know these injustices are being practiced and people are profiteering.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more, as I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I thank the gentleman, and I yield to him with pleasure.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that all Georgians who have come here to Washington and secured jobs at $100 a month or less ought to be bored for the hollow horn? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. If they intend to stay under present conditions.

Mr. LANGLEY. My observation has been that every Georgian who comes here stays as long as he can hold his job. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. Well, we know where we can get in the limelight and be in a congenial climate, and we generally like to come to the Nation's Capital, because here we find a place where culture, refinement, and democracy hold sway. Georgians always seek the best of everything.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to say further that there are hundreds of educated, intelligent people in my district, notwithstanding the gentleman's innuendo a while ago, who would be glad to come here and get a place at $100 a month.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, they think they would——

Mr. LANGLEY. And they can not get these appointments.

Mr. HOWARD. They think they would. Now, let me put this proposition to you, gentlemen. They will have to pay $30 or $35 or, at the minimum, at least $25 for a decent room. Now, they have got to eat. All right. Three fried eggs and a fritter will cost $1 in Washington. Now, if these people do not live like most of the people in the gentleman's district, on huckleberries and blackberries, if they are used to eating meat and bread——

Mr. LANGLEY. I am told that they do not even have huckleberries in Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. I am talking seriously about this.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am, too.

Mr. HOWARD. I am talking of the cost of living. I will not yield any further.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. HOWARD. If you have a man paying $40 a month for something to eat, eating around at these eating houses, three meals a day, I suppose he would eat three——

Mr. LANGLEY. Two are a plenty.

Mr. HOWARD. Suppose he eats two, it will cost him $40 a month, and with $25 as a minimum for his room, there is $65 gone. Then you have got to add street car fare and your laundry. These people are obliged to wear clothes here under the law. [Laughter.] Now, where is there anything for a person coming to Washington as a clerk, getting $1,100 or $1,200 a year?

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I wish the gentleman from Kentucky would let me say what little I have got to say to the committee, because I know he has got nothing to ask. [Laughter.] Now, going on a little further about this proposition. These people who are eking out an existence that are living, are the old crowd that used to be here. Now, this is a pure, unadulterated case of supply and demand. Now, our patriotic friends, worlds of them from all over the country, have come to work for $1 a year. They are very patriotic, and we all appreciate the valuable services that they are rendering to their country in this extremity. But what have they done? They have gone to these hotels and taken what they call suites of rooms, and then business men who come here go down and they will strike a line at any reputable hotel of from a hundred to 200 on a waiting list for a place to sleep, and hundreds go to Baltimore at night to get hotel accommodations. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. There is where they ought to go. They go to Baltimore because they know where to get the best living.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I did not say anything but in reference to hotel accommodations. [Laughter.] Now, that is just the condition. Can you remedy it by this bill?

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. HOWARD. I will.

Mr. REED. I understand that some of the departments here have been interested in this housing problem and they have organized and they have an office in the Union Station. Did any of the clerks of whom the gentleman speaks avail themselves of that to see whether they could do any better or not?

Mr. ROSE. That is the very place. This lady I spoke about was sent there by that committee.

Mr. REED. I asked for information.

Mr. HOWARD. I was giving the gentleman actual cases which came within my own observation. Now, I know of people from my district who came here on the $1,100 basis and they caught the next train and went back after examining this question of the cost of living. That is the situation, and how are you going to correct it?

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. In a moment. The only way, in my judgment, gentlemen, that we can correct this evil that exists is to decrease the demand, and to decrease that demand the Government must step in and build buildings of a temporary character where those clerks who come here can get accommodations at a nominal cost. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman has been observing. What percentage of the people who come here must go to Baltimore?

Mr. HOWARD. Well, I want to say I have never been to Baltimore but once, and that was to attend a political convention. I know I missed a heap [laughter], but I understand it is a nightly occurrence—for instance, you go to any reputable hotel now and make application for a room the chances are ninety-nine out of a hundred you can not get in——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HOWARD. And they demand high prices.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read for information?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

So the amendment was again reported.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TINKHAM and Mr. LINTHICUM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is a member of the committee.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for section 1 and to give notice that if the substitute is successful, as the succeeding sections now before the House are reached I will move to strike out those sections and add the substitute sections of the substitute bill now offered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the general point of order against the substitute and give as a reason that the substitute is not now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute, as the Chair understands it, is offered for the first section of the bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] reserves a point of order. The Clerk will report the amendment by way of substitute.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk report the amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts has offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for section 1, offered by Mr. TINKHAM: Strike out after the enacting clause, beginning on line 3, page 1, down to and including line 7, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That by reason of the existence of a state of war it is essential to the national security and defense and for the successful prosecution of the war to establish governmental control and assure adequate regulation of rents of real estate in the District of Columbia during the war. For such purpose the instrumentalities, means, methods, powers, authorities, duties, obligations, and prohibitions hereinafter set forth are created, established, conferred, and prescribed. The President is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as are essential effectively to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent for 30 minutes in which to explain the substitute to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will be compelled to object to that. I think the time which the gentleman asks is unreasonable.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that I be given 30 minutes to explain my substitute.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understand, the gentleman has not offered section 1 of his amendment as a substitute for section 1 of the bill. What he proposes is to substitute the entire bill that he offers as a substitute for section 1 and gives notice to strike out the provisions of the existing bill if this amendment is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. TOWNER. That is the ordinary course of procedure. So instead of the Clerk reading the first section of the amendment which was offered as a substitute he should read the entire bill offered as a substitute for the first section.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Chair understands that I am reserving a point of order, I hope.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has reserved the point of order. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to debate the point of order?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, there is only one method by which one can offer a substitute for an entire bill, and that is the method I have stated. After the first section of the bill which is under consideration is read the person who offers a substitute moves to strike out that section and then he offers his entire bill as a substitute for the first section, giving notice that as each succeeding paragraph of the bill under consideration is read he will move to strike those out, and that, of course, makes it unnecessary that the entire bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] be read, because that is a part of his motion to strike out and substitute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not object to the matter being read; but I wish to be understood as reserving a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the impression, answering the parliamentary question at the same time, that under the rules and precedents of the House the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] is a substitute to the entire bill and not in order until after the bill has been read. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TOWNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNER. Was the point made understood by the Chairman? It was based upon the ground that the bill offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] was not germane to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What I said was that I made the general point of order, pressing for a moment the point that it was not now in order.

Mr. TOWNER. There has been no ruling in reference to the other question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa, and also to the gentleman from Kentucky, that, as the Chair understood, the gentleman made the point of order and the Chair sustained the point of order. There is nothing pending. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, there is hereby levied and shall be assessed, collected, and paid to the District of Columbia an annual tax of 100 per cent upon so much of the income from real estate of every person, whether resident or nonresident of said District, received since December 31.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Chair understood me. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman that the point of order has been decided.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not think the Chair would desire to rule upon a point of order when gentlemen desire to present their reasons.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that he listened with patience and interest to the gentleman's argument, and the Chair supposed that the gentleman had concluded his argument.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, I understand that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to be further heard on the point of order the Chair will do him the courtesy to hear him.

Mr. TOWNER. That is the proposition. Let me state this to the Chair: The Chair has passed upon the proposition as to the germaneness of this substitute——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to make a suggestion? No point was made that the amendment was not germane. The Chair did not decide that question and has not made any announcement whatever in reference to it.

Mr. TOWNER. What is the point, then?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made was that it was not in order at this particular stage of the proceeding to offer as a substitute for the section read a section of another bill, announcing at the time that the purpose of the gentleman who moved the substitute was, as each paragraph was read, to offer as a substitute a corresponding paragraph or section of the other bill.

Mr. TOWNER. That is exactly the point I was trying to make, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. This is the proposition, because the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] stated to me his purpose to offer the first section of his bill as a substitute for the first section of the pending bill, but the Clerk stopped reading.

What he intended to do was to offer as a substitute for the first section of the pending bill his entire bill, and therefore I suggested to the Chair that it was the duty of the Clerk to go on and read the entire bill offered by the gentleman as a substitute.

I still think that is the duty of the Chair to do. Of course, I think we came to this misunderstanding perhaps through no fault of our own; but now, in order that the gentleman from Massachusetts may not be deprived of his rights or that none of us may violate the precedents of the House, I ask that the Chair direct the Clerk to read the succeeding section of the bill which was offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts as a substitute for the first section of the pending bill. He gives notice that at each succeeding section of the bill, if his substitute is adopted, he will move to strike out, and that is in accordance with the universally accepted method adopted by the House. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Even that which the gentleman has offered as a substitute for the first section of the bill is not germane.

Mr. TOWNER. We will meet that when we come to it, because the substitute has not been read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Out of abundant caution, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, I make the point of order on the germaneness, regardless of the time when it will be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear gentlemen on that.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of orderly procedure in this House—and I care nothing about the amendment or either of the bills—it seems to me important that we should not, by a ruling made on a misunderstanding, make a precedent here which will return to plague us hereafter. It is, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] has clearly stated, the recognized procedure in this House that after one section of a bill has been read another bill may be moved as an amendment to that section, if germane. The question of germaneness has not been raised. Such a bill was presented as an amendment. Through a misunderstanding on the part of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] it perhaps was not clearly stated that it was intended as an amendment to the first section. It was so stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], accepted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and, as I understand it, was finally submitted by the Chair as a substitute for the first section, giving notice in the usual way that the usual motion would be made to strike out the succeeding sections of the bill as they were read.

Now, it seems to me that upon that state of facts, the point of order not having been made as to the germaneness, this amendment should be in order, and the entire bill should be read as an amendment to the first section of the pending bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman understands that I am reserving a point of order on that?

Mr. TILSON. I understand the point of order as to germaneness has been reserved and will be made later. I understand the precedents to be that a bill may be offered as a substitute for the first section of a pending bill, giving notice that the subsequent sections of the bill will be stricken out when reached if the amendment is agreed to. It seems to me that it is a matter of some importance in the procedure of this House and ought not to be hastily passed upon, especially under a misunderstanding.

Mr. MAPES. Unless the Chair has seen the precedents, I want to direct his attention to the statement in the Manual. On page 358, about half way down the page, there the Chair will find this statement:

> When it is proposed to offer a single substitute for several paragraphs of a bill which is being considered by paragraphs, a substitute may be moved to the first paragraph, with notice that, if agreed to, motions will be made to strike out the remaining paragraphs.

As I understand it, that is the parliamentary procedure and the practice of the House. That has been done on several occasions in the last three or four years to my knowledge.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what I did originally.

Mr. MAPES. Without any reference to the merits of the bill proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I think he is entirely in order in offering it as a substitute at this place. He gave notice that if the substitute was adopted he would move to strike out the other paragraphs of the bill as they are reached. That seems to me to be the proper procedure.

Mr. TOWNER. That has been done several times in the last few years, notably in the case of the Philippine bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe I can solve the problem by saying that enough had been read to show that it was not germane. I think I can show the Chair in a second that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky make the point of order now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make it now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will ask the Chair to take the bill and follow me in the reading of the first section.

Mr. TILSON. Will not the Chair dispose of the other matter first, because it is more important than either of the amendments? The Chair would do well to dispose of one question and then take up the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, and if gentlemen have concluded their arguments, the Chair will rule; the Chair will first make the statement that he is not alarmed at the suggestion that his ruling may impair the orderly procedure of the House in the future. The gentleman from Massachusetts offered the first section of the bill which he sent to the desk as a substitute for the first section of the bill under consideration.

Mr. TINKHAM. I offered the whole bill as a substitute, and then as a substitute for the first section I offered the first section of my bill, and then gave notice that as each succeeding section was read I would move the substitution of sections of my bill. But I offered the bill as a whole as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as he now explains his purpose; but if he had, the ruling would have been the same, because the Chair does not believe that under the precedents of the House this is the proper and orderly way to get the substitute before the House.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I read a paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. DOWELL. On page 358 of the manual I read the following:

> When it is proposed to offer a single substitute for several paragraphs of a bill which is being considered by paragraphs, the substitute may be moved to the first paragraph, with notice that, if agreed to, motions will be made to strike out the remaining paragraphs.

As I understand it that is the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], to offer this as a substitute for the first section and then give notice as provided by the manual that he will move to strike out the other paragraphs.

Mr. TINKHAM. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] to say that he offered the first section of his bill as a substitute for the first paragraph of the pending bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what he did.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is exactly what he did, and then said that as the other pending sections of the bill were reached he would move to strike out those sections and substitute the corresponding sections of his own bill, but this was not in accord with the precedents. For the language on page 358 of the manual reads in this way:

> When it is proposed to offer a single substitute for all of the paragraphs of a pending bill * * * it may be offered to the first paragraph, with notice that, if agreed to, motions will be made to strike out the remaining paragraphs.

But the gentleman from Massachusetts did not "offer a single substitute for all the paragraphs of the pending bill." He offered to substitute the first paragraph of a new bill for the corresponding paragraph of the pending bill. Therefore the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] made his motion in a way not in accordance with that precedent, and I think the ruling of the Chair was correct.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the situation grows entirely out of a misunderstanding. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] undoubtedly intended to offer his entire bill as a substitute for the pending bill, and he offered it at the proper time and place; but I think the Chair is correct that the gentleman did not offer it exactly as he intended. It seems to me that this matter can all be straightened out by now allowing the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] to offer his amendment as a substitute for the entire bill and have it read. I am sure there is no disposition on the part of anyone to take a technical advantage. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] can meanwhile reserve his point of order.

Mr. TILSON. That would clear it up.

Mr. MONDELL. And if the Chair will allow me, I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] be allowed to present his bill now as after the reading of the first section, as a substitute for the entire bill, to be read as such, the gentleman from Kentucky reserving all points of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUCKER). Before submitting the gentleman's request for unanimous consent, the Chair will again rule on the point of order which was made when the substitute was offered. The Chair does not believe the substitute was offered at the proper time. The Chair thinks the House is entitled to know what is in the bill being considered by the House, and that the bill must be read before a substitute for the entire bill is in order. The Chair adheres to that ruling and now submits the request of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] for unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] be permitted to offer at this time his substitute for the entire bill and have the substitute read, all points of order being reserved to the substitute. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, certainly nobody ought to ask me to agree that a substitute which I contend is not germane shall be offered. I do not want it considered at all, and I am reserving the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. MONDELL. The question whether the amendment is germane can not be determined until the amendment shall have been read. The gentleman from Kentucky personally may have read it privately, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to the fact that it can not be read until it is properly offered and until it is in order under the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent, then, that it may be offered.

Mr. BORLAND. Then the gentleman admits that it can not be read, of course, until it is offered in the proper time and in the proper way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the proposed substitute being read for information only, if that will serve any purpose. Otherwise I shall object.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman reserves all points of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I think I have got all points of order pretty well reserved.

Mr. MONDELL. The point of order that it is not germane or not offered at the proper place?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I shall be compelled to object to anything except that the substitute be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, there is hereby levied and shall be assessed, collected, and paid to the District of Columbia an annual tax of 100 per cent upon so much of the income from real estate of every person, whether resident or nonresident of said District, received since December 31, 1916, as exceeds the deductions herein allowed. For the purpose of ascertaining the amount of income subject to said tax, there shall be deducted from the gross income reported as herein provided so much thereof as equals the average amount charged for the use and occupancy of the same property for the same or a corresponding number of days, weeks, months, year, or 18 months, or for any part of any of such periods of time, in, of, or during the 18 months immediately preceding September 30, 1916, plus 10 per cent thereof additional except in cases where the property was rented or leased "furnished" during the period before September 30, 1916, entering into the computation, and is rented "unfurnished" during the taxable period, in which cases the said additional deduction shall not be allowed.

If no such income was charged or received during said period of 18 months, then the deduction from such gross income shall be an amount equal to 10 per cent of the value of the property producing the income, including furniture, if any, as determined by the assessor of the District of Columbia.

In cases where the property was rented "unfurnished" for the period before September 30, 1916, used in the said computation, and is rented "furnished" during the taxable period, then the additional deduction from such gross income shall be increased to 15 per cent.

If the real estate producing the income has been materially improved since September 30, 1916, there shall be an additional deduction from such gross income of an amount equal to 10 per cent of the actual cost of such improvements: Provided, That no such deduction shall be allowed for the cost of repairs made necessary or desirable by the ordinary wear and tear of rented or leased property.

No other exemption or deduction from such gross income shall be allowed. It is the intent and purpose of this act to tax at the rate herein fixed so much of every income from real estate as exceeds the deductions specifically authorized by this section.

Mr MAPES rose and was recognized by the Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that the committee amendment be voted on before he offers his amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. On page 2, line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "received," strike out the word "since" and insert the words "from and after."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAPES: Page 2, lines 13 and 14, after the word "after," strike out the words "December 31, 1916," and insert "April 1, 1918."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire recognition at this time?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this amendment I wish to say that I shall neither advocate its adoption nor shall I object to it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is just as much opposed to profiteering in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as I am. His amendment is prompted by no motive except to further the passage of the bill. For that reason I am not going to interpose any objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, if there is any opposition to it, I should like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will be recognized first.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it seems to me that this amendment, if adopted, would do away with a great deal of the objection to the bill. It would do away with all the retroactive features of the bill and would leave for the judgment of the committee the single question of what is a proper rent to be charged for the property within the District of Columbia. The bill allows an increase of 10 per cent over a certain prewar period. If this amendment should be adopted, the bill would become effective, or the rentals fixed by the bill would become effective April 1 of this year. That would give everybody notice, and it would not penalize anybody. It would put down the rent to the place which the committee thinks is a reasonable and proper place. It seems to me in all fairness that the amendment ought to be adopted. It would also do away with the objection on the part of the owners of real estate that the bill places a lien on the real estate of the owner for the profiteering of the tenant. The landlords can take care of the future in their leases.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I will.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's amendment fixes the date of April 1, 1918, but does it hark back to another portion of the bill? Will it mean advance in rent from 1918 or hark back to rents as they were in 1916? I am speaking about the increase.

Mr. MAPES. If I understand the gentleman's question, my answer is that the bill, if my amendment is adopted, would give the owner of the property the right to charge 10 per cent more than he charged during the prewar period, but it would not penalize him for what he received before the passage of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. That answers my question.

Mr. MAPES. A great many owners of real estate have rented their places in good faith. Whenever we have passed price-fixing legislation heretofore we have not attempted to make it retroactive. We have fixed the price of wheat; we have passed a bill authorizing the fixing of the price of coal and the price of sugar. We did not attempt to make that legislation retroactive. I think, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. MAPES Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Suppose that after December 31, 1916, and prior to April 1, 1918, the owner of real estate in the District of Columbia has made a lease of two, three, or five years, at a rental price higher than the prewar period What would be the effect of the gentleman's amendment on the terms of that lease?

Mr. MAPES. In a subsequent section of the bill, section 6, provision is made for leases made before October 1, 1916.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; before October 1, 1916; but I am asking about December 31, 1917, and subsequent to 1916, the period at which you fix the date in the original bill. Suppose a man made a lease yesterday for three years, at a higher rate than the prewar period, what would be the effect of your amendment? Could you take any part of his property without due process of law?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Section 5 deals with that proposition.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman's question would apply to the bill in its original form as well as with the amendment. After the 1st of April of this year, if the amendment which I propose is adopted, the owners of real estate will only be allowed to collect 10 per cent more than they charged during the prewar period.

Mr. BORLAND. Let us see about section 5. That is not the tax inspection; it says that all contracts in excess of a certain rate are declared to be against public policy and void. I take it the construction of that would be that it applied to the future, and that no court would put an ex post facto construction on it.

Mr. MAPES. The language of the bill does not attempt to do that. I did not make reference to that section in answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Missouri will yield, I will suggest that the constitutional provision relating to ex post facto laws relates only to criminal matters.

Mr. BORLAND. Of course; but to take property that has already been acquired without due process of law is unconstitutional.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is a provision of the Constitution which, of course, the gentleman is thoroughly familiar with, that no State can enact any law impairing the obligation of contracts; but, of course, that does not apply to the District.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have any strenuous opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. It simply makes the bill prospective instead of retrospective. My idea was that the whole constitutionality of the bill depends on the taxing power, the right to take property in the form of income tax. If the bill does not rest on that it would be difficult to say upon what principle it does rest. If it rests upon the taxing power, the question of retrospective operations is not so important as it would be upon any other constitutional power. I do not assume, because I have not studied the question, whether the tax theory is well grounded or not; I am going to leave that to the decision of other gentlemen who have examined it carefully. That is what I understand is the basis of the bill. If that is the basis of the bill and it be sound, the retrospective operation of the bill has nothing to do with it.

What is the practical effect of it? The practical effect is to leave out the period in which the greatest profiteering has been done.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the bill is founded on the basis that the gentleman suggests, will he tell me upon what basis you could sustain the provision in section 5, which will entitle a person who pays an excess to recover it? The taxing power can not be exercised by the Government in favor of individuals, but only in favor of the Government itself.

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to refer the gentleman to the gentleman from Kentucky. That section it appears to me to relate to the contract between the parties.

Here is what I want to call attention to in this connection. The greatest profiteering was done after the 1st of April, 1917. It was the war period. We brought these people here. We brought 30,000 employees here for the Government, and we brought fully as many more for the independent activities—these war committees.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, the gentleman does not contend that profiteering would not continue unless we take some action, and that we are bringing, according to the estimates, 20,000 additional employees this year into the District.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. Unfortunately it will continue unless some action is taken, and I am going to vote for the bill in the hope that it will accomplish the result. We ought not to have brought so many people here. That is perfectly manifest to my mind. I think we are doing a great injustice to the people themselves, and we are doing a great injustice to the taxpayers of the country in bringing a whole lot of people here.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. In just a minute.

Mr. KEARNS. I would like the gentleman to suggest a plan of eliminating the bringing of so many people here.

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to suggest that if we would make the employees that we already have work a full day's work that would tend to do it, and on that I hope I have the concurrence of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEARNS. That is the answer I wanted to get.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I am happy to believe that the gentleman will vote for that remedy. If we make these clerks here work a full day's work, we would bring fewer of them here, and if we brought fewer of them here there would be less opportunity for these real estate owners to gouge them and to gouge us, and to gouge the business men who come here to consult these subcommittees of the Council of National Defense, and to gouge everybody else who has to do business in Washington. We ought to reduce the congestion in Washington as much as we can. This is only one phase. We ought not to bring people here to work seven hours a day, and we ought not to permit those who are here in the Government employ to work only seven hours a day. As long as we have anyone here working seven hours a day, we ought not to go out into the country and hire any more to come here to Washington to work for seven hours a day or any other kind of a day. We ought to use those that we have here to a reasonable business efficiency. There is not the slightest danger that Uncle Sam is going to use them to an unreasonable amount of efficiency. Nobody ever heard of Uncle Sam getting the best of any proposition. He never does. Lots of gentlemen seem to fear, even on the floor of this House, that Uncle Sam is going to get the best of some proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. No one need fear that Uncle Sam is going to get the best of it, that he is going to get any more work than is coming to him, or that he is going to get the long end of any bargain. In fact, it is our duty to see to it that he gets as near a square deal as possible, but we can not always do that. My experience is that we never can assure the Government of an absolutely square deal in its dealings with individuals, and I know that we have never been able to get Uncle Sam a square deal in regard to his dealings with Washington people.

Here is another item to which I wish to direct attention. The more people we bring here to do a given amount of work the more housing we must provide for them for their work; that is, office housing. We are confronted with that situation, and they are now renting all kinds of buildings here at all kinds of prices for these temporary offices that we must have. We are compelled to build a large amount of temporary structures in the District to house these clerks. What for? To do the Government's business in an exceptionally short day's work and allow the buildings to be empty the rest of the time. You have to heat and light them and do all that sort of thing. There is one of the places where I think we can bring about a reduction of the congestion in Washington—require a fair day's work.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] has suggested that the best way to solve the rent problem and to prevent high prices and profiteering is to reduce the demand for houses and rooms.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], under his favorite topic, the eight-hour law, has suggested a remedy by increasing the day to eight hours and thereby lessening the number of employees.

I suggest in all seriousness that the best method of solving the rent problem in Washington is to arrange that the employees of the Government may find homes in the city of Baltimore. This can be accomplished by having a train or trains provided by the Director of Railways to run at the proper time from Washington to Baltimore and from Baltimore to Washington, so that the employees might be brought to their work in the morning in time and returned to their homes in the evening at the proper time.

By doing this they can go from Baltimore to Washington by the train service just as quickly as they can come from the outlying sections of Washington by the trolley service. It will relieve the congestion in Washington, will distribute the employees in another city, and the rent problem will solve itself by lessening the demand for rooms and houses.

The fare on the railroads will be $16.69 per month, including the war tax, and on the electric railroad $12.96 per month, including the war tax. The latter road, however, takes half an hour longer to reach Washington.

The living expense in the city of Baltimore is at least from 10 to 15 per cent cheaper than it is in the city of Washington and lots of homes and rooms are equally that much lower.

Baltimore provides, perhaps, the best living, or at least as good a living, as any city in the Union.

Our city has continued its great market system, by which the retail markets are used by the population instead of calling up by telephone and ordering from some store at a high rate. The farmers bring their produce to the market and sell to the consumer direct. The butchers slaughter much of their meat and offer it in these large markets. And so it is with all the other necessaries of life. You are not only able to secure your selection, but you are able to get it much cheaper by reason of the competition among all classes of market people. The truth is one can not only save their railroad fare but considerable more.

In fact, I am quite sure that a family would save far in excess of the railroad fare by dealing with these open markets in the city.

We have a great many homes where they would take in Government employees as members of the family, providing them good accommodations and all the comforts of home. Our hotels are not as expensive, but are just as luxurious and good as those of any city in the Union. In fact, we have just opened a new hotel which is second to but few in the land.

We have a city of 700,000 and can take care of all the excess employees from the city of Washington. You talk about spending fifty to one hundred millions of dollars to build homes in the city of Washington for these thousands of employees who are yet to come. Yet, gentlemen, you could operate a splendid train from Baltimore to Washington and back again, furnishing absolutely free transportation, and save money, rather than make this great expenditure for buildings.

These are Government employees and the railroads are now operated under Government control. Why not operate the train or trains at cost for these employees, taking them back and forth to the Monumental City?

I offer you this proposition in all seriousness as a certain method of reducing prices and profiteering in this city. I offer it as the answer to the high cost of living in Washington. I challenge any city in the country to produce cheaper market facilities and better housing facilities than the city of Baltimore.

Further, its vast farming sections furnish us with fresh vegetables and other farm products. From the great Chesapeake we procure oysters, fish, and crabs the best in this land—and all this within 45 minutes of the Capital City of the country.

This would not only be a great benefit to our metropolis, but it would be a great benefit to the Government at large and to the city of Washington; in fact, it would save the expense of building homes, which must necessarily come unless some method such as this is adopted.

Baltimore is one of the best-policed cities in the land. It has a school system second to none in this country. I say this because I know many cities in our land have splendid school systems. It has great public libraries, circulating libraries, moving-picture theaters, great theaters; in fact, everything which a great metropolis of 700,000 souls will need.

The truth is Washington and Baltimore have never joined hands in business or population as they should. They should be closer in business and social matters. They are practically one in that villages extend almost from one city to the other.

There is a magnificent highway provided by the State of Maryland by which a fast-moving automobile can make the trip from one city to the other in 1 hour and 30 minutes. What we want is a closer alliance between these two great cities—one helping the other in business and the other in population and housing facilities.

I make this suggestion because I do not think there is any doubt but that it can be adopted by the Government and save from fifty to one hundred millions of dollars. I believe the people in Baltimore will be well satisfied and that the Government employees will live better than they could anywhere else.

The sole question which needs to be solved is the question of railroad transportation. If the Government will guarantee a train or trains at the required hours it will be just as convenient and just as well to live in Baltimore and do business as it is to live in Washington.

We have to-day several hundred commuters who make the trip from Baltimore to Washington. They take their morning paper when they leave Baltimore or their cigar as the case may be, and by the time the cigar or paper is finished, they are pulling in at Union Station, Washington. Every man reads, or should read, a morning paper, and should read it before he goes to business. He should not, as I have seen many Government clerks, read it during office hours. The commuter will find the time during his ride from Baltimore to Washington to do this. He will enter his office better informed after the pleasant journey and thoroughly equipped to do work.

I know three gentlemen who conduct one of the largest business interests in Washington who have commuted for the last 25 years, and they say that they propose to do so as long as they live or continue to do business.

I do hope that this suggestion will not fall upon idle ears, but that it may bear fruit and many more Government employees find a comfortable, cheap, and convenient home in our great metropolis.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Oh, let me finish first.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not want to break in on the gentleman's argument.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. I was just going to ask my friend from Maryland whether he believed it was wise to tax the people of the United States to build housing facilities in the city of Washington for these congested employees?

Mr. LINTHICUM. There is not the slightest necessity of building any houses in the city of Washington if you will give the trains to Baltimore which will put the people here as quickly as you would from the outskirts of the city of Washington.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman had the National Capital in the city of Baltimore I take it his enterprising citizens would take care of all the people who would want to come there?

Mr. LINTHICUM. We would endeavor to do so, and we would make a strong struggle in that direction.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman just state the amount of car fare between this city and Baltimore, so as to make his statement complete?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The monthly ticket is $16.69, including the tax. That is on the railroad. On the electric line it is $12.96, including war tax.

Mr. LITTLE. Twelve dollars and ninety-six cents a month?

Mr. LINTHICUM. A month. It is about 50 cents a round trip on the railroad and slightly over 40 cents on the electric road.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose everybody would live in the depot after they got to Baltimore; they would have no car fare to pay——

Mr. LINTHICUM. Oh, I am not saying they would not have to pay car fare if they lived far enough out, but if they lived close to the center of the city they would not, as the electric line runs to the center of the city; besides, the Pennsylvania Railroad stops at two places in the residential sections, and the Baltimore & Ohio runs to Mount Royal Station, right in the center of the residences. Mr. Chairman, I say the Government need not go to the expenditure of great sums of money to build buildings. They can establish this train system, and have people coming from Baltimore here—coming from a city where they can get a good living and will not be so crowded and so many contained in one section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the motion to amend offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Before the Clerk begins to read I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he has another amendment to offer.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky has suggested an amendment——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Which I think will do very well to go along with the amendment just adopted, offered by the gentleman from Michigan. I suggest that it be read for information at least.

Mr. MAPES. I have not had a chance to compare it carefully, but I will send it up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Or I will offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan offer the amendment?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "eighteen months" wherever they appear in section 2 and insert in lieu thereof "twelve months."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will whoever has the floor permit a question? Does the gentleman wish to substitute "12 months"——

Mr. MAPES. Where is that?

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). "Twelve months"—when in line 20 you have the word "year" preceding "18 months." It is virtually the same. Is it necessary to insert "12 months" when you have the word "year" preceding the "18 months"? I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 20, page 2. The present phraseology is "number of days, weeks, months, year, or 18 months." The amendment proposed strikes out "18" and inserts "12" months. That is a mere duplication. I would suggest striking out "18 months" and inserting the word "or" before the word "year."

Mr. MAPES. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Michigan may be modified as suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the modification of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. Will the gentleman suggest the modification?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the committee, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman withdraws the amendment offered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of lines 5 to 10, inclusive, page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"If no such income was charged or received during such period of 18 months, then the deduction from such gross income of each taxable year shall be an amount equal to 10 per cent of the value of the property, including furniture, if any, producing the income as determined by the assessor of the District of Columbia for the purposes of this act and at the same rate for any greater or less period of time: Provided, however, That in cases of such last-named property where the landlord furnishes heat, light, or elevator service an additional deduction of an amount equal to the actual cost to the landlord of the heat, light, and elevator service so furnished shall be allowed."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee on what is predicated the period of 18 months which runs through the bill. Why was that specific period determined in addition to days, weeks, months, or a year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. When the language "daily, weekly, monthly, or yearly" is used it is used to bring in the hotels that lease their rooms for only a day, or other people who lease for a short term, say, a week.

Mr. STAFFORD. I conclude that the gentleman did not grasp the purpose of my query. I am trying to ascertain what is the reason for specifying 18 months as a period in addition to "years, months, weeks, and days"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I said, the retroactive part of it originally reached back 18 months, as compared with 18 months of previous time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Having stricken the retroactive part of it out, by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], is the 18-months' period any longer applicable?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have been advising all the forenoon with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] about it, and he is still of the opinion that it is not necessary to change that. But I prefer that the gentleman speak for himself.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield? I think I have an idea that that 18 months period was put in for this reason: In most of the cities the rental year ends on the 1st day of April. If you take April 1 to October, the end of the year in the District of Columbia, would be six months. So, if you are calculating a lease, as I happened to be when I came here, the ending of the lease in Pennsylvania being April 1 and the end of the year in the District of Columbia being October 1, six months later, I wanted to rent an apartment for that length of time—18 months. And that probably explains the attitude that was taken here in fixing the unusual period of time of 18 months in addition to the annual period that is generally fixed in leases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is hardly the idea. The bill as originally drafted levied a retroactive tax upon the next preceding 18 months, and compared it to the 18 months previous to that, for the prewar period. But the gentleman from Michigan has gone over this thoroughly; in fact, he and I have been going over it for the last two weeks, and I have yielded to his judgment in the matter.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan to explain this 18-month period.

Mr. MAPES. My idea is that the 18 months part of this section only determines the basis for the rent to be charged and fixes the amount to be charged prior to September 30, 1916, and giving the class of property within the District after this bill goes into effect the right to charge in addition 10 per cent of that amount after April 1. And that is the only purpose of the section now, and it does not seem to me to make any difference whether it is 18 months or a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Just as I have said, I have deferred in this particular matter to the judgment of the gentleman from Michigan. His amendment effected that, and I have left everything affecting it to his judgment.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I ask a question of the gentleman from Kentucky for information?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If it relates to that question, I would prefer that it be asked of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it does not. It is as to the construction of the language in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Where is the gentleman reading now?

Mr. CRAMTON. On page 3, the provision that a deduction——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Where on page 3?

Mr. CRAMTON. Lines 11 to 16.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We have not reached that yet?

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I will wait.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is recognized.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield just a moment, to have him explain whether or not the amendment he has offered changes the language of the section to which it has been offered so as to provide any greater income for furniture in a house that may be rented than 10 per cent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There are two purposes sought in that amendment that I have just offered. One is that instead of making a deduction of 10 per cent, making it at the rate of 10 per cent. And then the other is where service goes with an apartment or room it is to allow compensation for that at the actual cost of the service.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I would like five minutes in my own right in order to speak on that subject briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. FRENCH. It seems to me we ought to provide that a larger amount than 10 per cent be exempted for the householder on furniture.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that there is a provision at another place in the bill that where a house is rented furnished 17 per cent is allowed.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; I am aware of that. That occurs in the following section. But here is a condition that is not met by the following section: This condition is met, as is indicated in the first line, by saying that if no income was charged during the period of 18 months, then the householder upon leasing may still only charge 10 per cent of the value of the property plus 10 per cent for the furniture.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This relates solely to new property.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me call attention to this feature: It seems to me you discourage the householder from furnishing a house for renting purposes or renting a house furnished.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I admit it does discourage the householder from renting unless he be willing to rent at exorbitant prices.

Mr. FRENCH. Now, let us see. I think 10 per cent is not what the householder is entitled to have on his furniture, and I have no brief for the householder, either.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is the gentleman now discussing the language of that bill or the amendment I have offered?

Mr. FRENCH. I understand the language in the amendment does not modify the language in the bill in that regard, and what I want to do is to ask the attention of the committee to my idea that 10 per cent is altogether too low. Here comes a man to Washington to work in a department. Suppose just his wife is with him. Probably three or four rooms would accommodate them. He goes to the householder, and the householder says, "I will rent you the three rooms here unfurnished for $30 or $40 or $50 a month"; but the employee says, "I do not know how long I am to be here. It may be six months; it may be a year. What will you charge me if you furnish it?" The householder will probably furnish the rooms suitably to the prospective tenant for $600. He may have the furniture or may need to buy it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. In a moment. He says, "Under the law, then, I will be permitted to rent a furnished apartment at the price I quoted to you plus 10 per cent of the cost of the furniture during the year, which is $60," which, stretched over a period of 12 months, means $5 additional per month. In other words, he would rent the apartment furnished for $5 a month more than the rate at which he would rent it unfurnished, and we know that no householder would think of furnishing a house and renting it on that basis.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is not the gentleman proceeding on the notion that there is no consideration beyond a pecuniary one? Should not the householder here take into consideration the fact that he must do his part toward housing here?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; I have taken that into consideration, and I think that probably the householders ought to be absolutely generous in that regard. And let me call attention to this fact, that if the gentleman will go to a furniture store in this city that makes a practice of renting furniture for a few months and then taking it back, he will find that it is expected that that furniture will be absolutely paid for within a period of two years; and the householder should not be expected, it seems to me, to rent that furniture for such an amount as would not pay him for the furniture itself until after a period of 10 years, and that is what is required under the terms of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The trouble is that they are now renting furnished rooms on the basis that the furniture is paid for in about 10 days.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Let me finish this, and then I will yield. I think there is no question but that the prices are exorbitant, and they should be cut down in many instances. But let me follow the illustration that I took up a moment ago, of the householder who proposed to rent an apartment at $40 a month and agreed to put $600 worth of furniture into it. Under this bill he could ask only $45 for the furnished house.

Now, under my amendment, instead of asking $45 a month, he could state to the prospective tenant, "I will rent it to you for $65 a month." That would give him 50 per cent during the year on his furniture, to bring the rent up to $65 a month, and I am convinced that there is not an employee who would come here under the circumstances who would not be glad to rent a furnished apartment on that basis, rather than rent it unfurnished and buy the furniture and furnish it. It seems to me we ought to raise the percentage on the furniture up to 40 or 50 per cent of what the householder would need to pay to furnish the house.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has the gentleman had any experience in renting what they call one of these furnished houses in the District?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. I have had precisely that experience, and I would say that I have rented furniture at a rental that paid for it entirely and donated it back again to my householder at the time I was through with the rental period.

Now, I think we ought not to permit that, but there is a place somewhere between that and the terms of the present bill where we should draw the line.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I had some personal experience in that matter myself, and I have talked with other Members who have had the same experience, and almost universally, I think, this to be true, that in rented houses that are rented furnished the furniture in them is very insufficient and poor, and usually there is a large additional charge for furniture that you would not use in your house at home but which you are compelled to use here, and on account of the fact that the house is rented furnished you must pay a big price for it.

It seems to me that if this is discouraging to the renting of furnished houses it would be a good thing for Members and other people who have to live here on their official business.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. CARY. I understand that secondhand furniture stores here are doing a great business since the war began and are loading up houses with secondhand furniture.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. I could rent a common, ordinary house for $100 a month unfurnished and for $125 furnished, and I could buy all the furniture in the house for $150 or $200. That is not a limited experience. It is the experience that everybody has had.

Mr. FRENCH. Would not the assessor determine that, and then the householder could charge for the whole of a year only $15 or $20, which would be a dollar and a quarter to a dollar and seventy cents a month for that house furnished over what he could rent it for unfurnished?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think so. I agree with the gentleman in the idea that it would discourage the renting of furnished houses.

Mr. FRENCH. I may say that if the purpose of this amendment is to discourage the renting of furnished houses, I think it will accomplish that purpose; but it seems to me that a lot of people coming here do not care to rent unfurnished houses and then furnish them themselves. They would be glad to pay more than 50 per cent for the use of the furniture during the time they were occupying the house.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the whole question was very ably put this morning by the gentleman from Georgia, who referred to the question of supply and demand. These prices, even if they are taken as being high, are the result of the demand for property to-day in the District. I do not think the committee or the distinguished chairman of this committee have taken into consideration the hundreds of idle houses and apartments that have stood here for years at a loss to the owners. There has been no move to reimburse those owners for the losses they sustained year after year on account of their property standing idle.

I was told of an illustration only a few moments ago in the case of one of the leading hotels. A clerk there stated that in spite of the employees they were obliged to have for the upkeep of the house during a summer period there never was a time for months during the summer when there were to exceed 10 or 15 guests in that hotel, one of the very houses, probably, of which complaint is at the present time being made.

No move has been made to reimburse people for the losses they have sustained here for years in the matter of idle property, whether hotels or apartment houses. But now, because of a peculiar condition existing here in Washington, and the requirements of so many thousands coming to the place, increasing the demand, because there happen to be isolated cases of extortion, we are asked to pass this legislation. The chairman of the committee [Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky] could not refute the statement, except to say that he did not believe it, as to the percentage of increase that is taking place. I think we as Members are selfish. The existing condition has occasioned us a little extra expense, and we are asked to vote to inflict something on the whole District and the District ownership of property simply because we have ourselves been the victims of an occasional isolated case, such as the chairman of the committee has referred to.

Mr. FOSTER. Now that there is such a great demand for rooms in the District of Columbia, from people who have come in here, does the gentleman think that these property holders ought now to be permitted to charge such exorbitant prices as to make the back profits that they might have needed years ago?

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize that there is much merit in the idea the gentleman presents. But why pick out real estate? Did not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] state the case exactly as it was this morning when he suggested to the committee that the same thing should apply to a man's shoes or to a suit of clothes? You can not buy a suit of clothes to-day within 25 or 40 per cent of the price you could have bought it for two years ago. Why do we pick out real estate and constructed houses and rented apartments for this particular sort of an attack? If I may be allowed to say it, I think it is very largely not to protect these outside people who are coming here, but because a few of us may have happened to have been caught by these people who rent rooms.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think that because we have not regulated the price of every commodity in the District, for that reason we ought not to regulate the exorbitant prices that these people are charging now?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will ask the gentleman if $12 for a pair of shoes that a few months ago could have been bought for $4 is not a much greater percentage of increase of price than the increase in the rental of any property that he can refer to here in the city?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be an outrage to charge that.

Mr. TREADWAY. The chairman of the committee used that as an illustration this morning.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask the gentleman, why not stop this particular thing? If we can not stop it all, for the Lord's sake let us stop a little of it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Because I do not think it is fair to pick out the real estate situation as an illustration of a condition existing probably everywhere and through all lines of commodities in the District, and existing likewise throughout the country.

The District of Columbia is not alone in this matter. Just because we have the power that is no reason why we ought to exercise it.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the gentleman have us regulate the price of shoes?

Mr. TREADWAY. We are going beyond our depth when we attempt that, and we are beyond our depth when we try to regulate the price of real estate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARY. The gentleman's argument is a good one, but the people coming here from outside the District do not have to buy their shoes here, but they have got to live here.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not a fact that outside of the soldiers who are compelled to come here, most of whom live in the camps, everyone else who comes here does so voluntarily? Nobody is commandeered to come to Washington, but they come voluntarily. We as Members of Congress come here voluntarily, and we ask the privilege of coming.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. I wanted to refer particularly to the percentage of increase for furnished apartments. It is true, as the gentleman from Illinois said, that if a place is put up to rent furnished it undoubtedly is furnished cheaply, but if by reason of circumstances some one has a satisfactory apartment or a satisfactory house to rent, and can secure a proper tenant for it, an allowance of 10 per cent depreciation of the assessed value of the furnishings simply means that for any ordinarily good apartment or house the owner would rather close it up than take that 10 per cent depreciation. You can not rent furnished property at a depreciation of 10 per cent and break even on it. It is absurd. So, also, I think that the suggestion to include hotels in this bill and put them on a percentage basis is a ridiculous one. The gentleman from Kentucky says he is going to allow them to charge for their waiters and bell boys and chambermaids the exact cost of that service. Why, I never heard a more absurd proposition than that in the world. There is no use in debating or arguing such a statement as that as applied to hotels. If the gentleman wants to debate the merits of that sort of a proposition, I would be very glad to do it, but I do not think we ought to take the time on any such foolish proposition as that, because anybody with any sense at all and any experience in hotel living knows that simply to add the actual cost of service to the rental price is ridiculous on the face of it. If I understand the gentleman's amendment aright—I hope I am wrong in the phraseology of it, but if I am right in it—it is about as ridiculous a proposition as could be brought before the House.

Therefore it seems to me that the whole spirit of this kind of legislation, from start to finish, is wrong. Not one of these people the gentleman is so anxious to protect is forced to come here to Washington. All of them are coming here in an effort to better their condition, and nine times out of ten they could not do it under normal conditions. In my experience here, when young men or young women have written to me about Government positions I have always advised them not to take Government positions. It is the poorest kind of employment a young man or a young woman can have. I hope the example that is before them now of this increased cost of living in Washington will be of sufficient value to stop this tremendous influx of people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But the various departments telegraph these men and ask them to come on—that they must have them.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is true; but they are not commandeered. They are coming more from a spirit of patriotism, and nine-tenths because they think they can better conditions, and when they get here they find that they are mistaken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All these people that come here must have houses to live in; they can not live in tents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky refers to this section of the bill which imposes 100 per cent in addition to the ordinary taxes, in case the income from the property is such as to justify it, and allows a deduction of 10 per cent from that 100 per cent additional taxes on property which had not been occupied for a stated period. That leads to the conclusion that 10 per cent gross income is all that can be allowed on rented property.

I believe it would be a great mistake to limit the gross income to 10 per cent. Ten per cent of the gross income would be absorbed in the payment of the taxes, which would amount to 1½ per cent of the value of the property.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. One per cent here.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to ask the gentleman as to the determination of this valuation. Does this mean the present tax valuation or does it mean that the assessor of the District of Columbia will in each case, when appealed to, determine the value of the property?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will answer that question, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The latter part of his question is the proper basis.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is, that the present list of tax valuations has nothing to do it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Nothing to do with it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Kentucky corrects me and says 1 per cent. That would leave 9 per cent. Four per cent for depreciation or repairs would be added to that. If you take off in the shape of depreciation, the average experience is 4 per cent; but if you really charge the actual cost, then it frequently amounts to 20 per cent—sometimes to 100 per cent of the revenue, not the value. Then there must be a certain period when property is idle, and during those periods the taxing and the depreciation goes on. I am not sure whether I am right in concluding that the period of idleness amounts to about 2½ or 3 per cent, but, say, 3 per cent; 4 per cent for depreciation, 1 per cent for taxes, and there is 2 per cent left as income to the owner.

There are special assessments levied against the property for sidewalks, for sewers, and now, I think, for a part of the paving, which is not classed as ordinary taxation. This undoubtedly would amount to the other 2 per cent of income. Now, it is not fair to suppose that people who have property here are willing to have it occupied by strangers without income. I think excessive charges have been made in the District, and in so far as we can remedy those excessive charges and do justice, we ought to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. But I would like the gentlemen who are considering this bill to take a common sense view of what is a legitimate charge—surely 10 per cent is not. I may state for the information of the House that I own some property in another city. One piece of property that I own is an appartment building of about 20 apartments. We do not charge as much rent there as they do here, but the gross income from that property for the month of January was $527. The net income of the property after paying expenses, furnishing the heat, making the repairs, and so forth, was $52.06. The gross income of the property was $527 for the month of February, and the net loss was $26. So that owning and renting property is not as profitable as it might seem to be.

It is true that many tenants have sublet their apartments, and those to whom they have sublet them have been obliged to pay exorbitant rents. But I do not know how you are going to reach such people who receive exorbitant incomes from property. They have no responsibility, they may not be permanent residents of the District, they may have gone from the territory over which we are to give jurisdiction. They have taken the income with them. I do not think you will be able to accomplish the purpose sought. In any event you will not be able to accomplish your purpose unless you endeavor to be just, and 100 per cent tax with 10 per cent deduction for vacant periods is not just and ought not to be enacted into law, and I undertake to say could not be enforced if it was enacted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the premises laid down by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] were correct, his conclusions are not far wrong. But his premises are so far from being correct that his conclusions are bound to be wrong. Everybody in the whole country knows that even with old property 10 per cent is a good income, even where taxes are twice as high as they are here, where insurance is twice as high, and where repairs are more expensive.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. I see in the bill, and the gentleman continually uses, the rate of 10 per cent. That is the rental that can be charged for a piece of property—10 per cent of the value of the property. Suppose you are going to rent it for only one month, does the gentleman mean to say that 10 per cent of the value of that property shall be charged as rental for the month?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have just offered an amendment making it at the rate of 10 per cent.

Mr. KEARNS. Per annum or per month?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. At the rate of 10 per cent for the taxable year.

Mr. KEARNS. Has that been written into the bill? It is not in the bill now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is in the amendment that I have just offered.

Mr. KEARNS. Is that in the amendment—10 per cent per annum?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. At the rate of 10 per cent per annum.

Mr. KEARNS. Does it use that expression?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have the exact language here—

And at the same rate for any greater or less period of time.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the city of Washington, as has already been stated, is confronted with an unprecedented—indeed, a most serious situation.

It is one that the capital of every nation involved in this world-wide war has had trouble with.

It has necessitated at each one of these seats of government a tremendous expansion of administrative machinery essential to mobilization of great armies and the production and transportation of munitions and supplies. Thousands upon thousands of new clerks and officials have been summoned to the various capitals of the nations at war, and I am informed that in all of them the housing of the added population has resulted in overcrowded and unusual conditions, notwithstanding the fact that most of these capitals had many times the population of Washington.

France, with a population of about 40,000,000, had her Paris, a city of upward of 3,000,000 people, in which to center her war activities.

The mobilization and war problems of Germany, with a population of something more than 60,000,000, are cared for at Berlin, a city of over 2,000,000.

The mainland of the British Empire has a population of about 50,000,000, but in mobilizing the war energies of these 50,000,000 she has the assistance of the great city of London with about four and a half millions of souls.

The United States has a population of more than double that of England, but the vast problem of mobilizing the military, food, and transportation energies of about 110,000,000 of people was suddenly dumped upon Washington's 340,000 people.

If London and Paris had housing problems, what have we given to Washington?

The field for profiteering was an inviting one, and the old law of supply and demand quickly asserted itself.

Many instances of shameful profiteering have come to light.

It is a serious problem for the Congress to meet in a sane, businesslike way.

Washington is not large enough to absorb these thousands of new employees and Army officers who are brought here.

There is a limit to the capacity of her homes.

In the discussion of this bill some pretty hard things have been said about the city, but I am not ready to brand the whole population of Washington as grafters and profiteers. It is our Capital. We ought to be proud of it.

It is made up of people from all the States, and there are good and bad people everywhere. No doubt in New York, Philadelphia, or Chicago the problem of caring for an additional population of 60,000 would not have been so troublesome. But let us not forget that we are handling the mightiest movement that ever vexed the Western Hemisphere in one of the smaller cities of our country.

As a general proposition the people of Washington have shown a most generous and patriotic spirit. During the holiday season I recall that thousands of homes were thrown open to our visiting soldiers, and on Christmas Day a sign was displayed from hundreds of homes indicating that a good turkey dinner awaited any man in the uniform of the Army or Navy, regardless of whether he knew the family or not. Many lodges and churches of the city are to-day extending hospitalities to our boys that are most commendable.

As to the profiteering, it is said that most of it has been done by tenants, often people residing here temporarily. It is said that only a limited number of bona fide owners of real estate have been guilty of inflicting hardships on their tenants.

The claim of the Real Estate Brokers' Association, that of over 20,000 tenants investigated an increase in rentals of only about 1 per cent on the average was found, has not been contradicted.

I myself have talked with many young men and women who are here connected with the activities of the Nation, and they tell me they have found a hearty welcome to some of the best homes of the city at reasonable rates, and they are not complaining.

But, Mr. Chairman, there can be no denying the fact that some householders in the city are acting in most mercenary and reprehensible manner, and I am in favor of legislation that will meet the situation and punish to the limit the offenders.

I shall vote for the best bill we can get. I am not satisfied with several provisions of the bill we are considering. I want to reach the guilty without hampering the innocent. I want to commend my distinguished colleague, the splendid chairman of the committee; his heart is in the right place. Some good remedial legislation, I am sure, will reward his investigations and his untiring efforts to protect the people we are bringing to this city. I only wish we could reach similar situations in many other parts of our land where graft and profiteering are equally rampant.

But we must be careful about putting on the people of the city of Washington retroactive legislation or measures that our State constitutions would not allow us to put on our own people or cities of our own States. They have no voice in this body, no one to speak for them, and I know we all want to treat them fairly. How about some of this profiteering? I met a lady who used to in the prewar period get $3 a week for a room. She practically made her living by renting rooms in her home. She formerly got the equivalent of 3 bushels of wheat or 70 pounds of sugar renting at $3 a week. She has raised her price far beyond what this bill will permit her and is getting, say, $5 a week for her room, but is only getting about half as much wheat and sugar for her room even at an enormous increase in the price charged, and we are calling her a grafter. We are saying that she has been doing something that is reprehensible, and by the provisions of this bill we inflict a heavy penalty on her based on her rental transactions before any law was enacted and when she had no idea she was violating the laws of her country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from West Virginia has just spoken of the owner of real estate getting only half the quantity of flour and sugar that she previously got. Does not the clerk from whom she is taking this increase in rent get only half the quantity of wheat and half the quantity of sugar that he previously got?

Mr. REED. I presume that is true, but that does not cure the situation at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, would the gentleman suggest that the only cure is to let her charge more rent?

Mr. REED. She will contend that her great Government has said that the higher price of wheat is right, and has fixed it, and said that the higher price of sugar is right, and that she should have more rent because she pays more for these and other necessaries of life.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. How much more is her property costing her to maintain?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Her taxes have not been increased.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Her taxes have not been increased; her cost has not been increased. Why should she have an additional rental for that property?

Mr. REED. Perhaps what is true in the case of others is true with her as to taxes, but certainly her expenses have been enormously increased. I know people who came here to educate their children. They have rented or bought homes, and boarding or renting rooms is their means of making a living. We have welcomed them in the past, because they have furnished rooms and board for the employees of the Government. Such people live on what they get from their rooms or for rooming and boarding people. Most of them, I presume, have increased their prices, and in very many instances their boarders and tenants are not complaining. Some increase was to be expected in Washington, just as rents have increased elsewhere.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What is bringing these people here? The fact that we are at war, the fact that the Government has to have those people here, and so it is bringing people into this community, and this community ought not on account of this enforced condition to take advantage of them and raise the prices over and above what other communities outside are charging.

Mr. REED. They ought not to do it, and I favor laws to correct it, but all the people of Washington are not doing it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then this bill will not hurt those who are not profiteering.

Mr. REED. Is it profiteering when the tenants are satisfied?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, they are not satisfied, but they are doing it because they have to.

Mr. REED. The Government has said that the farmer has to get more for his wheat because his plow costs more. Shall you say the woman who rents a room shall not get more when her broom which used to cost her 35 cents is now costing her $1.25? The same advance is true of carpets, curtains, bedding, and so forth, to say nothing of her personal living expenses while she is keeping up the house.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yet we are fixing the price of the farmer's wheat. Why not fix that for rent?

Mr. REED. I say fix the rent. But what is the best method and one that will not decrease the number of rooms to be rented?

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman understands the price of wheat is fixed because of the cost of producing wheat. It is fixed at a price that will enable the farmer to produce but not to make a profit, and if it were fixed any lower he could not produce. That is the scale on which the price of wheat is fixed. Now, the gentleman has already stated in answer to the gentleman from Illinois it is not costing this lady any more to maintain her property in taxes or repairs.

Mr. REED. It is costing more, a great deal more.

Mr. MEEKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that property in cost, repairs, and so forth, is not costing any more?

Mr. BORLAND. Repairs do not figure at all. They certainly would not increase to the extent of $2 a week.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a couple of minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED. Now, in replying further to the questions propounded by my colleague, let me say I am most heartily in favor of a law that will prevent both owners and tenants from charging exorbitant prices. My colleague would treat rents as the Government has dealt with wheat. Well, that would mean a minimum rental on property and no limit as to the maximum. I would fix a maximum on rents. But in the case I cited I am not saying that increasing a room from $3 to $5 per week is right. It may be too high; but under this bill the increase allowed would be only 30 cents per week, and I am afraid that is not enough and would only serve to drive many people out of the room-renting business and leave our problem still a serious one. I doubt the wisdom or efficacy of an inflexible 10 per cent method of increasing rates regardless of the circumstances or conditions that may exist. It has already been stated, and not been denied, that in over 20,000 cases the average rent increase over prewar times is about 1 per cent. This bill would apparently be the signal for raising the rent of over 20,000 tenants an additional 9 per cent.

I would like to avoid that and protect this vast number of tenants.

We have found it expedient to create a Food Administrator, a Coal Administrator, a Transportation Administrator, and other kinds of administrators. Now, why not get at this matter through a rent administrator for the District of Columbia? My idea is to have a method that will meet all sorts of rent situations in the District that may arise from time to time, with severe penalties for the guilty profiteers. A 10 per cent increase may be too much in some cases and not enough in others where the property, on account of competition in renting during the prewar period, caused it to be leased far below its real value.

Now, I have heard of various kinds of profiteers in Washington. We all are united in wanting to help the loyal, patriotic, young man or woman who leaves a comfortable home and comes to Washington to help in our war work.

We denounce in the most flagrant manner the landlord or room renter who imposes upon either of them. Now, I regret that in a few instances some of these loyal, patriotic Americans have come here to take positions and as a "side line" to helping win the war have rented houses and turned to profiteering, their associates in the Government service being the helpless victims of their greed. I hope the number of such cases are limited and I could but wish the law we may pass might have an extra penalty for such miscreants.

Just a word on the question of hotels. I visited some Washington hotels a few days ago and made some inquiries. I do not mean the Shoreham, the Raleigh, or the Willard, but hotels that are well known, respectable hotels. They did not know the purpose of my investigation, and I found they had increased the price of their rooms 50 cents on a room, on an average. I said to one of the hotel clerks, who did not know who I was, "Can I get a room here for $1.50?" He said, "Yes." "How long in advance will I have to apply to get it?"

"Oh," he said, "let me know a day and a half or two days in advance and I can get you a comfortable room for $1.50 or a room and a bath for $2.50." That is not so bad; even the city of the gentleman from Maryland, Baltimore, would hardly do better. Now about apartments. I rented an apartment in one of the best apartment houses in Washington and I find among the apartments there a number of three-room apartments—a sitting room, a bedroom, both large and well lighted, a kitchenette, hall, bath, and two wardrobe rooms. I found a number of such suites in this apartment, all of which are renting for $38.50 per month. I asked the owner of that building if any of those tenants should vacate and give up their leases, what would be the best price for which one could be had, and he said it was just the same, $38.50.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Unfurnished or furnished?

Mr. REED. Unfunished; beautiful apartments; and well lighted, heated, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GILLETT rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ascertain whether or not I can get a unanimous-consent agreement for closing debate on this amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like a little information from the gentleman; that is my purpose in rising.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make any request?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not make any request; I may make it presently.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to get a little information from the chairman of the committee on one phase of this bill. I understand that his purpose is to protect the persons who have come to the city and who can not afford to pay high prices and who are obliged to find a place to live, and yet who find that some owners will take advantage of their necessity and compel them to pay a rent which they can not afford. Now, with that purpose we must all sympathize, for undoubtedly there are many cases of hardship, but there is one other class which the present conditions have brought to Washington who would be covered by the terms of the bill and who, it seems to me, should not be; and I wondered if the gentleman, the chairman of this committee, intended that they should be. Aside from the clerks, Congressmen, and others coming here, and who can not afford to pay high prices, there has come with the new régime of war a class of wealthy people who could find accommodations but who were not satisfied with the ordinary houses, and who are willing to pay largely to secure not simply comfort but luxury, and I have known a good many cases where those persons have directly or indirectly gone to residents who had nice houses, who had no idea of renting their houses, who would not rent their houses for ordinary prices, but who have been offered tremendous rents, and they have leased them furnished for big prices simply because they were getting big prices. Now, it seems to me that this is not the kind of person we care to protect. That is a good deal like fixing a price on diamonds or other luxuries. It seems to me those are things that do not need protection and do not ask protection. Those persons who have given up their houses, and have rented them, would not have done it under ordinary conditions, and it seems to me it would not be fair to them to make them take an amount for which they would never originally have given up their houses.

And I wondered if it would not be fair to remedy it in some way, perhaps by putting a limitation in the bill saying that this should not apply to houses renting for perhaps over $5,000 or $7,000 or $10,000 or any price you like?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit just there, I will say that there are several reasons why that should not be put in the law. In the first place, taxation, when levied, should be upon all, including the rich as well as the poor. In the next place——

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman right there——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to answer further.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In the next place, if the gentleman's thoughts were put into law it would result, in my judgment, in a monstrous wrong being perpetrated upon the United States. In order to illustrate it I can give a concrete instance: The United States is renting 10,500 square feet of floor space in the Munsey Trust Building, on Pennsylvania Avenue, for which it is paying $10,000 a year. A little while back, Mr. Harris, the manager, if I have his name correctly, served notice on the Chief Clerk of the Treasury Department that on the 1st of July next that the rent would be increased to $3 a square foot. That would make the Government pay $31,500 for the same space for which it is now paying $10,000. Therefore I do not believe the gentleman's thought should be written into law.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not believe I made myself clear. I do not think the gentleman understood me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And in addition to that, the proposition is before us in the shape of the Tinkham substitute to reach that matter by a fine instead of by a tax. Now, a substitute will be offered by Mr. TINKHAM to fine that trust company a thousand dollars only for increasing the rent from $10,000 to $31,500. If next year they demand $21,500 more for the same premises than they do now, they can still do it and pay the fine of $1,000 and make $20,500 over the rental of the present year.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not believe I made myself clear, because I can not see that what the gentleman suggests is at all responsive to what I said.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am sorry if I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. I think you did. I was not speaking of business property. I was speaking of residences.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would the gentleman distinguish between residences and business property?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, yes; I think I would. The gentleman in his response refers to properties rented to the Government. That, of course, was not in my mind. What I have in mind is this: For instance, I know of a case where a person was living here in the city in a very handsome house. I do not know how much it cost, but I presume the cost was about $50,000. One of the wealthy men came here, found this beautiful house, handsomely furnished, and he offered a rent which would be three or four times that which would be allowed by this bill. Now, the owner was living in the house, did not seek to rent his property, had no idea of renting it, and would not have rented it at 10 per cent, but under the inducement of an enormous rent he was willing to give up his house and move out. I do not see why that should be forbidden. I do not see, if a man from outside who has plenty of money wants to spend it in that way, it is doing any hardship to him or to anybody else. But it seems to me it would be doing a hardship to the person who has given up his property under the inducement of a big rent to not be allowed to enjoy that rent. And I can not see why that is in violation of the principle, which I heartily agree with, of trying to——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. Would not the gentleman's idea be met by the Tinkham bill?

Mr. GILLETT. To tell the truth, I do not know whether it would or not.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would call the gentleman's attention to the provision in the Tinkham bill to which I refer. That bill provides that there shall be a readjustment of rents only upon complaint, and there would be no complaint in such a case as the gentleman proposes. And why, therefore, would not that answer fully the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. GILLETT. I agree it would, if that is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For those gentlemen who come here and work for a dollar a year and occupy a house, it would not make any difference, inasmuch as the Government pays the rent.

Mr GILLETT. You mean for business purposes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I understand that in the new form of administration, if a man is working for a dollar a year, they pay his rent.

Mr. GILLETT. I am not in the secrets of this administration, but I did not suppose that any of these dollar-a-year men had their rent paid for the houses which they live in.

Mr. LANGLEY. The Government pays their expenses, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Referring to what the gentleman from Washington just said, I think if that is true it ought to be exposed on the floor of this House.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that can be true, and I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he should consider it from this standpoint, because, as I understand him, what he is trying to do is to prevent hardships, abuse—to prevent owners of property taking advantage of the necessities of those who have to occupy their property. Now, that does not at all apply, it seems to me, to cases of men who pay a large rent, say $10,000 a year. They can get all they need for a great deal less, and if they want to pay these big prices I do not see why we are called upon to interfere. It seems to me, as I say, as if it was analagous to settling the price of diamonds and other luxuries by law, whereas all we are really trying to settle is the price of necessities.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will be gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman think of the principle of law that requires that taxation shall be uniform?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, I suppose this taxation is simply a subterfuge. It is not imposed for the purpose of taxation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, it is a bill founded upon the theory of taxing all property owners alike, as all taxables ought to be.

Mr. GILLETT. Well, I will agree that that might make it difficult to remedy in this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would not be willing to release the larger amount of tax, to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has alluded, and collect the smaller tax which the little renter would have to pay.

Mr. GILLETT. I suppose the gentleman's purpose is, is it not, to remedy the unfairness of the men who own property and who take advantage of the necessities of their tenants?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That may be the result, but taxation is the purpose which is set out in the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. If that is so, if taxation is the real purpose, I shall vote against the bill. To my mind, however, taxation is not the purpose. Remedying this injustice is the purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would not the case the gentleman mentioned have a tendency to increase all rentals?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think it would.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To allow rentals to be made at such enormous figures as that?

Mr. GILLETT. No. I do not think these fancy prices have any effect on the property that most of us would rent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The case that the gentleman cites is on all fours with others that I am acquainted with. For instance, I was told of a residence renting at $16,000 a year, which, when built, cost a little over $50,000. The bill, as the gentleman has well said, is founded upon the theory that taxes should be uniform. Does not the gentleman think it ought to have a tendency and ought to have the effect of reducing the profiteering out of the exigencies of the war in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GILLETT. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is what the rental of such a residence is—a species of profiteering.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to insist that those gentlemen who wish to speak shall address themselves to the amendment pending and not enter general debate. There will be plenty of opportunity under the five-minute rule to discuss every amendment as it comes along.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I want to address my remarks to the entire bill at this particular time. I believe that there is but a small minority of this House that do not believe in the principles of this bill; that is to say, I believe the vast majority of the membership of this House believe that the idea contained in the bill is the proper one.

There are some who object to the language that has been employed by the writer of the bill, thinking that in some instances a hardship might be worked upon certain property owners of the town. I would hope to see this bill so amended that there will be no hardship worked against any landowner who in the past has not attempted to take advantage of the men and women who have been coming into the city within the last two or three years to assist the Government in its present stress of business.

The Real Estate Exchange of this city has undertaken to gather statistics to show that the property owners of the town, the real estate owners, have not increased their rents except very slightly since war was declared. I do not know how much of the property they took into consideration when they gathered these statistics, but I believe that the vast majority of the membership of this House if called to the witness stand would give a testimony that would be entirely contradictory to the evidence presented to this House by the Real Estate Exchange.

They have stated that the property owners of the town have increased the rents slightly over 1 per cent, while it has been the experience of every man in this House who has employed any of his time in the last few months in looking for apartments that the rent has been increased from 100 to 500 per cent in the last two years.

I was talking only last evening with an old gentleman whose wife recently died, who had an apartment for which he paid $25 a month furnished. He and his wife had lived there for the past three or four years, but his wife having died he was going to vacate it, and he told a newly married couple, friends of his from Pennsylvania, who were looking for rooms the other day, that they could get that apartment for $25 a month. When they went there to rent the premises the landlord, the owner of the property, asked them $125 per month for it. It is located in a very poor section of the town. There is not in that apartment, according to the old gentleman's statement, $150 worth of furniture.

Now, that has been the experience of every Member of this House who has spent any time recently looking for some place to live.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In my judgment, one of the most effective ways of reaching the evils of the situation would be for the Washington newspapers to have the nerve to give the names and the facts of just such instances as that. Publicity of that kind of robbery would do a lot of good.

Mr. KEARNS. I have no criticism to offer concerning the newspapers of Washington. But you will remember that the newspapers of the District are constantly saying through their editorial columns that Congress ought to sit in session all the year round, and there may be some who are inclined to think that these editorials are inspired by the fact that each Member of this House draws down a salary of $625 a month, and they do not want any of that money to be spent outside the city of Washington. I do not say that is true of the newspapers, but I say that a suspicion of that kind might be justified.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for just one observation?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I am under the impression that if the newspapers of Washington published such things as the gentleman has mentioned they would be obliged to increase their pages to 24 or 36 each issue.

Mr. KEARNS. Yes. If they published information of that kind they would have to get out extra editions each day.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. If that is true, why is not evidence of that kind submitted in this great quantity of evidence that has been presented here? We have found but very few instances of that.

Mr. KEARNS. Each Member who has spent any time in the last few months in hunting for an apartment knows that that is true.

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I am one of those men, and I have been looking for an apartment, and I have found it at a reasonable rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I then continue my question?

Mr. KEARNS. I think I have the question. Perhaps the gentleman has not looked for an apartment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes, I have; and I have found one at a very reasonable rent.

Mr. KEARNS. I will say to the gentleman that I have no personal quarrel with anybody at this moment. Only last evening a friend of mine who is leaving the city for some three or four months called me on the telephone and invited me to come and occupy his spacious home while he is gone, so I have no personal interest in this matter at this time. But I know these conditions do prevail, and I could cite you to many like instances within my personal knowledge. One case in point comes to my mind now. Some two months ago I saw an apartment advertised. I called up the number on the telephone. Some lady answered the phone, and when I told her what I wanted she apologized. She told me that her home was very exclusive, that they never had rented before, that they did not need the money, but she and her husband had talked about it the night previous, and they thought it was their patriotic duty to rent their apartment. I thought, "Fine, I am dealing with a patriotic family." I said, "How many rooms have you?" She said, "Two rooms and a community bath." "What is the price?" "Well, we thought it was our patriotic duty, and we would rent it for $200 a month." [Laughter.] I do not know who that lady is. No doubt she is a good, conscientious, honest, Christian, patriotic woman; but I am afraid that if patriotism were the only qualification by which that patriotic, Christian woman could enter heaven, she would never get out of scorching distance of the world of brimstone and fire. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is along the line of the remark of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that it would be necessary to increase the size of the papers in order to publish all these complaints. Where have we evidence of that before us?

Mr. KEARNS. I have tried to answer that question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Can you illustrate it?

Mr. KEARNS. I know of some six or eight instances myself.

Mr. MEEKER. Can the gentleman give specific names and numbers? That is what we want.

Mr. KEARNS. Oh, I could, but I am not testifying; I am only observing. There is a great deal of talk about the clerks coming in great numbers to this city of their own volition—that is, it is suggested that nobody is pulling them here; that nobody is compelling them to come. I want to say that if these clerks did not come, the Government could not carry on its business, and if the Government could not carry on its business, then we would fail in our attempt to win the war. It seems to me that, although some of them have given up better positions at home to come here, the very moment they get to the Union Station they are met and followed by a hungry pack of men and women who try to pick their pockets every day that they remain here in the Capital of the greatest Nation of the world. I am not saying this with the thought or wish to apply it to all the men and women of Washington. There are as good men and women in Washington as you will find any place, but this seems to be human nature. Go any place you want in the United States, I do not care where you go, where there is a cantonment containing from 40,000 to 60,000 soldiers, and you will find the same condition prevailing there. You will find the same hungry, greedy hoard of men and women. The Washington landlord is not in a class by himself by any means. You find similar conditions everywhere where there has been a great influx of population. That brings me to the question of officers' uniforms. During the holidays I was in Cincinnati. There was a young officer from down at Camp Sherman who came into a tailor's shop that I happened to be in at the moment. He was getting two uniforms made, one at a cost of $40 and the other at a cost of $50. They were made of very fine cloth and by a high-class workman. He told me he was getting them there because down in Alabama at the town where the cantonment was they wanted to charge him $90 a suit for those uniforms. There is no cantonment located at Cincinnati, consequently these outrageously increased prices do not prevail—only at places in the United States where there has not been a great influx of people in the last few months.

I believe that after this bill has been properly amended it ought to pass. I want to compliment the chairman of the District Committee upon his courage in presenting a bill of this kind, because, regardless of what the Real Estate Exchange of this city may tell him, he knows that men and women of this city are profiteering. I have no criticism to make of this exchange or its membership, but he knows and I know that the average landlord is profiteering at the expense of the men in uniform who are going to fight to make this Capital safe in which for them to live. Yet they continue to ply the nefarious business of robbing these soldiers who are to be the defenders of our flag and our country. [Applause.] I want to say again that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] ought to be complimented instead of condemned for reporting this bill. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent Mr. REED was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he intends to ask for any further extention beyond that?

Mr. MEEKER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEEKER. First, I want to call attention to the fact that the gentleman who just preceded me [Mr. KEARNS], while condemning the Washington newspapers for not giving specific names and numbers, failed to give any himself. He was on the floor of this House talking to this committee and denouncing something in generalties only. If he has any specific names and cases, it is up to him to give them to this committee right now. If he has none, then do not let him condemn any newspaper for what they talked about in generalities.

Mr. KEARNS. I have not condemned any newspaper. The gentleman over there asked me a question.

Mr. MEEKER. I asked that he name the instances, and he did not do it.

In the second place, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] indorses what he calls the principle of this bill. I think he was unfortunate in the use of his terms. He may indorse the purpose of the bill, but I do not think any sound business man can indorse the principle of the thing. That is the difficulty with the whole bill. It is an effort to work out something that can not be worked out on any business basis.

Now, in the next place, somebody awhile ago referred to the price of wheat. I think it was the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. Let us remember that we fixed the minimum price of wheat. We did not guarantee anything as to the maximum, but we guaranteed to the producer the minimum price.

Again, in this proposed measure I have not heard even from the gentleman from Kentucky volunteering to take 10 cents a pound for his hogs when he could get 18. If he would do that and the other farmers would do it, meat would be cheaper. I have not heard of any man here who is growing wheat or cotton, or anything else, volunteering to cut the price of the product in the place in which he lives. They are not profiteering when they get five times as much as they have been getting for their products; they are patriots. But when a man has money invested in real estate and gets war prices he is a profiteer and a thief. Let us be fair and honest. Let some man get up on the floor of the House and announce that he has cut the price of meat or food and is not waiting for prices to rise to get more for his pork.

Take another proposition. Outside of the city of Washington where the Government is putting in employees the Government is doing the sensible thing. It is building houses for employees. We have appropriated $50,000,000 to take care of housing employees elsewhere. Why is not that the thing to do here? Why do not we, as other business concerns that want to relieve congested housing conditions somewhere, provide by building houses for the people during the temporary congestion? We are going to do that at all shipyards and other places where people are employed by private concerns on Government work; where they are taking great contracts; where great corporations are making great profits; and yet the Government recognizes the necessity of saving these employees from profiteering in those cities by putting up $50,000,000 to build houses for these men. Is not that the fair and sensible thing to do here? Should we not in the city of Washington realize and recognize the fact that we are sending for all these people to come here—true they come voluntarily to do Government service—why do not we build here for the people just as we are going to build for them elsewhere? I am not going to say—I am not going to make the charge—that the reason that these houses are going to be built at Government expense at other places is because the men who have the contracts insist that it shall be done. I would not make that charge.

Mr. LITTLE. What would you do with all these buildings after the war terminates?

Mr. MEEKER. Do the same as they do elsewhere.

Mr. LITTLE. What will that be?

Mr. MEEKER. I do not know; but Kansas is sending all her mechanics down to the seacoast, and the gentleman from Kansas would like to see them junked in order that the mechanics will come home. That is a proposition that we men of the Mississippi Valley have go to work out. The transportation of skilled labor to the seaboard and the impoverishment of the Central States of skilled labor will reach farther than the end of this war. Some time you men of the Mississippi Valley will awake to that fact. Piling up all of the skill of the Nation on the coast line because of the freight congestion will have its effect long after the war is over, and it is up to us to see to it that as much as possible of the manufacturing for the war shall be done at the homes of the mechanics where they are now located.

These buildings will be junked, many of them. But in Washington the clerk who works in a department is just as much a Government employee as a mechanic who is going to help build a ship at a seaport. The employer of the mechanics comes to Washington and says that "we can't house the men, and if we can't house the men we can't work." The Government says, "All right, here are $50,000,000, we will do it for you." That same man comes here as a Government clerk on the same salary and he goes to look at some house and says, "I will give you $5," and another man says, "I will give $1 more," and so they bid against each other, and the same man who always gets the highest price he can for his pork gets up on the floor here and tells the man who takes the highest price he can get for his room or house that he is a profiteer and a thief.

Now, that is the plain, blunt fact about it. There is no need of trying to camouflage around here about the people of Washington being grafters, and they being patriots. I have not heard of any man coming in here and saying that he will take a lower price than he can get. I have got stock on the market, or will have, and I expect to sell it for the highest figure that I can get out of it. If I did not, I could not raise any stock next year. That is the situation. I have not heard any members of the committee whom I happen to know are rather extensive stock and cattle feeders—I have not heard them complain that hogs are 18 cents and asking the Government to compel the farmers to put it down to 16 cents. That is all there is to this thing. Gentlemen, you are attempting to do just what you tried to do in the food bill. You are trying to control the law of supply and demand by legislative enactment, and it can not be done. Mr. Hoover scolded and stormed about profiteering for six months, and eggs just kept going up until it got so that you could not pay a lady a greater compliment than to call her a hen. That was equivalent to calling her the bird of paradise. But eggs kept going up, and the spring time came. Then the American hen, who never heard of Hoover, because she had eggs in her system, simply took off her coat and went to laying and cackling, and eggs have gone down 40 cents a dozen in four weeks—without any talk of profiteering at all, and the American hen beat Hoover's argument on profiteering. Now, the thing you are trying to do here is a physical impossibility, and this Congress, more than any other Congress, I presume, will tackle more absolutely absurd legislation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] bases his argument, as it seems to me, on this proposition on the supposition that everyone in the United States is seeking to get the highest price he can for his product, whatever it may be. I call attention to the significant fact that liberty bonds bearing 3½ per cent interest and liberty bonds bearing only 4 per cent interest have been sold by the billions, when patriotic Americans throughout this land could go into the market and get 6 and 7 per cent for their money.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not now.

Mr. MEEKER. In connection with that, I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. DEMPSEY. One moment. There is no doubt about the fact that the Americans are proving themselves a patriotic people. There is no question that here you have a genuine grievance with which to deal, and the only question is this: With rents raised to an unconscionable degree, with a condition which brought it about naturally, the question is, Shall the Congress of the United States legislate wisely or unwisely; shall we legislate in anger or shall we legislate wisely and with discretion. Here is a problem. Can it be dealt with wisely or not? It is not a simple problem; it is a very difficult problem. At the outset comes the question of price fixing. Everyone admits that price fixing should be avoided as far as possible. Everyone admits that we should resort to price fixing only when it is necessary. Everyone admits that if you can remedy this evil without going any further into that question than is absolutely necessary you are acting the part of wisdom. Let us see the principle of the two bills proposed here and see whether the one or the other comes within that rule. The bill proposed by the majority of the committee affects all rents. That is your first proposition. It deals with all rents alike. It is obvious that in both particulars it is wrong. You should not deal with rents except in cases where the rents have been extortionate and unjust. That is plain. We will all admit that. You should not deal with all rents alike because conditions vary. That is obvious and simple. What then is the principle of the Tinkham bill? The principle of the Tinkham bill is this, that you shall deal with rents only in cases where there are complaints. There will be complaints wherever there should be, you may depend upon that. Of course, there is a genuine grievance; of course, there have been a multitude of wrongs committed; of course, those wrongs should be, so far as we can wisely and discreetly and with all due observance of rules of wise legislation, remedied, but we should be careful not to be carried away, not to do something that is unwise, not to legislate in anger.

Let us take the principle of the committee bill. If you are going to pass that bill you can amend it in this way. You can amend it by saying that the man who owns the property shall have permission to fix the rent, and at the same time you can revise the rent by a rent administrator as provided in the Tinkham bill. If the landlord insists on a rent above that which the rent administrator finds to be just and reasonable and fair under all the circumstances, to be exercised only upon complaint, then you can tax him the amount of the excess. I do not say that this legislation, take it all in all, is wise legislation. I do not say that we ought to pass it. I do say that the whole realm of this question is filled with doubt; but I do say, if we are going to pass any legislation, let us do it on the principle of the Tinkham bill, or let us reform the present bill to meet the suggestions that I have made. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close with the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close at the expiration of two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I made a few remarks a short time ago touching one phase of this amendment. I have since that time prepared an amendment in line with those remarks and have sent it to the Clerk's desk, and I would like to have five minutes to explain just what it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment which is now pending and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes, 2 minutes to be used by the gentleman who has the floor, 5 minutes to be used by the gentleman who will propose the amendment, and 5 minutes by myself, if I shall see fit to use it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to make a few remarks in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] on this proposition, and I would like to have five minutes for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then I add five minutes to my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 17 minutes; 2 minutes to be used by the gentleman from New York who has now the floor [Mr. DEMPSEY], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], and 5 minutes by the chairman of the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. MEEKER. Inasmuch as the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the question. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEEKER. I would like, inasmuch as the gentleman admitted at the beginning I did not quite appreciate the patriotism of the country as I should, and referred to liberty bonds——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I should prefer the gentleman to ask the question.

Mr. MEEKER. I am going to ask it. Why was the first liberty bond sold at 3½, the second at 4 per cent, and the next at 4¼ per cent, and they are now below par? Why does not patriotism keep them up?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The reason was simply this: When you sold your first bonds you sold them to the richest country in the world, with its coffers overflowing, and they took those bonds simply from that surplus; and when you came to the second bonds, you went about among the people of the country—here, there, and everywhere—and you said to the man who had a little and you said to the man who even did not have that little but hoped to get it, "You borrow and subscribe to the bond. You will have to pay more, perhaps, for your interest upon the investment while you are paying the principal, but you will be doing a patriotic duty; you are supporting the soldier at the front; you are helping to wage a war in which your country is right." It was that which induced the increase in the rate—it was all those circumstances. All wars tend to increase rates from the first loan until the last, but we believe that through the loans and the sacrifices which the people will make they will gain a great and glorious victory. [Applause.]

Mr. MEEKER. Why did not that keep them at par?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FRENCH to the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Strike out the first four words of line 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The real property and 50 per cent of the value of the furniture," so that the amendment as amended would read:

"If no such income was charged or received during said period of 18 months, then the deduction from such gross income of each taxable year shall be an amount equal to 10 per cent of the value of the real property and 50 per cent of the value of the furniture, if any, producing the income," etc.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I think the members of the committee as a whole realize that there is a condition here that is serious and that we must meet. Undoubtedly profiteering has been indulged in by certain householders. On the other hand, if we leave the language of the amendment as it was originally proposed, we will discourage the renting of furnished houses to such an extent that they will not be rented in any adequate degree, and many of those renting them now will close out as soon as they can get rid of their tenants, unless patriotism will require them to do at a great sacrifice that which they would do in continuing to rent furnished houses. The amendment that I have proposed does not disturb the original proposition so far as the real property is concerned. It leaves that at 10 per cent. It does, however, provide that to the extent of 50 per cent per annum the householder may receive compensation for the furniture that he will place in his property. This, gentlemen, is about the price that existed prior to the war in this country. It is about the price that obtains in New York or St. Louis or Chicago or in any other city. It is about the price that would obtain if a man who wants to rent property would rent an unfurnished house and then rent his furniture from a furniture store and place it himself in the apartment or house rented. A gentleman a little while ago, when I spoke on this subject, suggested that a furnished apartment of five or six rooms would not cost to furnish, say, more than about $150 or $200. If this is so, then the amount that the householder could receive for the $150 during the first year would be $75, or an additional amount of $6.25 a month during the period of the year. The people who come to this District from the State of Idaho, I think, are not looking for unfurnished houses. They are looking for furnished houses. They do not know how long they will remain. Most of them are men with small families or detached people who come here and who merely expect to be here for a temporary period. That being the case, they would prefer to pay a few dollars per month extra to have a furnished apartment that they could leave when the period of their service here was over without being bothered by owning furniture. It will be to their interest to pass my amendment.

If we leave the language of the bill as it is you will undoubtedly discourage the householder in renting his furnished apartment and there will be no inducement for him to continue housing our Government employees and rendering a great help to the city at this time and the country, as well as a tremendous accommodation to the employees who are coming here to do the Government's work. I surmise that the condition that exists with respect to those who have come to the District of Columbia from Idaho is not different from the condition that exists with respect to men and women who have come to the District from other States of this Union. Let me again refer to just my illustration. Here is an apartment that the householder is willing to rent for $40 a month, unfurnished. He is willing, however, to rent that apartment furnished for $65 per month, which the tenant says is a reasonable price for him to pay. Under the terms of this bill you say to the householder, "You may rent this apartment for $40 a month unfurnished or you may rent it for $45 a month furnished." I submit that few householders will be willing to rent their property if we permit the language of the bill to remain as it is.

And I submit further that the language of the amendment that I have proposed brings to us to-day about the same condition as regards furnished apartments and houses and the rentals of the same that existed prior to the declaration of war and that also obtains in other cities throughout the country.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have wondered somewhat since this discussion started whether perhaps my interest in it was as broad minded as the interests of a man ought to be in approaching a question like this as a Member of the House, on account of some unfortunate personal experiences of my own. But I have tried to divest my mind of any feeling of that kind, if I have any. It occurs to me that many of us are not looking at this matter just exactly from the right viewpoint.

In the first place, this place was selected to be the seat of the Government of the United States. A great part of the expenditures that have been made in this District have been made by the people of the United States, who are now engaged in this war. Some time ago I took occasion to look back through the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury in order to try to find out how much we have spent—the people of the United States—in this District, and I found we had appropriated and that there has been used in this District, out of taxes that the people of the United States have paid approximately $375,000,000 since the formation of the District. We spent that money here. It has been spent by the people of the United States. Now, the people are in a great war. From year to year the residents of this District have come in here; they have established their businesses; they have built their houses here; and they have been living as the result of the bounty of the people of the United States, and they are living that way now. [Applause.]

Talk about profiteering, gentlemen. I know there is profiteering here. I know there is one standard for men like you and me and another standard for our secretaries. To illustrate that I will relate a little experience of my own. Some time ago I had to send my children to school. It cost me $18 to have two of them vaccinated. My secretary went to an equally good physician and got his children vaccinated for $2. And the same thing is true throughout the whole realm of prices. I have taken particular interest in figuring up the prices for groceries in this town, and I have taken the prices from New York, from Fort Worth, Tex., from St. Paul, Chicago, and other great cities of the country—I have them in my office, but not knowing this discussion would arise I do not have them here—and I found that the prices of delivered groceries in the city of Washington to-day will average 33⅓ per cent higher than in any other place in the United States of anything equal the size of Washington. They are taking advantage of this situation to put up the rents to the people who come here. Members of Congress and officials of the Government are only here because this is where they must perform their official duties. They have no choice as to where they shall reside.

I want to say that I think these stenographers and clerks who come here are sacrificing a great deal to be here. I have heard something said about their being here because they want to better their condition. I do not think so. I think many of them are here because they want to be here, but there are many of them imbued with the same idea as the boys that go out to serve and want to do their bit. I know of many girls from my district who are here to-day and who are not getting as much as they would get at home.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] made an argument that appealed to me somewhat until I got to thinking about it. He spoke about the price of hogs and the price of live stock in comparison with real estate prices. The situation is different. The real estate that is here was here before the war; the taxes on it are no more to-day and it costs no more to maintain, and yet the prices have risen from 50 to 300 per cent; while the man who raises live stock on the farm finds his original investment has increased and the cost of feeding his stock for the market is much higher than originally.

It is a different proposition to pay a dollar and a half a bushel for corn with which to feed cattle and other live stock than to pay 50 cents. And I have found from my experience in the country districts that the man who is raising live stock at the present time is not making very much profit on the stuff that he raises in comparison with the prices other people are getting for the stuff that they raise or have to sell. And it occurs to me in the consideration of this question that these rents ought to be curbed within reasonable lines, in order that the people who come here and have to stay here ought not to be compelled to pay exorbitant prices for the services they are getting that do not cost more than the same services cost before the war.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to say, but I must say that I do not believe that anybody ought to vote for an amendment allowing a man in one year to collect 50 per cent from a wage earner for the furniture which that wage earner may use during the year. Everyone here knows that furniture does not wear out in two years, and to allow the landlord to collect the full value of furniture in two years' time would be an outrage on the wage earners who would be compelled to pay for it. A thousand dollars' worth of furniture is exempt from taxation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, before a vote is taken on this amendment I believe it would be proper for the Committee of the Whole to revert to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. It was discussed back and forth as to whether or not "18" ought to be changed to "12." I believe that the gentleman has concluded that the change should be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield on the pending proposition, because the time is limited? I would like to direct an inquiry as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], if the gentleman will permit. The time is only limited on the pending proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection to substituting "25 per cent" instead of "50 per cent"? The idea comes to me that where a person purchases furniture for the convenience of some temporary dweller here, with the depreciation of the personal property, if he sells that, there would not be a sufficient return to him by allowing only 10 per cent on the furniture, whereas, taking depreciation into consideration, with 25 per cent there would be an incentive to him to furnish the apartment for the temporary sojourner who does not wish to furnish the apartment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that most of these apartments are not furnished with new furniture. Most of it is bought down here at the second-hand stores.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a great depreciation in furniture, as we all know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish to comply with the unanimous-consent arrangement had a few moments ago—that the debate on this close—but I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have the right to perfect his amendment, because the amendment which I just offered uses the word "eighteen" instead of "twelve," believing that the gentleman's amendment would not be adopted.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a second?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will if I have time. I ask that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] be permitted to have his amendment adopted by unanimous consent, to change "eighteen" where it appears to "twelve," so that it can be considered without prejudice to the other agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this the amendment that was withdrawn once to-day?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. The gentleman from Michigan offered it and withdrew it.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the gentleman from Michigan offers it again. Without objection, the amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAPES: Strike out the words "18 months" wherever they appear, in section 2, and insert "12 months."

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to change that amendment somewhat. In line 20, where the words "18 months" appear, those words should be stricken out. The words "or 18 months" should be stricken out and the word "or" placed before the word "year."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. MAPES: Page 2, line 20, after the word "month," in line 20, insert the word "or," and strike out after the word "year" the words "or 18 months."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Now, Mr. Chairman, a further amendment, striking out the words "18 months," in line 22, on the same page.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And substituting "12 months"?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; substituting "12 months" for "18 months."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second amendment offered by Mr. MAPES: Page 2, line 22, strike out the word "eighteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in that connection?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no debate on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that this is a separate amendment entirely. This has nothing to do with the agreement that was had a while ago about the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, we are all agreed as to the amendment just adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish the gentleman to address himself to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to obtain the opinion of the gentleman from Michigan, whether, if "12 months" be substituted for "18 months," as now proposed, the time of September 30 as the date would be applicable? Here you add under your first amendment that these excess incomes should only be levied from and after April 1. Now you seek to make the standard of your computation a period of time on the 12 months preceding September 30, 1916. Is that your idea? Is it your idea to have September 30, 1916, as the limit for the basis of the year computation of income?

Mr. MAPES. My amendment made no attempt to change the basis for the rent. My amendment simply did away with the retroactive feature of the law, but allowed the same prewar period for determining the proper rent as contained in the bill, and that is the period before September 30, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change the word "eighteen," in the first line of the amendment I offered, to "twelve," in order to fit the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. STAFFORD. To offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. Without objection, the Clerk will report the two amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Strike out all of lines 5 to 10, inclusive, on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "If no such income was charged or received during said period of 12 months, then the deduction from such gross income of each taxable year shall be an amount equal to 10 per cent of the value of the property, including furniture, if any, producing the income as determined by the assessor of the District of Columbia for the purposes of this act, and at the same rate for any greater or less period of time: Provided, however, That in cases of such last-named property where the landlord furnishes heat, light, or elevator service an additional deduction of an amount equal to the actual cost to the landlord of the heat, light, and elevator service so furnished shall be allowed."

Amendment of Mr. FRENCH to the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Strike out, in the fourth line of the Johnson amendment, the words "the property including furniture" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the real property and 50 per cent of the value of the furniture."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for the amendment just read the following:

The real property and 25 per cent of the value of the furniture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD moves to amend the amendment of Mr. FRENCH by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five," so that it will read "the real property and 25 per cent of the value of the furniture."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he has offered that as an amendment to my amendment or to the amendment to my amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is offered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho, so as to get it before the committee.

Mr. MEEKER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, debate is closed on the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed by unanimous consent. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) there were—ayes 19, noes 21.

Accordingly the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FRENCH) there were—ayes 15, noes 25.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, to come in at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: At the end of section 2, on page 4, insert the following:

"In cases where a charge is made for the use of real estate, furnished or unfurnished, and for food, meals, or board, it shall be the duty of the assessor of the District of Columbia to ascertain what proportion of the total increase in the charge for the combined accommodations furnished to any person is due to the increased cost of materials and labor utilized in furnishing such accommodations, and the remainder of the increase in the charge made to any person for the combined accommodations furnished him shall be regarded for the purposes of this act as increase in the income from the real estate used by such persons."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the purpose of the amendment is to take care of those cases of rentals where not only is a charge made for rental of the room, but for board as well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I gather the intent, from the reading of the amendment, to be to have the local assessor determine the various elements of cost in proportion to the whole rent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill does not use the assessor in his capacity as assessor in any way, but just selects that individual to determine these questions.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is he a sort of an arbiter or judge to pass upon the amount?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; to apportion the amount between board and room.

Mr. TINKHAM. I should like to ask the honorable gentleman from Kentucky how the assessor could do that, on what theory he could apportion what would be the elements, outside of his own bare arbitrary judgment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say in answer to the gentleman that it is fully set out in the amendment, and it becomes quite an easy matter for the assessor, acting as arbiter, to find out what is correct for the rental of the room, under the basis laid down in the bill, and then the rest of the charge is for board.

Mr. TINKHAM. I ask by what elements he is going to make a decision that is not purely arbitrary and personal?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The value is ascertained in this instance just as it is in all other instances. The bill lays down the premises upon which the value of the income from the room is ascertained, and after that has been ascertained, then the rest of the charge is for board.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. On the matter just passed the landlord is allowed to charge 10 per cent on the value of the furniture. Is that it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. So that if a man paid $30 at a furniture store for a bed, he could rent it for 10 per cent of $30, which would be $3 a year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. And he could get his money back for the bed in 10 years?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. I have in my house some beds that are more than 100 years old, and they are just as good now as they were a hundred years ago.

Mr. MEEKER. Are they assessed at the original cost?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know what they cost, but I will assure the gentleman that they are assessed high enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have an amendment which has been sent to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. An amendment to the section as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized later.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have been endeavoring to understand the purport of the amendment that has just been offered. I will admit that I am pretty dense, but it looks to me that if a man is paying a hundred dollars a month for his room and board the landlord or the assessor who goes around must say that $50 of that is for board and $50 is for the rent of the room, and that on the $50 for the room there is to be a certain tax and on the $50 for board there is to be some other kind of a tax. I take it that is the purpose of the amendment. Now, if there is any one thing that has varied in cost it is food. There is no question about the increased price of food outside the District. It applies just as much outside the District as in the District. Let me illustrate: Last year the market price of loins, the wholesale price, was 30 cents a pound. Two years before that you could buy the best loins in the neighborhood for 15 to 18 cents a pound. I was told the other day that the price now is 42 cents a pound.

A few moments ago a gentleman told me that he priced some oranges down town and they were 8 cents apiece. Oranges run from 150 to 210 in a box, and if the man growing them in Florida could get $3 a box for all that he raises he would get rich. So that what he gets 2 cents apiece for probably the retailer here is getting 6½ to 8 cents. The same applies to every commodity we have to buy.

Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky in all fairness how often this assessor that is going to make these prices would go around and vary these rates between the room and the board proposition which he is endeavoring to separate in this amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My answer is that he would not have to go but once. He would fix the value of the room on that one trip, but he would not interfere with the price of food thereafter, because there is no provision here that would warrant him in doing so. The bill of fare at the hotels would show what they were charging for food.

Mr. TREADWAY. Not necessarily; there are two ways of charging for food at a hotel. Some charge on the American plan and others on the European plan. I am asking for information, but I do not think the gentleman has furnished me with any more than he did this morning when I was anxious to get some.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman believe that I could ever answer any question that he put to me so that he would vote for this bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; because I must say that I never saw a more foolish piece of legislation than this that the gentleman has brought in to us to-day. We are entitled to information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman knows more about what concerns the hotels here than I do, and I am going to accept what he says, and I ask him to accept the fact that I have information on other subjects.

Mr. TREADWAY. I was trying to get information, but the gentleman did not get very far in giving it to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Massachusetts limits it to fixing the price of rooms and meals at a hotel, and I am endeavoring to go further than that.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I am taking it in a broader view than that. I do not live at a hotel myself, and I am not vitally interested in this matter. I do know something about the cost of food in hotels, and I am taking it in the broad sense and trying to secure information that the gentleman has, and how extensive this so-called profiteering in the District is. The only reply I have received from the gentleman was that he did not believe the evidence of a reputable organization as submitted to his committee. That was the extent of the information that I secured.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman referred to the difference in the price of loins. I presume the gentleman referred to that to show that the landlord was justified in increasing the price of board on account of the difference in the cost of living?

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no question about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is the price of wheat any higher this year than it was last year?

Mr. TREADWAY. Under the law the minimum price of wheat has been regulated; I do not know whether the maximum price has been raised or not. I believe there is no limit to it. This is an attempt to establish a maximum price irrespective of cost.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does this mean that the assessor has got to ask the landlord whether he gave his customer loin, pork chops, or tenderloin?

Mr. TREADWAY. He would have to proceed in just that way?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. TINKHAM. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how much time he thinks we ought to have on this?

Mr. TINKHAM. I think we ought to discuss this amendment, which is very important and very vital, for at least 20 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman claim under the rules that he is entitled to that time?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will also say that there are other Members who have other amendments. I do not think it is fair to close debate as soon as that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts to have 8 minutes and I to have 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts to have 8 minutes and he to have 2 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I want to read this amendment to the House and then comment on it. It says:

> In cases where the charge is made for the use of real estate, furnished or unfurnished, and for food, meals, or board, it shall be the duty of the assessor of the District of Columbia to ascertain what proportion of the total increase that has been charged for the combined accommodations furnished to any person is due to the increased cost of materials and labor utilized in furnishing such accommodations, and the remainder of the increase in the charge made to any one person for the combined accommodations furnished him shall be regarded for the purposes of this act as an increase in the income from the real estate used by such person.

Now, the only possible thing that any assessor could do if this amendment were adopted would be, in the case of each particular hotel and each individual who furnished rooms and board, to go to the hotel or individual and find out what the hotel keeper or boarding-house keeper had paid for the food and what that element of cost was. Some people buy at one market, others buy at another market, some buy at wholesale, and some at retail. It would be absolutely impossible for any figure to be set except in individual cases, and, in the first place, the assessor could not arrive at a decision probably for two years on all of the hotels and lodging houses, of which there are hundreds, that render this service in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would the gentleman object to that delay?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to any delay in this bill, as I am utterly opposed to it, believing it to be unsound, unworkable, and unthinkable as being passed by this House. There is a substitute bill which, as the committee knows, I am to offer later, which meets the situation and which is practical to prevent unfair profiteering in the District of Columbia. I had made up my mind not to enter into a discussion of this bill until I offered my substitute bill, but when such an amendment as this is offered, so utterly unworkable and impractical, I can not restrain myself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Perhaps the gentleman is suffering from shell shock and can not understand that.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether the gentleman agrees with the idea of the chairman of the committee that the assessor would have to make only one visit to find out?

Mr. TINKHAM. Under this amendment the assessor would have to assess in accordance with the changes in the cost of the food every 24 hours, the rate that could be charged for the rooms, for as the price of food changed he could not increase his price for food and lodgings without having a reapportionment; otherwise he might exceed what the law would allow.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. At 10 per cent of the cost of the bed for the year, would that pay for the laundering of the linen? That is, if you changed the linen once a year? [Laughter.]

Mr. TINKHAM. I think the honorable Representative from Massachusetts, my colleague [Mr. TREADWAY], who is a hotel man of national fame and distinction and who has been president of the New England Hotel Men's Association, can speak with more authority in relation to that matter than I.

Mr. TREADWAY. Not in relation to the once-a-year change. I do not know about that kind.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment, which I think I have demonstrated is impossible of application and absurd, will not be adopted even to this very impractical bill.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to say more than a word or two in regard to the pending amendment. It seems to me that if there is any section of the bill that could be of some use in the District of Columbia, this proposed section would be the one. When this bill was under consideration two weeks ago we were told how the landlords were going to kick everybody out, if they were required to accept a reasonable return for the use of their premises, but it is not likely that hotel keepers because they are confined to a reasonable return, namely, the rent that they were getting in the prewar period plus 10 per cent, are going to turn anyone out or refuse to take anyone in. The amendment if adopted will unmask a lot of people who, under the guise of an increased charge for board and meals, are getting a great deal more rent for their rooms than they had been getting during the prewar period. In brief, what has been happening is this: Where they received perhaps forty or fifty dollars a month for a room at a hotel, and $50 a month for the meals, in order now to meet the situation with which they are confronted in this bill, they are saying that all of the increase is due to the increase in the cost of furnishing the meals. If that is a fact, it is an easy matter to ascertain it. The assessor can look at the man's books and determine immediately; he can look at the bills and find out what the cost of the service and the food he is serving has been, and the difference properly distributed can easily be determined and regarded as the increased rent they are charging for the use of the room or rooms. We might as well tear the mask off these gentlemen and call a spade a spade. What they are doing, under the guise of increasing the charge for board and meals, is in reality increasing the charge for the use of their rooms, and this would prevent them from doing that.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman an amendment to offer?

Mr. FRENCH. I have no amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I think there is one thing that has not been taken into account, in spite of the fact the chairman of the committee admitted having a hundred-year-old bed. Ten per cent on the cost of a bed—$30—would be $3 a year; 25 cents a month for laundry and all. The 100-year-old bed may be worth something to the gentleman who owns it, but, on the average, bedding and mattresses and things of that sort that are used generally after two or three years are not quite what they should be, and I doubt very seriously whether the gentleman from Kentucky would care to go into a room that had not had a new bed or new mattress in it for 10 years or more. Now, of course, the increase in population in that bed in 10 years' time is something that people who had anything to do with that bed would not value, and the greater the population the less the bed is worth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say the gentleman's information on that subject is far superior to mine.

Mr. MEEKER. That may be. I have traveled over the country somewhat. The gentleman always stays at home, and is fortunate at that. But when we talk about the general use of household furniture by people who are compelled to live in congested quarters, as they are with these conditions here, and talk about allowing only 10 per cent rental on the furniture which, if we purchased it new and attempted to resell it the second day, you could not get more than 50 per cent of what you paid for it—the very fact that it becomes second-hand furniture by virtue of that depreciation. This proposition is absolutely too silly, and to ask people here to take care of their homes, to take care of their linens and bedding, however, that part of the bill is on a par and parity with the rest, as far as that is concerned. The intention of the bill may be good, but when we talk about saying to people who will furnish their homes—and we ask that they do it; we are insisting that they shall open their homes for people who want them, that they shall have some sort of furniture there besides soap boxes on which to make their toilet dressing, etc.—we men on the floor of this House are only making ourselves ridiculous in the eyes not only of the people here but of the country to talk about such absurd charge as that.

Now, I do not know whether the gentleman from Kentucky has rented any rooms or not. I do not know whether he has a room to spare in his house. If he has I do not know what he would charge for it, but is it not a fair proposition that if he has a room to rent and has not rented it——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why not?

Mr. MEEKER. Why not? That is the only question that comes, If he has not, why not? Now, when we are going to talk about what we are doing to the other fellow or for the other fellow, how are we doing in our own affairs? Is every Member of Congress here who has any rooms to rent renting them? Are there any Members of Congress who are willing to rent their rooms for $5 a week and furnish them and put in new bedding and everything of that sort? I do not think there is a man here who would think of it for a minute, and yet we come here and want to get as good quarters as we possibly can at the least money we can, and if we have a spare room, keep it, while we say to the other man, "You go out and fit up a room, spend $150 or $200 on that room, and rent it at 10 per cent of the cost of the furniture. That is all you will get."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman seems to forget there is an allowance here of 15 per cent over and above.

Mr. MEEKER. I do not forget that, but 15 per cent will not take care of it. There is another thing has been said by my good friend from Illinois which has gone unchallenged up to the present time. I do not think there is any man who has employed domestic labor in Washington who will say you can keep a house now for what you could before the increase here. I was talking to a man only yesterday, he is using his rooms for leasing, and when he went to bring back an old cook he was told that she was getting $20 per week at a restaurant and $2 a day in tips.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand how the committee harmonizes this paragraph with the preceding paragraph. The amendment that I proposed to the last paragraph would have retained in the bill 10 per cent upon the value of the real property and given to the householder 50 per cent during the year on the value of the furniture.

If that amendment had prevailed I should have proposed a similar amendment to this paragraph, but apparently the committee is not disposed to accept that view of the situation. However, there is a remarkable difference between the conditions under this paragraph and under the last paragraph. Under this paragraph if a householder did not rent his house furnished prior to a couple of years ago and furnishes it now and then rents it furnished he may receive, not 10 per cent on the value of his house and his furniture, but 15 per cent on the value of his house and his furniture. In other words, I suppose that the 10 per cent on the value of his house may be regarded as an offset to the 10 per cent under the preceding paragraph that he may receive on the value of his house. The other 5 per cent on the value of his house must be charged up, then, as an extra inducement to the householder to furnish his apartment or his house.

The chairman of the committee said he was opposed to a proposition that would permit a householder to earn 50 per cent of the value of his furniture in one year. Here is a proposition that may permit the householder to earn 100 per cent on the value of his furniture in one year. How? If the value of the furniture is 5 per cent only, or even more than 5 per cent, of the value of his house, then the privilege of charging 15 per cent instead of 10 per cent on the house itself permits the householder to buy his furniture and more than pay for it within one year.

Going further, there is an inducement in this paragraph to every householder to furnish his house as cheaply as he can, because of the extra rate or increase in his profits on the house itself instead of upon the furniture.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: Pages 1, 2, 3, and 4, after the word "the," line 14, strike out "deductions herein allowed" and insert "reasonable rent thereof to be fixed as hereby provided"; line 16, beginning with "deducted," strike out the balance of the section and insert in place thereof the following: "appointed a rent administrator, who shall, upon complaint of the lessee of any real estate that the rent exacted of him is unjust and excessive, find and fix the reasonable rent of such real estate, whose decision, except it is and until reversed as hereinafter provided, shall be final.

"That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a rent administrator, who shall be a citizen of the United States and resident of the District of Columbia.

"That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a board of rent appeals, consisting of three persons, who shall be citizens of the United States and residents of the District of Columbia. Said board of rent appeals shall have the power to hear and determine any appeal from any order of the rent administrator authorized under section 2 of this act, and said board of rent appeals shall have power, upon consideration of such appeal, by its order, to affirm or reverse the order of the rent administrator, and in case of reversal thereof to increase, diminish, or otherwise modify the amount of rent fixed in the order of the rent administrator, and the amount so fixed in the order of the board of rent appeals shall be considered to be and be the reasonable amount of rent of the real estate affected thereby until the same shall be, upon new facts or other conditions, again changed and fixed by order of the rent administrator or the board of rent appeals, as the case may be."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, because it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The object of this section, section 2, is simply to tax rents in the District of Columbia upon a basis to be fixed by that section, and the amendment simply varies the way in which the amount of rent which shall be made subject to taxation, or rather how the amount of the tax shall be ascertained. It is precisely the same provision, only reached in another way.

In the bill it is provided that any rent in excess of 10 per cent beyond the rent which was paid at a certain date, April 1, 1918, shall be, all of it, taken for taxation purposes; shall, in other words, be a tax. I say in my provision that this rent, beyond a reasonable amount to be ascertained by an administrator to be appointed by the President, shall be taxed. In other words, we reach the same result by a different route. The first is by the 10 per cent route. Mine is on the reasonable-amount basis, to be fixed by the administrator to be appointed by the President.

It is precisely the same thing ascertained in a different way.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman's amendment, as I understand, creates a board. Now, is there anything in this bill that provides anything of the kind? Is it the gentleman's opinion that an amendment creating a board of rents, or an administrator of rents and a board to hear complaints, is germane to a bill of this kind?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will say, if the Chair please, in answer to the gentleman's question, two things. I will say, first, that his question goes to only a small portion of this amendment, and that the Chair can rule, if need be, on that part separately. I will say, secondly, that the Chair has just ruled that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, of a similar nature as to an assessor, is valid and is in point.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman may be right, that it is a small part of it, in his judgment. But that small part may be such as to make it offensive to the rule of being germane. There is nothing in this bill providing for a board of appeals or a rent administrator. Now, if he can change the aspects of the bill entirely by putting in such language as that it is a strange thing under the rules of the House. It is not germane to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I feel quite sure that if you will read the rule laid down on page 343 there is no sort of question as to the fact that the amendment is not germane. It has only a pretense of color to be germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule to which the chairman of the committee calls the Chair's attention reads as follows:

No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The bill under consideration provides for raising revenue, levying an income tax. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] proposes to regulate and control the matter of the collection of rents——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no. The amendment proposes that it shall be assessed in a different manner. It does not propose to regulate rents at all. It proposes, in order to ascertain what the amount of the tax shall be, that there shall be a rent administrator appointed, who shall find and fix a reasonable rent, and any rent imposed beyond a reasonable rent shall be taxed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is a clear case of substituting a board here, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without discussing it further, the Chair is clearly of the impression that it is not germane. It is legislation on a subject entirely different from that in the bill. The point of order is therefore sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the Chair please, I will appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair. As many as favor sustaining the decision of the Chair and having his decision stand as the judgment of the committee will please say "aye."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky and Mr. FOSTER demanded a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee devided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is determined to sustain the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have taken up but little time of this committee, and I wish to offer an amendment and I wish to discuss that amendment some. It is possible that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARDY: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the term 'real estate' as herein used shall be construed to include lands, buildings, parts of buildings, houses, dwellings, apartments——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I think the Clerk has read far enough so that I may make the point of order——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think we ought to have the amendment read.

Mr. HARDY. I do not wish to take up much time. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order and let me have five minutes to present my proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves the point of order. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARDY: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the term 'real estate' as herein used shall be construed to include lands, buildings, parts of buildings, houses, dwellings, apartments, rooms, suites of rooms, and every improvement and structure whatsoever, or any part thereof, upon land.

"Second. That for the purpose of securing necessary housing for employees of the Government at fair and reasonable rates and charges the President of the United States is authorized to appoint a rent administrator and, through such administrator, fix the reasonable rental value of any real estate within the District of Columbia which may be taken for the use of employees of the Government.

"Third. That the President of the United States may take for the use of such employees any real estate within said District whenever, in his judgment, the said real estate is needed for housing such employees, upon payment to the owner thereof of the sum fixed by said rent administrator as the rental value thereof: Provided, That no private residence or any part thereof occupied by the owner shall be taken without the consent of the owner: And provided further, That if the owner of any real estate taken under this act shall not agree to accept such sum as full compensation for the use of his property, such owner shall be paid 75 per cent of the rental value fixed by the rent administrator and may bring suit against the United States in any court of general jurisdiction in the District of Columbia for any additional sum claimed by him for compensation."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to present this amendment in order to explain my view of this legislation. I do not believe that this Congress sits here for the purpose of preventing one millionaire from New York being imposed upon by another millionaire in Washington as to the price of his room rent and hotel bills, but I do believe that this Congress is earnestly concerned in securing housing for the employees of the Government at reasonable cost. I believe that for that purpose the Government has the right to take over any property that it sees proper to take, at prices reasonably fixed as fair rental value. My amendment provides the President may appoint a rent administrator, and that the rent administrator shall determine the rental value of property to be taken, and if the property owner shall disagree to that, he is given the usual remedy—to appeal to the courts. I say if he declines to accept the rental sum fixed by the administrator as full compensation, then pay him 75 per cent of that sum, as we have done in all the other commandeering propositions submitted to this Congress, and then give him the right to go into court and obtain just compensation if what is fixed is not just. It seems to me that this bill as framed by the committee is destructive of all ideas of property rights. I do not speak of its being undemocratic or unrepublican. It simply destroys the foundation of all property in this country. When you start with rents in general in this city you will go to rents in general in all cities, and you will quickly go to all other business or private interests. You can not draw a distinction between this and the fixing of the prices of shoes, either in justice or in policy. But if the Government wants to commandeer any property here, in order to provide reasonable quarters for its employees whom it must have, give it the authority, and then provide for just compensation as you do in everything else. [Applause.] I have stated what will prompt my vote, and I say that neither the Tinkham bill nor this bill under consideration comes within the purview of the teachings that I have had all my life as to property rights. [Applause.] Yet I know that the demagogue may attack me, because he will say I am unwilling to tear down high prices here in Washington. I am willing to treat Washington as I treat the world. I am willing to treat Washington as I treat my home town, and I am unwilling to go into my home town and fix a price on every item there. I am unwilling to go onto the farm and fix the price of the private property of the farmer, to say that he shall sell his mule to his neighbor for $100, and that if he sells for more we will tax him 100 per cent of the excess and give the purchaser a right to sue him and recover from him twice the amount paid in excess of $100. "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured unto you." What we do to Washington or here in Washington we should be willing to have done to us at our homes. If the Government needs housing, let it take it and pay just compensation under the principles that our fathers established in the founding of this Government. [Applause.] If the Government needs anything I have, let it take it in the same way. I would protect all employees brought here by our war emergencies. I denounce all profiteering at the expense of the Government, and I denounce all conspiracies and combinations to rob the Government or to raise prices and rob the public, but what we have to do with what a wealthy citizen who wants to spend the winter in Washington shall pay to another wealthy citizen as rent for his home here in Washington I fail to see.

My amendment would provide for taking private property for public uses upon just compensation, and, if need be, I will go further and vote for an appropriation to build houses for Government employees, and I will vote to make it a crime for men to combine or conspire to raise prices, either of rents or other property; but the bill presented by the committee destroys all rights of private property, and I can not vote for it. [Applause.] That is all I wish to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order; and since the gentleman from Texas practically concedes that the amendment is subject to the point of order, I do not care to argue it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard?

Mr. HARDY. I shall not take up time on the point of order except to say that the purpose of this bill is to regulate rents. The purpose of my amendment is to regulate rents. If the purpose being the same does not make my amendment germane, then I have nothing further to say. I am not a parliamentarian.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the bill speaks for itself. It is a bill to raise revenue and not a bill to regulate rents.

Mr. HARDY. The bill is also a bill to regulate rents by providing that one who pays rent may sue for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without discussing the matter, it is exactly the same proposition submitted to the Chair a few minutes ago, and the Chair makes the same ruling and sustains the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he expects to finish this bill to-night?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If no other amendments are offered and the Clerk is permitted to read right along, I do not see why we should not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 15 and 16, after the word "increase," strike out the words "to 15 per cent" and insert the words "by 15 per cent of the value of the furnishings."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the chairman of the committee as to one or two matters of information. First, as I read the bill at the present time, lines 11 to 16, they would work out in this way: If in the previous period a certain house was leased unfurnished at $100 per month, then under this provision it would be proper now to lease it unfurnished at $110 per month, giving an additional amount of 10 per cent on the former rental. If, however, instead of renting it unfurnished, as was the case before, it should be rented furnished, the house which was rented for $100 in the former period unfurnished could only be leased for $115 furnished. That additional rental of $5 for the furnishing of perhaps a $10,000 house does not seem to me to be what the committee has intended.

Now, I in good faith desire to know of the chairman if I am correct in my position. If I am correct in my position, then the desirability of the amendment that I have suggested is apparent. It simply provides that in such a case a man may deduct or consider a proper rental of $110 for the house and an additional rental of 15 per cent of the value of the furnishings, whatever they may be. If I am right in my understanding of the facts, I hope the gentleman will be willing to accept my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If I correctly understood the gentleman's question, the 15 per cent allowed in the bill relates to real estate and personal effects.

Mr. CRAMTON. But I think the 15 per cent, as it reads in the bill, does not refer to the value, but goes back to the rental. So it is not 15 per cent of the value, but 15 per cent of the former rental, and as there was no furniture in the house previously there was no former rental of furniture. I think lines 11 to 16 should not be construed as referring to the per cent of value as provided in lines 5 and 10, but rather the per cent goes back to the rental discussed in the first part of the section.

I will say further to the gentleman from Kentucky, that if this 15 per cent refers to the value of the property, then it is hardly consistent with his theory of the bill, because the house is furnished to allow 15 per cent——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say that I answered the gentleman hurriedly on a quick reading of his amendment; but let me ask the gentleman what would be the effect of the provision if his amendment was adopted?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the house in the prewar period rented at $100, it might be rented at $110 for the house and an additional 15 per cent of the value of the furnishings now put in as the rent for the furnishings.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman state that again?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the house was rented in the prewar period at $100 a month——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill would allow an increase of 10 per cent on that.

Mr. CRAMTON. That would be $110 for the house. Then, if there were no furnishings in it before, and now the furnishings are put in, you would allow them to charge 15 per cent of the value of the furnishings under my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I really see no objection to the gentleman's amendment. As far as I am concerned I will not oppose it and I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, we have made real progress, as the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] indicates. We have worked hard all day and we have a strenuous day ahead of us to-morrow, the consideration of the legislative bill. In order to give each man a chance to get the cobwebs out of his head between now and to-morrow morning, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. It is only 5 o'clock.

Mr. MADDEN. It is 10 minutes after 5 o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If we adjourn this afternoon without disposing of the bill, it can not come up again for two weeks, and in the meantime some of the gentlemen's constituents and mine, and the mothers and the wives of the soldiers who are across the sea, are suffering because of the extortion here, and I would hate to see the gentleman stop the progress of the bill at this time of day.

Mr. MADDEN. It is impossible to finish the bill to-night. If there was any chance of finishing it to-night I would be glad to yield the point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We can go along here for three-quarters of an hour yet.

Mr. MADDEN. We all have a lot of mail to sign before we can go home.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That can be done to-night.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-five Members present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUCKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9248, and, finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 287 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he handed in the list of absentees for publication in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That, on or before the 10th of July, 1918, a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each "person" subject to said tax, or his authorized agent, to the assessor of the District of Columbia, setting forth specifically the gross amount of such income from all separate sources accrued during the period from December 31, 1916, to June 30, 1918, and the deductions to which he may be entitled under this act; and the said taxes thereon, computed as provided in section 2, shall become due and collectible on or before September 1, 1918. And on or before the 10th of August, 1918, and of each and every month thereafter a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each "person" subject to said tax or by "his" authorized agent, to the said assessor, setting forth specifically the gross amount of such income from all separate sources accrued during the next preceding month, together with a statement of such deductions. If any person subject to said tax fails to make any such return at the time herein fixed, or makes, willfully or otherwise, a false or fraudulent return, the assessor of the District of Columbia shall make the return from his own knowledge or from such information as he can obtain through testimony or by any other means; and the return so made shall be sufficient for all purposes of this act. To the amount of the tax due upon all returns so made by the assessor there shall be added a penalty of 50 per cent of the tax; but when it shall appear that the failure to file the return of the making of a false return was due to an unavoidable or excusable cause, the said penalty may be abated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. It shall be the duty of said commissioners to prepare and furnish to each taxpayer making application therefor printed forms on which such returns shall be made. The said tax and all penalties thereon shall constitute a superior lien on the "real estate" from which the income has been derived, and shall be assessed and collected by the same officers, at the same time except as herein otherwise provided, and by similar proceedings as other taxes on real and personal property in said District.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 5, line 8, after the word "return" strike out the word "of" and insert the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Amend page 5 by striking out lines 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The tax and penalties which are assessed, levied, and made payable by any of the provisions of this act are hereby made a superior lien on the property, both real and personal, from the use or occupancy of which the taxable income has been derived: Provided, however, That the said entire personal property without any exemptions whatever shall be exhausted before the real estate is proceeded against by either tax or penalties. The said tax and penalties shall be assessed by the same officers at the same time, except as herein otherwise provided, and by similar proceedings as are other taxes on real and personal property in said District."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in the bill as it was originally written the lien for the tax was retained upon the "real estate" only. This amendment retains the tax lien upon both the "real estate and the personal property from which the revenue is derived. In other words, the owner of the property from which the income is derived should see that that tax is paid. Objection has been made to that provision of the bill, but I hope I have now remedied it so as to overcome that objection. I believe that those who furnish the tools with which these extortions are made should be answerable for the tax. The real estate people say that the real estate should not be subject to any part of the lien, but we insist that it should be. Wherever a piece of real estate becomes liable for the payment of any part of this tax then the owners of the property are going to become sentinels. They should be drafted and used as sentinels to watch their property to see that none of their tenants rob the mothers and widows of the soldiers who are now abroad—that nobody robs the clerks who are here working for small wages in an effort to win the war. [Applause.] I say that they ought to stand as sentinels over their own property, and I hope this House will carry this amendment and compel them to do so. The amendment which I have offered makes no exemption to anybody for personal property. The last vestige of the personal property can be taken and sold for the payment of this tax. There is nothing whatever exempted from it at all, and I believe that that will save the real estate people from having a lien go upon their property, and if it does not they themselves can prevent it, and they are the first people in this District who should come forth and say, "We will do our part patriotically and see that no tenant of ours shall practice extortion. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to inquire of the gentleman whether there are other amendments to be proposed to this section and inquire if he will be kind enough to take the committee into his confidence as to what time he expects to rise.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I can say to the gentleman that as far as I now see I have no further amendment to offer to this section, but I do not see why the Members of the House should not be willing to sit here a little while, perhaps less than an hour, to relieve this ugly situation that is now confronting us in the District of Columbia. [Applause.] Therefore I shall be glad to see the bill finished to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

Page 4, line 10, strike out, "December 31, 1916," and insert in lieu thereof "April 1, 1918."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? [Cries of "Vote!"] This is not for the purpose of taking up time, but I wish to say to those who have been absent most of the day that there have been some changes in the bill that require some amendments as to dates, and this is one of them. I wish to inquire of the gentleman as to the reason why he has stricken out "December 31, 1916," and substituted "April 1, 1918."

Mr. MAPES. That is merely to conform to the amendment which was made in the second section.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I have the attention of the chairman of the committee? In all good faith I ask this question. The chairman agreed to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], substituting a yearly period instead of an 18-months' period.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman I did not make such agreement.

Mr. STAFFORD. This has been incorporated in the bill as a one-year basis for computation instead of 18 months, which is the basis of the dates in lines 10 and 11, on page 4. That is, the period from December 3, 1916, to June 30, 1918, was taken as the 18-months' period. What does the gentleman propose by his amendment? He proposes, instead of submitting a yearly period to substitute a period merely from April 1 to June 30, or a three-months' period. I respectfully represent, not only to the chairman of the committee but to the gentleman offering the amendment, that it is not in harmony with the fundamental principle of the amendments heretofore adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My opinion is that the amendment is not right. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin has carefully read this section in connection with the other sections of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is mistaken in that particular.

Mr. MAPES. At least his interpretation does not agree with mine.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not surprised that my interpretation does not agree with the gentleman's.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman will permit and allow me to explain, I will try to do it to his satisfaction.

This provision in this section states the period for which the property owners shall file their return with the District assessors and during which they are liable to a tax. This bill proposes to tax men who charge more than 10 per cent over the prewar period after April 1 of this year. This provision provides that everybody who charges more than the prewar rent from April 1 to July 1 shall file his return. There is nothing inconsistent in this amendment with the other provisions of the bill. It would be entirely inconsistent unless this amendment is adopted. And it is put in merely to make this section conform with section 2 as amended here this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable and needed rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILLIARD] offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILLIARD: Page 7, immediately after line 10, insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 8. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILLIARD].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment just adopted be known as section 8 and the next section designated as No. 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the amendment just adopted be known as section 8 and the next section be known as No. 9. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TINKHAM offers the following as a substitute for the bill: Insert after the enacting clause:

"That by reason of the existence of a state of war it is essential to the national security and defense and for the successful prosecution of the war to establish governmental control and assure adequate regulation of rents of real estate in the District of Columbia during the war. For such purpose the instrumentalities, means, methods, powers, authorities, duties, obligations, and prohibitions hereinafter set forth are created, established, conferred, and prescribed. The President is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as are essential effectively to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. That in the interpretation and construction of this act the following rules shall be observed, namely:

"First. The term 'real estate,' as herein used, shall be construed to include lands, buildings, parts of buildings, houses, dwellings, apartments, rooms, suites of rooms, and every improvement and structure whatsoever, and every portion and part thereof, situated and being in the District of Columbia, and any and all estates and rights therein or thereto.

"Second. The word 'party' or 'person' shall include individuals, legal representatives of individuals, partnerships, joint-stock companies, associations, corporations, societies, bodies corporate, the Government of the United States in all is branches, departments, bureaus, boards, councils, and other agencies and instrumentalities, and all representatives, agencies, bodies, and instrumentalities acting for or in behalf of or employed or used by any and all foreign Governments not at war with the United States, unless such construction would be unreasonable; and the reference to any officer shall include any person authorized by law, or by regulation made in accordance with this act, to perform the duties of his office.

"Third. Words importing the singular number shall be held to include the plural, and vice versa, except where such construction would be unreasonable.

"Fourth. Words importing the masculine gender shall be held to include all genders, except where such construction would be unreasonable.

"Fifth. The term 'rent' or 'rent from real estate' shall include any and all amounts received for the daily, weekly, monthly, yearly, or other periodical or term use or occupancy of real estate, or any part or multiple of any such periods of time.

"SEC. 3. That the President is authorized, from time to time, to fix the amount of rent of real estate in the District of Columbia and to revise and change the amount of existing rents thereof, so that the same shall be just and reasonable, which may now or hereafter be rented, leased, subleased, transferred by assignment of lease or rental contract, used or occupied by any party or person.

"SEC. 4. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a rent administrator, who shall be a citizen of the United States and resident of the District of Columbia, who shall have full power and authority, under the direction of the President, to revise and change and (or) to fix, upon request of any party or person in interest, or otherwise, as the rent administrator may determine, the amount of rent which can be lawfully charged and received for the use and occupation of any real estate in the District of Columbia which is now or may hereafter be rented, leased, subleased, used, or occupied by any party or person; and any and all orders of the rent administrator revising and changing existing rents shall relate back to and take effect as of the date of the approval of this act by the President: Provided, That any party in interest may prosecute an appeal from any order of the rent administrator to the board of rent appeals provided for in this act, under and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be made respecting appeals; and until such appeal shall be decided by the board of rent appeals the order of the rent administrator shall be superseded by the appeal.

"SEC. 5. That from and after the date of promulgation of any order of the rent administrator fixing an amount of rent in any case, it shall be unlawful and be a violation of this act for any person to charge or receive a greater rent than the amount so fixed; subject, however, to the right of appeal hereinbefore created.

"SEC. 6. That the rent administrator is authorized, under the direction of the President, to make and promulgate rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act for carrying out the provisions hereof.

"SEC. 7. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a board of rent appeals, consisting of three persons, who shall be citizens of the United States and residents of the District of Columbia. Said board of rent appeals shall have the power to hear and determine any appeal from any order of the rent administrator authorized under section 4 of this act, and said board of rent appeal shall have power, upon consideration of such appeal, by its order, to affirm or reverse the order of the rent administrator, and in case of reversal thereof to increase, diminish, or otherwise modify the amount of rent fixed in the order of the rent administrator, and the amount so fixed in the order of the board of rent appeals shall be the amount of rent which can be lawfully charged and received for the use and occupation of the real estate affected thereby until the same shall be, upon new facts or other conditions, again changed and fixed by order of the rent administrator or the board of rent appeals, as the case may be.

"SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the renting of real estate by the party or person entitled thereto at such price or prices and for such period of time and on such terms as the parties to the contract or agreement of renting shall agree upon: Provided, however, That the amount of rent provided for in any and all such leases, contracts, and agreements shall be subject to revision and change by the rent administrator from time to time, upon the application of any party thereto, or otherwise as the rent administrator may determine, and the rent administrator may from time to time approve and confirm the existing rent or may decrease or increase the same as he may determine to be just and reasonable, as in this act provided.

"SEC. 9. That the rent administrator and such agents as he may appoint for that purpose shall have power to summon witnesses and require the production of books and documents, and may administer oaths and affirmations to witnesses so summoned and take testimony respecting the matters covered by this act"——

Mr. NORTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Dakota rise?

Mr. NORTON. To make a point of order that the amendment is not in order. Clearly it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not finished reading the substitute. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 for each offense.

"SEC. 11. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"SEC. 12. That this act shall remain in full force and effect until a treaty of peace between the Imperial German Government and the United States shall have been concluded and proclamation thereof shall have been made by the President of the United States."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against the substitute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As not being germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against the substitute on the ground that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] is not germane to the bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is germane.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill is for the raising of revenue, and the substitute does not propose to raise any revenue, but to appoint a rent commissioner instead of that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] want to be heard?

Mr. TINKHAM. I do. The bill offered by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky has for the first time been stated to raise revenue. It has up to now been discussed as a bill to prevent unfair profiteering, and everyone who can read the bill must say that that is its only purpose. Its very title says so. I have offered a bill to meet unfair profiteering, but by a different method. If his bill is not a bill to reach unfair profiteering, then my bill is not germane. But if the purpose of his bill, as declared throughout its terms and by him in debate and also those who support him, is to prevent unfair profiteering, then my bill, offered as a substitute, is for the same purpose and germane.

Mr. GILLETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] desire to be heard?

Mr. GILLETT. It only occurred to me, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Kentucky said this was not in order because his bill provided revenue and this did not, that this inference was a strained one.

If his logic is correct, then no amendment would ever be in order, because an amendment must be different from the original bill or it is not an amendment, so that the fact that this substitute differs from the original bill does not prove that it is out of order.

It seems to me that my colleague states it fairly. This bill is simply and solely a bill to prevent profiteering here in the District, as all the debate has shown, and the bill that my colleague presents accomplishes the same object in another way, but it is clearly attempting to accomplish just that object and nothing else. Therefore it seems to me that as a whole bill it is germane to this whole bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. This bill, as I understand it, introduces another subject entirely, and that is that they shall appoint a rent administrator and a board of appeals.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And does not raise any tax whatever.

Mr. GILLETT. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, does the gentleman from Massachusetts think that with that new matter in the bill, which provides for an administrator and a board of appeals, enlarging it in that way, it is germane to a bill of this kind?

Mr. GILLETT. I certainly do, because the purpose is absolutely the same. It accomplishes it in a somewhat different way. But it can not accomplish it in exactly the same way. If it did, it would not be an amendment at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think that a bill to provide for an administrator and a board of appeals is in order on this bill?

Mr. GILLETT. It is to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. I might agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course you would.

Mr. FOSTER. But that does not make it in order, because the rule distinctly says, as read by the Chair this afternoon on a similar amendment——

Mr. GILLETT. Then would you claim that no method is in order except a method of raising revenue? Is that your grounds?

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it has been held time and time again, as he knows better than I do, that a commission on a bill is not in order; it is not in order on any bill. That has been held time and again.

Mr. GILLETT. It has been held both ways, if I recollect aright, on that very point.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I remember it the other way.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts one question. The bill introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is a tax bill, a bill to raise taxes. As I heard the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] read, it does not relate to taxes at all.

Then, is a bill which does not relate at all to taxes, but which proposes another matter entirely, germane as an amendment to a purely tax bill?

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? If this is a revenue bill, then it should have gone to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is too late to talk about that.

Mr. MEEKER. But did not the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the committee, specifically announce at the opening of the consideration of the bill that it was to stop profiteering?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does it by the imposition of taxes. That is the method. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] has nothing to do with taxes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill as to raising revenue will be accomplished only in case of unfair rentals. Therefore, if the bill is successful in stopping profiteering, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] desires, there will be no revenue raised. Hence it is obvious that the purpose of the bill is not to raise revenue, but to stop profiteering.

Mr. TINKHAM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. TINKHAM. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TINKHAM. The title of the bill introduced by the honorable Representative from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] reads "to prevent extortion."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Read it all.

Mr. TINKHAM. "To impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes"; but its principal intent, according to the title of the bill and the entire argument made in the committee, has been to prevent extortion. The honorable Representative from Kentucky is not proposing it as, nor does he pretend at this moment that it is, a tax measure. If he does pretend so, then all of his arguments in relation to the bill have been false and fraudulent. It is an anti-profiteering bill and nothing else. It is not a tax bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If there is anyone who has a right to complain of that, it is the tax collector.

Mr. TINKHAM. One moment, the honorable Representative from Kentucky states that he intends to impose a tax by this bill, but in section 5 he says that anyone who must contribute a tax has made a contract which is contrary to public policy and unenforcible. That means that it is not a tax measure. If that does not mean that it is not a tax measure, if it does not mean that it is a fraud on the House to call it a tax measure, then I do not know what a fraud upon a legislative body can be. I hope the Chair will rule in accordance with the merits of this matter, that my bill, which seeks to reach the unfair profiteer, is germane to his bill, which seeks to reach the unfair profiteer, and proper to be offered as a substitute. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the committee, because the amendment is clearly not germane, and if the Chair is going to rule according to my view of the matter I am not going to occupy any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no information as to what information the gentleman from North Dakota has, as to how the Chair is going to rule; but the Chair is prepared to rule.

The bill which the committee has had under consideration provides for the levying and collecting of an income tax for raising revenue under certain conditions. The substitute carries no provision of that sort, as the Chair understands it. There is no provision in the bill offered as a substitute by which income taxes or revenue would be provided for or authorized.

Now, it is argued by the gentleman that this legislation is designed to prevent profiteering in the District, that the bill which the committee has under consideration seeks to accomplish that purpose, and that the bill which is offered as a substitute has the same purpose in view. Gentlemen say that therefore the substitute offered is germane. The chairman of the committee presents the point of order that the substitute is not germane.

If it should be conceded that the purpose of the bill is to prevent the practice of what has been characterized as profiteering, alleged to exist in this city, the Chair suggests that the same purpose might be accomplished in still another way. If an amendment were offered to the bill under consideration, authorizing the Federal Government to build a large number of residences, or houses, or apartment houses, for rent at a very low rental, that might accomplish the purpose sought to be secured by this legislation because, through the means of competition, it would destroy the opportunity of those having property to demand and receive exorbitant rates. And yet I think that even the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] who offers this substitute would not insist that such an amendment would be germane. The Chair has no doubt about it. The only doubt the Chair has is one that he has always in mind, that the Chair may be wrong; but the Chair's conviction is strong that the point of order is well taken that the amendment is not germane, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the committee rise and report the bill, with sundry amendments, to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUCKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage, and the gentleman from Massachusetts makes a preferential motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the House should adjourn before ordering the previous question, the bill would not come up to-morrow, but if the previous question is ordered it would come up to-morrow as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is correct.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GILLETT) there were 71 ayes and 110 noes.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment. If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The engrossed bill is not here.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 175. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3471. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowances to enlisted men of the Army of the United States.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MCKEOWN, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for the balance of the day, on account of illness in the family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a list of 66 leases granted by the Secretary of War under authority of the act approved July 28, 1892, during the calendar year 1917 (H. Doc. No. 967) was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ROUSE: A bill (H. R. 10627) providing for an examination of the Ohio River with a view to the construction of an ice pier on the south side of said river in the vicinity of Covington and Newport, Ky.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. KALANIANAOLE: A bill (H. R. 10628) to further provide for the national security and defense and for the purpose of assisting the prosecution of the war, and to provide for the assistance and appropriations by the Federal Government for the repair and maintenance of such improved highways of the several States as may, because of the extraordinary circumstances of war, be declared to be military roads; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 10629) to provide death penalty for convicted spies; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JAMES: A bill (H. R. 10630) to provide death penalty for convicted spies; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 10631) to prevent alien enemies from voting for electors for President and Vice President or United States Senators or Members of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. KALANIANAOLE: Resolution (H. Res. 269) directing that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives be directed to make inquiry of the proper naval and military authorities and report to the House the necessary legislation to bring to the highest degree of efficiency the naval base and fortifications on the island of Oahu; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POU: Resolution (H. Res. 270) providing for the immediate consideration of H. R. 8409; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. RUBEY: Resolution (H. Res. 271) asking for the consideration of H. R. 7795; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. JAMES: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 263) proposing an amendment to section 7, Article I, of the Constitution, relative to the Executive veto of bills passed by Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Memorial of the Wisconsin Legislature, asking Congress to impose certain taxes on incomes, inheritances, and excess profits during the war; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Wisconsin Legislature, asking Congress to enact necessary legislation to permit soldiers' mail to be transmitted free of postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 12, 1918.

(Legislative day of Friday, March 8, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

ALBERT B. FALL, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, appeared in his seat to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Baird	Hitchcock	New	Smoot
Beckham	Hollis	Nugent	Sterling
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Sutherland
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Poindexter	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pomerene	Thompson
Dillingham	Kellogg	Reed	Townsend
Fletcher	Kenyon	Robinson	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Saulsbury	Underwood
Gallinger	McCumber	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh
Hale	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Harding	McNary	Smith, Ga.	Watson
Hardwick	Martin	Smith, Mich.	Williams

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. SAULSBURY). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is detained at home by illness.

Mr. MCNARY. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] are detained on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

COAL OUTPUT IN COLORADO.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, last Friday I took occasion to insert in the RECORD an order of the Fuel Commission materially reducing the prices of coal to operators in the four States of Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and Utah. I then ventured a prediction that the order which by its own terms went into effect on the 11th day of March would result in a material restriction of the coal output in my State. My forecast was verified much earlier than I expected. I have received a telegram from one of the operators, dated March 9, informing me that in consequence of the promulgation of the order 27 mines had at once closed, while coal in transit to dealers would not be settled for until April, the consignees desiring to take advantage of the increased reduction for that month.

I at once wired for the names of the mines which had suspended. I was unable to get them all, but this morning I received a telegram listing 20 of them, whose daily output is 7,180 tons. They employ 1,593 men, who are now idle. In addition to this situation, 7 of the larger mines have begun to dump their slack, which is no longer marketable at the prices fixed by the commission.

These, Mr. President, I shall submit to the Senate without comment as the first and immediate fruit of an order which should never have been made. I am unable to account for this extreme and radical reduction in prices which, in effect, ignores the requirements of the statute that a reasonable profit shall be allowed, unless it be that the commissioner, having confined his suspension order of last January to the territory east of the Mississippi, has recently satisfied himself that equity and justice required him to make another order which would similarly affect all the country west of the Mississippi, thus imposing his orders, like the rain from heaven, alike upon the heads of the just and the unjust.

Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, without reading, the two telegrams to which I have just called attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I should like to have the telegrams read.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not object. I did not read them myself, because I did not want to take up any further time of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat? I think it perfectly apparent, and should be so, that the price of slack which the Senator has just stated places it beyond the reach of any consumption, and therefore it is wasted.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; the dumping of the slack disposes of it; it is no longer available for commercial purposes. I might say a great deal regarding this order, but will refrain, lest in my exasperation I say something that I should afterwards regret.

Mr. REED. I should like to have the telegrams read for the information of the Senate as well as for my own information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegrams were read, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., March 9, 1918.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.:

The last announcement by Fuel Administration of large reduction in Colorado coal prices effective March 11 and still larger reduction effective April 1 is a great shock to the coal industry of this State, and in my opinion is entirely unwarranted and unjust. Because of this reduction about 27 mines are closed to-day and coal in transit to dealers from northern Nebraska to central Texas is being refused by them, they demanding the April price. This is a condition that we tried to impress on the Fuel Administration would prevail if they made any announcement of prices prior to April 1, so that Colorado bituminous operators are in the position of not only losing money on coal that they mine from and after March 11, but on the coal they have mined during the last three weeks. I will wire you Monday the names of the mines that are down, also those that have been forced to dump slack. It is a safe estimate that the output to Colorado for 1918 will be curtailed because the prices set by the Fuel Administration are not remunerative. Most of the mines will lose less money by shutting down than by continuing operation under these unjust prices. The wage scale for the Trinidad district is less than the wage scale for the Walsenburg and Canon City districts, yet the Fuel Administration allows them 10 cents more per ton for mine-run coal. Many other inequalities exist in their recent decision, showing plainly that they have not used facts as basis for their order. Hundreds of miners in this State are not earning a penny this day on account of this order, and these men would have been working had the Fuel Administration left our prices alone and the Nation would have had the increased production in place of the loss to men of wages and to the country of coal. Colorado operators have never been confronted with a more serious condition than exists now, and the condition will rapidly become worse if this price order is not immediately withdrawn and remunerative prices permitted. Our miners will scatter to the four winds and the people dependent on Colorado for coal will suffer. Operators think that prices in effect March 1 should be continued and that no lower storage prices be made than those mentioned in our briefs, copy of which you have, and that an order to this effect should be issued immediately to save the situation. Please wire me your views.

HARRY F. NASH.

DENVER, COLO., March 11, 1918.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.:

There is a heavy windstorm on to-day in southern Colorado, putting out of commission telephone and telegraph lines, so am not able to give you full reports of mines down to-day. Those I know of as not working to-day are Hecla, Acme, Nonpareil, Centennial, Sunnyside, Monarch, Two, Gorham, Industrial, Matchless, Fox, Russell, McNeil, Wolferee, Laramore, Turner, Royal Gorge, Emerald King, Anthracite, Buckley. Total lost tonnage for day of these mines, 7,180. Total men out of employment at these mines, 1,593. Am satisfied that easily 2,000 men are out of employment at mines to-day and loss of 10,000 tons. The following mines are dumping slack: Big Four, Black Canyon, Aztec, McGregor, Cadell, Strong, Monument, Valley. Operators are thoroughly disheartened.

HARRY F. NASH.

NATIONAL ARMY DRAFT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I received a statement this morning from the War Department with reference to its policy as to the coming draft. I presume that every Senator received a copy of it through the mail. I think it is a matter that ought to be given as much publicity as possible. I have no doubt but that the War Department has given it to the newspapers. It discloses the course that the department is going to take in the new draft in order to disturb as little as possible the industries of the country, and especially to take care of the agricultural situation. In order to assist in the publicity of it, however, I think it would be well to have it printed in the RECORD, and I ask that this may be done.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEXT DRAFT.

There has been a great deal of speculation in the press concerning what has been termed "the date of the next draft." Almost every week announcements have been made, and these announcements, being mere guesses, have resulted in an unrest and uncertainty that has been unfortunate.

As a matter of fact, the state of preparedness of the Army to assimilate recruits varies from day to day and from week to week, and the most scientific manner of recruiting the forces will be to withdraw them from civil life as fast as they can be assimilated by the Army and no faster. According to this plan, men will be inducted into the service in very small groups, apportioned among the various States, from week to week or from month to month as they are needed. In order to distribute the burden equally over the various States, however, it is necessary to make arithmetical computations of the share of each State, and it is not practicable to make these computations for such small numbers. For mere bookkeeping facility, therefore, it is necessary to assume a total of considerable size and to apportion it among the several States as their immediate burden. This total is called a national quota and the various shares are called State quotas. The announcement of the quota does not mean that any such great number of men will be called to military service at once and, indeed, has no necessary relation to the date of call for the reason that a constantly changing situation causes changes in the number of men who are to be called to the colors.

It is unwise to attempt to make a forecast of the number of men that will be called for immediate military service in advance of the development of the whole complex problem of supply and transportation. It is also unwise to make public announcements of specific figures which might serve the enemy as a precise basis for determining the plans for military participation of the Nation in this war. It is necessary, however, to compose the present unrest and uncertainty by some public announcement, and for this reason the following is authoritatively stated:

The next national quota will be announced and apportioned among the several States as soon as pending legislation authorizing a change in the basis of computation is enacted by Congress. This legislation has been passed by the Senate and favorably reported by the House Military Committee. The number that will be assumed as a basis for computation will be 800,000, which is well within the authorization of clause 4 of section 1 of the selective-service act of a second increment of 500,000 men, increased by the recruit training units authorized by clause 5 of said section 1, and by the special and technical troops authorized by section 2 of said act. It can not now be announced what the total number to be called to the colors each month will be, but it may be stated that no more men will be called than can be properly accommodated and promptly assimilated.

There are difficulties confronting the Nation in the supply of labor appurtenant to agriculture. Class I, from which new levies are to be withdrawn, will contain many more men than are at present required for the Army. It would be a most unscientific and fatuous step if the men in Class I were called indiscriminately without regard to the labor situation in agriculture. Therefore the local boards will be directed to fill their quotas in the order of liability of men in Class I as determined by the national drawing, except that where it is shown that a registrant is completely and assiduously engaged in the planting, cultivation, or reaping of a crop his call to the colors shall be deferred to the foot of the quota of his board as long as he continues to be so engaged. Whenever any registrant whose call to the colors has been deferred by reason of his engagement in agriculture is shown to have been idle on the farm on which he is engaged or to have trified with the deferment that has been accorded him, the boards will forthwith induct him into military service if his order number has been reached in the meantime. The effect of this expedient is to grant furloughs from service prior to actual call to the colors to the men so greatly needed in the production of this year's crop.

This is not, however, the only expedient that is to be adopted to conserve the supply of labor appurtenant to agriculture and to mobilize all means for increasing the harvest for the agricultural season of 1918. There is now pending before Congress a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to grant furloughs, with or without pay, to men in the Army to enable them to engage in industrial and agricultural pursuits. The purpose of this bill is to relieve serious situations in particular instances in which men who are the mainstay of farms have been inducted into the service, either through voluntary enlistment or selection, and whose services during the present emergency in agriculture are needed. These furloughs will be granted after consideration of the circumstances of the individual case in which they arise, and when the military situation is such that they can be granted without too great disruption and disorganization of the Army or of any particular organization of the Army.

As to further means to protect agriculture, a new regulation has been promulgated authorizing agricultural students in their senior year in land-grant colleges to enlist in the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Quartermaster Department, provided their class standing is such as to place them in the upper third of their class. By this means it will be possible to defer the draft call of such young men in order to enable them to perfect themselves as agriculturalists, and thereafter to protect them in such services as it may seem that they should perform in the best interests of the Nation.

The whole industrial and agricultural situation is being subjected to a very comprehensive study in order to discover any means that may be taken to protect and augment the labor supply appurtenant to industry and agriculture without precluding the prompt and orderly progress of our military plans. It is confidently believed that great progress can be made along this line, and that more effective measures than any yet devised can be put into operation to attain the desired end.

It must be emphasized that this is a war of mechanics. The need of the several armed forces for men highly skilled in technical and mechanical pursuits is greater than in any former war. Yet this need for specially skilled men finds the Nation under a necessity for increasing its production in almost every line of industry. Withdrawals of men from industry must be made, and these withdrawals must take men who might otherwise be deferred on account of their special qualifications and skill. The necessary numbers of such skilled men will be obtained in one of three ways: First, men already in the military service who have such special skill will be taken from the line regiments and assigned to the staff organizations and departments where their skill is needed. Second, men classified by the selection boards, even though they may have been placed in a deferred classification, will be withdrawn with great care and particularity from the industries of the Nation for special service in staff corps and departments. Third, young men of draft age with certain educational qualifications will be inducted into the service and sent to universities, colleges, and technical and secondary schools to be instructed in technical arts until they have acquired such proficiency as will justify their assignment to the special units that are being organized in considerable numbers.

In accordance with this plan, the Provost Marshal General has already called upon the States for some 10,000 skilled artisans, and will shortly call upon the States for 10,000 young men, graduates of grammar school, who will be sent before the 1st of April to various technical and other schools throughout the United States for a two months' course of training. Regularly thereafter an increasing stream of selected men will be sent through educational and other training institutions for this purpose.

To sum up, it may be said that there will be no sudden withdrawal of great numbers of men from the ranks of industry and agriculture during the coming summer, but that men will be drawn in relatively small groups throughout the year in such a way as to create the least possible interference with industry and agriculture. Men in deferred classes as well as men in Class I will be selected in small numbers, either on account of their special technical qualifications or for the purpose of sending them to schools where they will be given an opportunity to acquire such qualifications.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting supplemental estimates of appropriation in the sum of $11,295,000 required for terminal storage and shipping buildings, Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass., and manufacture of arms, Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill. (S. Doc. No. 198), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation of $30,000 for fuel, light, and water, Public Health Service (S. Doc. No. 199), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Acting Secretary of War submitting additional estimates of appropriations required by the Ordnance Department to complete the service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, armament of fortifications, $375,074,465, and proving-ground facilities, $6,300,000 (S. Doc. No. 200), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life and public services of Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN, late a Representative from the State of North Dakota.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the United Congregations of the Congregational and Methodist Churches of Lancaster, N. H., praying for the conservation of food and fuel by the closing of all breweries and for prohibitory regulations in France. which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of the Manatee Medical Society, of Manatee County, Fla., praying for an advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cadillac and Ironwood and of W. H. Barnum, of Fremont, all in the State of Michigan, praying for an advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Business Woman's Club of Detroit, Mich., praying for a repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of River Junction; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cadillac; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Adrian; of the Men's Brotherhood of the First Baptist Church of Flint; of the congregation of the Lakeview Methodist Church, of Flint; and of the congregation of the North Baptist Church, of Flint, all in the State of Michigan, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Business Woman's Club of Detroit, Mich., praying for the admission into the medical branch of the Navy of osteopathic physicians and providing for their official status, rank, and pay, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present a telegram from the editor of the Commercial Appeal, of Memphis, Tenn., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 11, 1918.

KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

This ruling of the War Department about not giving out the home address of killed soldiers is an outrage and is breaking the hearts of a lot of fathers and mothers in Memphis. At this hour we have already checked up six boys killed who were members of an ambulance company. It was the first company that went abroad from Memphis. Some received their telegrams early, others later. We are printing the story in paper to-morrow morning of seven Memphisans killed. We get our data from roster of company and from weeping parents. Other parents uncertain as to fate of their own in the same company. The people are already as if 10,000 miles away from the war, except when death enters their homes. There is nothing that will so deaden the interest in the war as to suppress the identity of those killed and wounded. It takes all the newspapers can do to arouse the people to the colossal work the Nation must do. I am making no claim as to the rights of newspapers, but I do feel that this course will be hurtful to the cause. Please have Senator NEW insist on his resolution. All the newspapers want is the names and address and next of kin in the men killed and wounded. We care nothing for the regiment, etc., just the names and address.

C. P. J. MOONEY,
Editor Commercial Appeal.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4074) granting an increase of pension to Adaline D. Norris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4075) granting a pension to Mary S. Kimball (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 4076) to amend section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 4077) granting an increase of pension to Martha Jane Morrow;

A bill (S. 4078) granting an increase of pension to George S. Richardson; and

A bill (S. 4079) granting an increase of pension to Malinda K. McGowen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 4080) to incorporate the Woman's Association of Commerce of the United States of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) for the appointment of three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 for the standardization and design of sugar-testing apparatus, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 11th instant, approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries within the former Colville Indian Reservation, Wash.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 9248. An act to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 4, line 9, and read as follows:

UNITED STATES FOOD AND FUEL ADMINISTRATIONS.

For expenses of the United States Food and Fuel Administrations, created under authority contained in the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, including personal and other services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, printing and binding, and necessary supplies and equipment, $1,750,000.

Mr. REED. I understand unanimous consent was given that the bill should be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. MARTIN. That is the order of the Senate.

Mr. REED. To this point the committee amendments have been disposed of, have they not?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir; but there are quite a large number of committee amendments.

Mr. REED. Then there are committee amendments still to come?

Mr. MARTIN. That is correct.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Library of Congress," on page 5, line 3, after the word "thereof," to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 15, to insert:

WAR TRADE BOARD.

For the expenses of the War Trade Board, created by the Executive order of October 12, 1917, which Executive order was made under authority of the acts of June 15, 1917, known as the "espionage act," and the act of October 6, 1917, known as the "trading with the enemy act," for traveling expenses of officials and employees while traveling on official business, including per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4 per day; purchase of periodicals and books of reference; purchase, operation, maintenance, fuel, and repairs of motor-propelled vehicles; payment of ground rent and rent of office buildings in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in the United States where branch offices have heretofore been or may hereafter be established; foreign postage and expense of printing and publication of reports, circulars, journals, and other publicity matter; purchase of such material and equipment and employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington or elsewhere as may be necessary to carry on the operations intrusted to the War Trade Board by the President, $1,018,331.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of State," subhead "Foreign intercourse," on page 7, after line 12, to insert:

Contingent expenses, foreign missions: For contingent expenses, foreign missions, including the same objects specified under this head in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917, $27,856.72.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is not in the Chamber. He called my attention to this amendment, and I will ask the chairman of the committee to let it go over until the Senator returns.

Mr. MARTIN. The amendment may be passed over until the Senator from North Carolina comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. MARTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has now come into the Chamber. At the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] the Senate passed over the committee amendment on page 7, line 13, down to and including line 17. That amendment provides for an actual deficiency, and the Senator from North Carolina is now perfectly satisfied that it ought to remain in the bill. I ask that the amendment may be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 7, after line 17, to insert:

Transportation of diplomatic and consular officers: To pay the actual and necessary expenses of transportation, under such regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, of diplomatic and consular officers and clerks in embassies, legations, and consulates in going to and returning from their posts or when traveling under orders of the Secretary of State, but not including any expense incurred in connection with leaves of absence, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 14, to insert:

Relief and protection of American seamen: For relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries, and in the Panama Canal Zone, and shipwrecked American seamen in the Territory of Alaska, in the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 19, to insert:

Emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service: To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States and to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended pursuant to the requirements of section 291 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That in his discretion the President may employ part of this fund for payment of personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 5, to insert:

Contingent expenses, United States consulates: Expenses of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent (so much as may be necessary), repairs to consular buildings owned by the United States, postage, furniture, including typewriters and exchange of same, statistics, newspapers, freight (foreign and domestic), telegrams, advertising, messenger service, traveling expenses of consular officers and consular assistants, compensation of Chinese writers, loss by exchange, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and consular agencies in the transaction of their business, and payments in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Contingent expenses," on page 10, line 19, after the word "articles," to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$7,000," so as to make the clause read:

For washing and hemming towels, purchase of awnings and fixtures, window shades and fixtures, alcohol, benzine, turpentine, varnish, baskets, belting, bellows, bowls, brooms, buckets, brushes, canvas, crash, cloth, chamois skins, cotton waste, door and window fasteners, dusters; flower-garden, street, and engine hose; lace leather, lye, nails, oils, plants, picks, pitchers, powders, stencil plates, hand stamps and repairs of same, spittoons, soap, matches, match safes, sponges, tacks, traps, thermometers, toilet paper, tools, towels, towel racks, tumblers, wire, zinc, and for blacksmithing, repairs of machinery, removal of rubbish, sharpening tools, street car tickets not exceeding $250, advertising for proposals, and for sales at public auction in Washington, D. C., of condemned property belonging to the Treasury Department, payment of auctioneer fees, and purchase of other absolutely necessary articles, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 26, after the word "articles," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$11,000," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of boxes, book rests, chairs, chair cane, chair covers, desks, bookcases, clocks, cloth for covering desks, cushions, leather for covering chairs and sofas, locks, lumber, screens, tables, typewriters, including the exchange of same, wardrobe cabinets, washstands, water coolers and stands, and for replacing other worn and unservicable articles, $11,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings, construction, sites, extentsions, and rent," on page 16, after line 14, to insert:

Washington, D. C., Treasury Building Annex: For commencement, within the limit of cost heretofore authorized, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 20, to insert:

CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Enforcement of the espionage act and the trading with the enemy act. For salaries and expenses for the enforcement of the provisions of the act approved June 15, 1917, known as the "espionage act," and the act approved October 6, 1917, known as the "trading with the enemy act," $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 21, after line 17, to insert:

Quarantine Service: For maintenance and ordinary expenses, exclusive of pay of officers and employees, of quarantine stations, including the leprosy hospital and including not exceeding $500 for printing, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to the end of line 24, on page 22, the last paragraph being as follows:

IMPROVEMENTS AND REPAIRS.

Repairs to suburban roads: For current work of repairs to suburban roads and suburban streets, including maintenance of motor vehicles, $20,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the last item, for the improvement and repair of suburban roads, I desire simply to say that I presume the appropriation is very much needed; but I want to state in the RECORD, hoping that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia will take cognizance of what I say, that I think the roads in the city of Washington were never in such bad condition as they are at the present time. Very likely the appropriation has been inadequate to permit needed repairs, and, if that be so, I trust the commissioners will see to it that they make recommendations for added appropriations, so that the roads of this city may be put in as good condition as they are in the ordinary country village, which is not the case at the present time.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "District of Columbia," subhead "Improvements and repairs," at the top of page 23, to insert:

Highway bridge across Potomac River: For replacing the fenders of the bridge $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 2, to insert:

Paving Park Road: The appropriation of $17,500 for paving Park Road, New Hampshire Avenue to Fourteenth Street NW., contained in the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1917, approved September 1, 1916, is reappropriated and continued available during the fiscal year 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Public Schools," on page 25, after line 20, to insert:

Community forums and civic centers: For necessary expenses connected with the organization and conducting of community forums and civic centers in school buildings, including fixtures and supplies for lighting and equipping the buildings, janitor service, secretaries, teachers, and organizers and employees of day schools may also be employees of the community forums and civic centers, $15,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I presume it is useless to try to make any saving in the appropriations that we are so lavishly granting at the present time, most of which are urgently needed, I have no doubt. However, there are some matters that we might as well make a little saving on, and this item is one of them. As I understand, this amendment proposes to open the schoolhouses of the District of Columbia for what some good men and women think is a very important purpose, but which does not appeal to me as being at all necessary at the present time. All I will ask is the privilege of having the amendment submitted to the Senate to give me an opportunity to vote against it. If the Senate wants to put it in the bill, I have no fault to find.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am opposed to this amendment and shall cast my vote against it. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in discussing it; but I think we are embarking upon a dangerous proposition as to which we can not foresee where it is going to lead or where it is going to end. This same subject matter has been before the Senate a number of times in the past, but it has never passed. This is simply the camel getting his nose into the tent; it is a beginning; this is the first appropriation, and there is no telling where it will end.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, there is every evidence as to where it will end; it will end in the District of Columbia, for that is the only place where the Government pretends to exercise jurisdiction over the schools. It will end with such service as is performed here, and if this is an enlightening service I do not know why it should not be a part of the appropriation for the maintenance of the schools.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I will occupy only two or three minutes. This amendment commended itself to me in the strongest possible way. We all know that this city is full of young women now working for the Government, who are crowded in hall rooms, garrets, and in other very uncomfortable quarters, with very little, if any, opportunity for recreation or association. This item comes here strongly recommended. I will not take the time to read the letters received favoring this appropriation; but the school authorities, the District Commissioners, the Secretary of War, and others, who are interested in this as a benevolent provision for a very helpless class of Government workers, have recommended it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator tell us who will have charge and direction of the expenditure of the fund? I agree with him that something of the kind ought to be done, and I cordially support the proposed appropriation, hoping that it will be wisely directed.

Mr. MARTIN. I will say that the school authorities will have charge of it. This appropriation of the small sum of $15,000 is to enable the school authorities to exercise proper supervision over this service.

I was about to read a letter from the Secretary of War, which is an exceedingly strong one, but I am so anxious to save time that I will not read it. I will simply state to the Senate that I have, I am sure, a dozen letters here, including letters from the District Commissioners, the school authorities, the Secretary of War, and others, who are interested in this matter from purely benevolent considerations. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will be remembered that this matter has been urged in the past before this flood of young women were brought into the District of Columbia. It is, in my opinion, a fad, pure and simple, and nothing else.

It should also be remembered that the States, through the National Government, are paying one-half of the expenses for the school buildings and tuition in the District of Columbia, so that it is not purely a District matter. I have had very grave apprehension that when we open our schoolhouses, which to-day are inadequate for the educational needs of the District, to these gatherings of various kinds much larger appropriations will be demanded of us for repairs and for construction of schoolhouses than are required at the present time. This item does not appeal to me as at all necessary, and while probably it will remain in the bill, because it is a hopeless effort—at least I have found it so—to endeavor to curtail appropriations in any direction, I want the privilege of voting against it, and that is all I ask.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there is no question that very many uses can be made of the school buildings and schoolrooms for education purposes other than the teaching of children. They are public buildings; the people are interested in and own them; and why should the people when a lecturer comes around be compelled to go to the expense of hiring a theater, which would probably cost $100, in order that they may listen to an address that will have a tendency to elevate mankind and be of great benefit to those who hear it? In some sections of the city there are no halls, and it would be very inconvenient if a question arose of great moment to the people of one of those sections if it became necessary to hold a public meeting at a theater down town. During this war it is very important to have meetings to encourage philanthropic work for our soldiers and people for the obtaining of subscriptions to liberty loans, thrift stamps, and Red Cross work. Art lectures, musical entertainments, and debating societies are elevating in their influence.

This question has been discussed considerably, at least in the State of Colorado, and there we have the schools open for such purposes. It is in the interest of economy; it is in the interest of education; it has a tendency to draw people to highly intellectual lectures and speeches; and I can not see, when the people own these buildings and when the cost is merely nominal compared to the benefit received, why we can not open the schools for purposes that the school directors may deem advisable. Of course this amendment does not mean that every kind of an entertainment will be permitted in the schools; it means that the school authorities will determine such matters themselves; and I can not see why it should not be done, when it is at such a minimum cost and when to put citizens and civic associations to the enormous expense of hiring theaters would, of course, be a very great detriment to their treasuries.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if Congress some time ago did not pass a bill covering the subject; and if this is not an appropriation to carry out that law? We passed it through the Senate I know, and I thought it became a law; but I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not remember whether or not that is true, but, whether or not it is true, I can not see, when we have the buildings, when the buildings are heated, and when there is hardly any expense involved, and when citizens of the District of Columbia want to have a discussion upon some question, or if they want to have a meeting relative to what is best for their section of the city, why they should be put to unnecessary expense by being compelled to hire halls at enormous expense.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will permit me to say that I agree with him in that. I did not ask the question as indicating my opposition to this, but I thought we had passed general legislation that would cover the matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know; I do not remember whether we passed it or not. If we did, there is still more reason for this appropriation, and I am glad it meets with the Senator's approval. Whether we did or not, however, it seems to me it is time that these buildings should be utilized for additional educational purposes and for community meetings that are for the benefit of the people, and at which questions can be discussed that are of interest to them. I therefore hope this amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Fire department," on page 27, line 1, after the words "fire boat," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

For repairs to and improvements of the fire boat, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical charities," on page 28, after line 17, to insert:

Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital: For the purchase and installation of a new elevator in the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Water service," at the top of page 31, to insert:

For constructing 24-inch water main in Twenty-first Street from Virginia Avenue to B Street, and in B Street between Seventeenth and Twenty-first Streets, $39,600; and for constructing 16-inch water main in B Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-sixth Streets and in Twenty-sixth Street between B and D Streets, $18,700; and for constructing a 20-inch water main in Missouri Avenue between Four-and-a half and Sixth Streets, NW., $6,000; and for constructing 12-inch water main in the Mall between Seventh and Ninth Streets and B Street north and B Street south, $2,400; in all, $66,700, to continue available during the fiscal year 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," on page 32, after line 13, to insert:

ADDITIONAL EMPLOYEES.

For the temporary employment of such additional force of clerks and other employees as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be proper and necessary to the prompt, efficient, and accurate dispatch of official business in the War Department and its bureaus, to be allotted by the Secretary of War to such bureaus and offices as the exigencies of the existing situation may demand: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall submit to Congress on the first day of its next regular session a statement showing by bureaus or offices the number and designation of the persons employed hereunder and the annual rate of compensation paid to each: Provided further, That no more than 30 persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation in excess of $1,800 per annum each and not exceeding $2,400 per annum each, $4,470,747.30.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if this is the only authority under the law for the employment of this additional force?

Mr. MARTIN. These people are employed now. They are there, working for the Government, and this deficiency results from that service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A careful reading of the amendment would indicate that the authority to employ was not limited to any other law than the authority contained in this appropriation. The point I am getting at is whether these people are employed through the Civil Service Commission or whether they are regarded as temporary employees?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think I can explain this matter to the Senator. Last summer, when the war broke out and the necessity arose for a large number of additional clerks in the War Department, the Committee on Appropriations placed in a deficiency bill—I have forgotten whether it was the one we passed in July or the one we passed in October; I think it was the first one—a provision following this language, providing for temporary clerks; but, as Congress was going to meet in December, we did not put in that bill a sufficient amount of money to carry them through the year, believing that when we met in December we would have a better viewpoint from which to determine the question of its continuation. This is not to employ new clerks at this time, but it is to pay the salaries of clerks that were employed last summer and fall, under the former appropriation, up to and including the last day of the fiscal year.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There could be no doubt about the authority of the Secretary of War to appoint new clerks under this provision.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He had that under the other provision.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I notice in the first proviso that the Secretary of War is to submit to Congress on the first day of its next regular session a statement showing by bureaus, and so forth, the number and designation of the people employed. The only point I want to make is this: Of course he must have the help needed, and he must have the money to pay them; but I am frequently met with the suggestion that there is no way to employ clerks in these bureaus except through the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why, these clerks come from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yet I think, under the authority contained in that language, the Secretary of War has the right to appoint anybody he pleases.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; no. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not see any limitation in this language.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not require a limitation here. Under the general law, if we make an appropriation authorizing the appointment of clerks and do not waive the civil-service requirement, the Government is required to get them under the civil-service statute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama will permit me, while for a brief time when the emergency was very great there were clerks appointed without reference to the civil-service law in a temporary capacity——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was because the Executive waived it, not because we waived it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; exactly. At the present time, as I understand the matter—I have been so informed by the Civil Service Commission—these appointments are all made in accordance with the civil-service law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is my understanding.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I would not have the Senator from Alabama misunderstand me. I was not pleading the cause of the Civil Service Commission, because I think just as good help can be selected by using the judgment and discretion of executive officers or departmental officers as can be obtained by a civil-service examination which does not examine, and I am not so keen about preserving the rights of the Civil Service Commission; but I should like to have the interpretation of the committee as to whether or not under this language there is sufficient power granted to enable the Secretary of War to select this additional force in his own way without any reference to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly the language here does not authorize him to select them except through the Civil Service Commission. Of course the President has always had the power to waive the civil-service requirement if he wants to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it be true that the employees provided by this part of the bill can only be appointed through the Civil Service Commission, I shall vote for the bill with great reluctance. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 33, after line 4, to insert:

OFFICE OF CHIEF OF ORDNANCE.

The Chief of Ordnance is authorized to appoint one of the Army officers serving in his office as disbursing officer to pay the civilian employees in the Ordnance Office authorized in the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved October 6, 1917, and the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, on page 33, at the end of line 8, I move to insert the words "this act." The amendment, as it stands, is not broad enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 8, in the committee amendment, after the words "authorized in," it is proposed to insert the words "this act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does not the Senator wish to put in some other words there to connect that up?

Mr. MARTIN. No.

Mr. TOWNSEND. You have not made your sentence complete by just putting that in without connecting it up with the balance of the language.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not see any necessity for adding anything. It now reads "in the Ordnance Office authorized in this act." That is perfect without any other words. There should be a comma after the word "act"; then comes "the urgent deficiency appropriation act," and so forth. I move to insert a comma after the word "act." That is all that is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will be authorized to insert a comma after the word "act."

The SECRETARY. So that it will read "authorized in this act, the urgent deficiency appropriation act," and so forth.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I noticed in the papers two or three weeks ago a statement to the effect that, as I understood it, the War Department had sent down estimates to Congress asking for $400,000,000 for the Ordnance Bureau in order that they might make the necessary contracts for guns and things of that kind. I will ask the chairman of the committee if such an estimate has come to Congress?

Mr. MARTIN. Such an estimate has not reached the committee. I have been advised of it. It will have to be provided for, possibly, later on; but it is not provided for in this bill, because it has not yet reached the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But if it should get to Congress before this bill is disposed of I hope it will be considered in connection with this measure. It was stated in the paper—I did not feel that there was any basis for it—that some of the leaders of Congress had gotten together and had decided that an appropriation of that kind could be put over to some other bill.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I do not think that appropriation is of such an urgent character as to require any delay in this urgent deficiency bill. It embraces, as was stated to me by the officer who came to the committee room about it, our coast defenses. For instance, the first thing in it is an item of $84,000,000 for the construction of heavy guns, and we were told that two years would elapse before the first gun manufactured would be ready for use. It is not a matter that is so urgent as to require any delay in the consideration of this bill, and it is a large item that requires careful investigation. Furthermore, as I say, it has not yet reached the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It did not involve appropriations for Army supplies, guns, and so forth, that were immediately needed in connection with the war that is now going on?

Mr. MARTIN. It did not, as it was explained to me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, Mr. President, the only information I had was what I saw in the paper. Apparently some representative of the department has been to the committee; and if it does not call for an appropriation in order to furnish guns and ammunition and supplies for the immediate conduct of this war, of course I do not think it would be necessary to go on this bill. If it does contemplate appropriations that the War Department considers it necessary and important that we should make early provision for, then I would be strongly in favor of covering the matter in this bill, because we do not want to withhold from the department anything that it deems necessary and essential to the effective conduct of this war, and I know that the chairman of the committee does not desire to do so.

Mr. MARTIN. I am in full accord with the Senator, but that is not involved in this amendment. It can easily go until a more convenient time. It will have early consideration just as soon as the data is furnished.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses," on page 34, line 4, after the word "subsistence," to strike out "$488,000" and insert "$738,208.83," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, including their exchange; books of reference, blank books, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, maps; typewriters and adding machines; furniture and repairs to same; carpets, matting, oilcloth, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges, fuel, gas, and heating apparatus for and repairs to buildings (outside of the State, War, and Navy Department Building) occupied by the War Department and its bureaus, purchase, exchange, care, and subsistence of horses, and the purchase, maintenance, repair, and exchange of wagons, motor trucks, and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and harness, to be used only for official purposes; freight and express charges; street car tickets, not exceeding $300; and other absolutely necessary expenses, including a per diem allowance not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence, $738,208.83.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 8, to insert:

For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the War Department and its bureaus and offices, $289,899.95.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if this is necessary in addition to the acres of buildings that have been put up here at enormous expense?

Mr. MARTIN. This liability has already been incurred, so that it is impossible to avoid making this provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 11, to insert:

Authority is given the Secretary of War to erect a telephone switchboard building on lots numbered 5 and 6, block 169, situated between Seventeenth and Eighteenth and F and G Streets NW., Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Armories and arsenals," on page 34, line 18, before the word "Arsenal," to strike out "Benecia" and insert "Benicia," so as to make the clause read:

Benicia Arsenal, Cal.: For additional for an addition to the main issuing and receiving storehouse, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 5, to insert:

For additional for improving water-power plant, Rock Island Arsenal, $95,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 17, to insert:

Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass.: For extension of main office building, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 36, after line 4, to insert:

Executive Mansion: For fuel for the Executive Mansion and greenhouses, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 36, after line 6, to insert:

Heating offices, watchmen's lodges, etc.: For heating offices, watchmen's lodges, and greenhouses at the propagating gardens, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 36, after line 11, to insert:

For fuel, lights, oil, waste, packing, tools, matches, paints, brushes, brooms, lanterns, rope, nails, screws, lead, electric lights, heating apparatus, oil stoves for elevator car and upper and lower floors, repairs to engines, boilers, dynamos, elevator, and repairs of all kinds connected with the Monument and machinery; and purchase of all necessary articles for keeping the Monument, machinery, elevator, and electric plant in good order, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Military Establishment," subhead "Quartermaster Corps," on page 37, line 15, after the words "authorized by law," to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$5,500,000." so as to make the clause read:

Mileage: For mileage to commissioned officers, members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, contract surgeons, expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, Army field clerks, and field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, when authorized by law, $5,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for regular supplies of the Quartermaster Corps, including their care and protection, etc., an page 40, line 1, after the word "report," to strike out "$23,203,076" and insert "$28,358,176," so as to read:

For remounts and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; for seeds and implements required for the raising of forage at remount depots and on military reservations in the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands and for labor and expenses incident thereto, including, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, the cost of irrigation; for straw for soldiers' bedding, stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, including blank books and blank forms for the Quartermaster Corps, certificates for discharged soldiers, and for printing department orders and reports, $28,358,176.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 9, to insert:

War Port Board: For necessary expenses of the War Port Board, port of New York, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for barracks and quarters, on page 46, line 14, after the words "United States," to strike out "$52,151,604" and insert "$67,252,744," so as to read:

For the hire of recruiting stations and lodgings for recruits; for such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and for officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War;

for wall lockers in permanent barracks and refrigerators in barracks and quarters; for screen doors, window screens, storm doors and sash, and window shades for barracks, offices, and quarters, and for flooring and framing for tents, and for the National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States, $67,252,744.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 7, after the word "employees," to strike out "$13,996,820" and insert "$20,181,820." so as to make the clause read:

Water and sewers at military posts: For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situations require it to be brought from a distance; for the installation and extension of plumbing within buildings where the same is not specifically provided for in other appropriations; for the purchase and repair of fire apparatus, including fire-alarm systems; for the disposal of sewage, and expenses incident thereto, including the authorized issue of toilet paper; for repairs to water and sewer systems and plumbing within buildings; for hire of employees, $20,181,820.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 13, after the word "stations," to strike out "$7,303,800" and insert "$9,944,100," so as to make the clause read:

Roads, walks, wharves, and drainage: For the construction and repair by the Quartermaster Corps of road, walks, and wharves; pay of employees; disposal of drainage; dredging channels; and care and improvement of grounds at military posts and stations, $9,944,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 4, after the word "sewers," to insert "electric work, cooking apparatus"; and in the same line, after the word "same," to strike out "$18,000,000" and insert "$21,274,300," so as to make the clause read:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same; construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto; additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, temporary hospitals in standing camps and cantonments; and, during the fiscal year 1918, for the alteration of permanent buildings at posts for use as hospitals, construction and repair of temporary hospital buildings at permanent posts, construction and repair of temporary general hospitals, rental of grounds and rental and alteration of buildings for use for hospital purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including necessary temporary quarters for hospital personnel, outbuildings, heating and laundry apparatus, plumbing, water and sewers, electric work, cooking apparatus, and roads and walks for the same, $21,274,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 12, to insert:

Claims of officers and enlisted men for loss of private property destroyed in the military service: The act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885 (chap. 335, 23d Stats., p. 350), is amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. Property belonging to officers, enlisted men, and members of the Nurse Corps (female) of the Army, which they are required by law or regulations to own and use in the performance of their duties, and horses and equipment required by law or regulations to be provided by mounted officers, which since the 5th day of April, 1917, has been, or shall hereafter be, lost, damaged, or destroyed in the military service, shall be replaced, or the damage thereto, or its value, recouped, to the owner as hereinafter provided, when such loss, damage, or destruction has occurred or shall hereafter occur in any of the following circumstances:

"First. When such loss or destruction was without fault or negligence on the part of the owner.

"Second. When such private property so lost or destroyed was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of an officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment, or destroyed by the enemy or by shipwreck.

"Third. When it appears that such private property was so lost or destroyed in consequence of its owner having given his attention to the saving of property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the same time and in similar circumstances.

"Fourth. When such private property is destroyed or captured by the enemy, or is destroyed to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy, or is abandoned on account of lack of transportation or by reason of military emergency requiring its abandonment.

"SEC. 2. The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of such property lost, destroyed, captured, or abandoned as specified in the foregoing sections, or the amount of the damage thereto, as the case may be; and the amount of such value or damage so ascertained and determined shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or such property lost, destroyed, captured, or abandoned, or so damaged as to be unfit for service, may be replaced in kind from Government property on hand by the supply officer or quartermaster of the organization to which the person entitled thereto belongs or with which he is serving upon the order of the commanding officer thereof.

"SEC. 3. Tender of replacement or the determination made by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury upon a claim presented as provided for in the foregoing section shall constitute a final determination of any claim cognizable under this act, and such claim shall not thereafter be reopened or considered.

"SEC. 4. No claim arising under this act shall be considered unless made within one year from the time that it accrued, or presented within six months after peace is established."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, this amendment, of course, is new legislation. The necessity for putting it in this bill is that it requires immediate action. There is a law on the statute books to-day which provides for the replacement of property lost and destroyed that belongs to officers and soldiers during time of peace, but for some reason it does not apply to time of war. A notable instance of the way we need this law is the case of the Tuscania, which went down by reason of being sunk by an enemy torpedo. The officers and soldiers on the ship were required to leave without taking their property, and when they landed without any clothes, it was necessary for the American officers abroad personally to indorse their notes, I am told, so as to get additional equipment of clothing, because there was no law on the statute books that allowed Government action.

This is intended to allow the Government to take care of the situation so that where the property is destroyed of an officer or soldier without fault on his part the Government can immediately replace it in kind, or if it is his personal property and it can not be replaced in kind, they can pay him the value of it if he makes the claim within six months. But, of course, the bill only applies to that class of property which the Government regulations require that a soldier shall have. It does not apply to anything except his uniform, his sword, or other personal property that the law requires him to have.

Mr. President, I wish to say, in addition, that this amendment was submitted to the War Department. It has been gone over by them and meets their approval. I wish to offer an amendment that has been suggested by the officer in the War Department who passed on the matter. There are really two amendments, but I ask the Secretary to read them one at a time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, line 10, after the word "hand," the last word in the line, insert "or an adequate commutation given therefor when replacement in kind can not be made within a reasonable time."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not quite sure whether the language I sent to the desk follows exactly the suggestion which came from the War Department. It was in line 10, page 51, to insert, after the word "hand" the words "or an adequate commutation given therefor when replacement in kind can not be made or can not be made within a reasonable time."

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, down to line 24 the amendment sets out precisely what has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs as Senate bill 2527, and on March 2, at the suggestion of the department, I offered an amendment to that bill. The amendment now proposed by the Senator from Alabama is in accordance with the letter of the War Department and in accordance with the amendment which I offered to the Senate bill. I think, if this amendment is agreed to, the Senate bill might as well be indefinitely postponed, as it covers the same matter. I have here the letter from the department.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will of course wait until the bill has gone to conference and this matter has been finally passed upon before striking the Senate bill off the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course. I merely suggest that that might be the course taken with that bill. I have a letter from the Secretary of War on the subject, if the Senator desires to have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would be glad if the Senator would send it to the desk.

Mr. FLETCHER. It gives the reasons for it and suggests the amendment which the Senator offered on the part of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 27, 1918.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to request your assistance in amending certain sections of Senate bill 3527. The necessity of these amendments arises from the fact that nothing in the bill provides for commutation for property lost, but only for its replacement in kind. It is not always possible to make a replacement in kind, as, for instance, in the uniform of nurses. Nurses furnish their own uniforms and the Government has no such property on hand. Again, it has been brought to my attention by the sinking of the S. S. Tuscania that replacement in kind can not be made in England within a reasonable time, at least with regard to officers. By the amendments requested, the purposes of the bill will be accomplished.

The amendments I suggest are as follows:

In line 9, page 51, interpolate after the word "hand" the following: "Or an adequate commutation given therefor when replacement in kind can not be made or can not be made within a reasonable time"; and on the same page, in line 14, interpolate after the word "replacement" "or of commutation."

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second amendment to the amendment sent to the desk by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, after the word "replacement," insert the words "or of commutation," so as to read:

Tender of replacement or of commutation or the determination made by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. McKELLAR. The part in italics, beginning at line 24, on page 51, going down to line 18, on page 52, has not been reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that is another amendment, and it has not yet been read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. I like the original amendment reported by the committee a great deal better than I do the amendment as amended. I think when the Government of the United States is perfectly willing to replace the property that has been lost by an officer from the Government property on hand it is going far enough. As I understand the amendment, they are either to replace it by property on hand or they are to pay for the property lost.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Utah will allow me, as I understand the amendment it only allows them to pay it when they can not replace it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what it says.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what I thought the amendment intended, but that is not what the amendment says. I shall not take further time of the Senate, but I will ask the Senator having the bill in charge to consider it when it comes into conference. It seems to me that the wording does not cover the point that ought to be covered.

Mr. MARTIN. I agree with the Senator from Utah. I think it is covered. If it is not it is the intention to cover it, and it will be made to cover it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not understand it exactly, and I ask for information. In some of these cases, where the officers lost their effects upon the Tuscania, for example, and other officers furnished them money and credit to replace their kit are you going to refuse to pay them, provided you can replace it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The proposition merely provides that when they can not be replaced in kind, and, of course, in that kind of a case where it has already been replaced in kind they can not do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If you were an officer and lost your pocketbook and your watch and I gave you the money and you bought a new outfit——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that was not this case. It is in the discretion of the department to pay those men the cash for what they paid out, and I have no doubt it will be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If this amendment is adopted you could not do that if you could replace it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD In this case you can not do it. The amendment was suggested by the War Department for the very purpose of meeting that case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think your amendment as it is now does cover it. If there is an additional amendment put on in conference then you will get into a box so far as this particular case is concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 23, to insert:

So much of section 16 of the act making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1916, as provides that the Veterinary Corps as therein constituted shall be a part of the Medical Department of the Army, is hereby amended so as to make the Veterinary Corps a part of the Quartermaster Corps of the Army; and, further, so as to authorize appointments of reserve veterinarians in the Veterinary Corps upon the recommendation of the Quartermaster General of the Army: Provided, That all appropriations made for the purchase of veterinary supplies and the hire of veterinary surgeons shall be available for the purposes for which made and shall hereafter be disbursed through the Quartermaster Corps: Provided further, That hereafter all construction and repair work under the War Department shall be executed through the Engineer Department of the Army, and all appropriations made for such work shall be available for the purposes for which made, and disbursed through said Engineer Department of the Army.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, that is merely a change in the law of June 3, 1916, section 9 thereof. It also changes the whole system under which the cantonments were being constructed and the hospital work. It seems to me that it is a subject which ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs. Therefore I am constrained to make a point of order against this amendment, that it is legislation attached to an appropriation bill, and is also changing existing law.

Mr. MARTIN. I am satisfied that the point of order is well taken, and I am the more willing that it should go out because there is some confusion about the matter anyhow. After the amendment was put in the bill by the committee we received a further communication from the War Department which left the matter in an unsatisfactory shape in the minds of the committee. All I desire to say on the present occasion is that I am satisfied the point of order is well taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. That does not apply to what has already been agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. It applies to the amendment beginning at line 24, page 51, and ending a line 17, on page 52.

Mr. MARTIN. That is correct. It is ruled out.

Mr. McKELLAR. That has been stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is stricken out.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 55, line 7, after the word "arms," to strike out "$27,996,100" and insert "$33,996,100," so as to make the clause read:

Manufacture of arms. For manufacturing, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms, $33,996,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 7, to insert:

Terminal storage and shipping buildings: For terminal storage and shipping buildings and other facilities, including rentals and purchases of lands, $5,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "State, War, and Navy Department Buildings," on page 58, line 6, after the words "as follows," to insert "Assistant superintendent, $2,000"; in line 7, before the words "One of class 3," to strike out "Clerks" and insert "clerks"; in line 8, after the word "messenger," to strike out "two" and insert "three"; in line 10, before the words "at $1,200 each," to strike out "three" and insert "two"; in the same line, after the word "each," to insert "three at $1,000 each"; in line 12, after the word "each," where it occurs the second time, to insert "two carpenters at $1,000 each"; in line 14, before the words "general mechanics," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten"; in the same line, after the word "each," to insert "chief engineer, $1,400"; in line 15, after the words "assistant engineers," to strike out "two at $1,400 each"; in line 16, before the words "at $1,200 each," to strike out "two" and insert "four"; in the same line, after the word "each," to insert "steamfitter, $1,080"; in line 18, before the words "at $660 each," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty"; in line 20, after the word "each," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "one hundred and thirty-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty-five"; in line 22, before the word "forewomen," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; in the same line, before the words "at $240 each," to strike out "sixty" and insert "eighty"; and in line 23, after the words "in all," to strike out "$67,466.67" and insert "$81,900," so as to make the clause read:

War and Navy Department Buildings (Henry Park Reservation): For the following employees from March 1 to June 30, 1918, inclusive, at annual rates of compensation, as follows: Assistant superintendent, $2,000; clerks—1 of class 3, 1 of class 2, 2 of class 1, 1 at $1,000; 3 messengers, at $720 each; electricians—chief $1,400, 2 at $1,200 each, 3 at $1,000 each, 2 plumbers, at $1,200 each; machinist, $1,200; foreman, $1,500; 2 painters, at $1,200 each; 4 carpenters, at $1,200 each; 2 carpenters, at $1,000 each; 3 switchboard operators, at $1,000 each; 10 general mechanics, at $1,000 each; chief engineer, $1,400; assistant engineers—4 at $1,200 each; steamfitter, $1,080; firemen—7 at $840 each, 11 at $720 each; laborers—foreman $1,000, 50 at $660 each; 9 female laborers, at $480 each; guards—captain $1,600, 3 lieutenants at $1,000 each 6 sergeants at $840 each, 155 at $720 each; charwomen—4 forewomen at $300 each, 80 at $240 each; in all, $81,900.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to ask a correction in the spelling of the word "eighty," in line 22, on page 58. It should be "eighty" instead of "eigthy."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 23, to strike out:

Provided, That the superintendent, assistant superintendent, and chief engineer of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings shall serve in similar capacities in connection with these buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 2, to insert:

The superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings shall serve in a similar capacity in connection with these buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 8, to insert:

For completing construction of the temporary office buildings for the War and Navy Departments in Henry Park, as authorized in the urgent deficiency act approved October 6, 1917, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Temporary office buildings," on page 60, line 6, after "$5,775,000," to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract for the heating of the buildings authorized in this paragraph in lieu of the erection and operation of a heating plant authorized therefor, if in his discretion the contracting for said heating is more economical and to the best interests of the Government.

So as to make the clause read:

For two three-story temporary office buildings of reinforced concrete with wings 60 feet wide, one for the Navy Department to contain approximately 940,000 square feet and one for the War Department to contain approximately 835,000 square feet, to be erected under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy in Potomac Park west of Seventeenth Street and South of B Street, beginning with the Navy Department Building at a point not less than 235 feet west of the westerly curb line of Seventeenth Street and 50 feet south from the southerly curb line of B Street and extending southerly not more than 620 feet from the said B Street curb line and westerly to a point not beyond the easterly building line of Twenty-first Street, including electrical equipment and a temporary heating plant for both buildings, to be located south of D Street and west of Twenty-fifth Street, with necessary connecting mains, $5,775,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract for the heating of the buildings authorized in this paragraph in lieu of the erection and operation of a heating plant authorized therefor, if in his discretion the contracting for said heating is more economical and to the best interests of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 18, before the word "streets," to strike out "Eighth" and insert "Ninth," so as to make the clause read:

For two three-story temporary office buildings of the type erected in Henry Park, one to be located in Seaton Park (north) between Four-and-a-half and Sixth Streets and south of Missouri Avenue and to contain approximately 370,000 square feet and one to be located on the Mall between Seventh and Ninth Streets and B Street north and B Street south and to contain approximately 300,000 square feet, and for a three-story temporary office building of reinforced concrete to be located in Seaton Park (south) between Four-and-a-half and Sixth Streets and north of Maine Avenue and to contain approximately 270,000 square feet, including heating and lighting and the necessary connections, to be erected under the direction of the Secretary of War for the use of the War Department, $2,377,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 3, after the words "direction of the," to strike out "officer in charge of public buildings and grounds" and insert "superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings," so as to make the clause read:

The maintenance and protection of all of the foregoing temporary buildings when completed shall be under the supervision and direction of the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," subhead "Temporary employees," on page 64, after line 8, to insert:

Office of the Secretary, $1,575.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 13, after the words "In all," to strike out "$63,750" and insert "$65,325," so as to read:

In all, $65,325.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses," on page 64, after line 18, to insert:

For professional and technical books and periodicals, law books, and necessary reference books, including city directories, railway guides, freight, passenger, and express tariff books, for department library, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," on page 78, after line 20, to strike out:

INDIAN SERVICE.

For support of Indian day, boarding, and industrial schools, in addition to the general and specific appropriations made for that purpose in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended upon improvements or used to increase the compensation of employees: Provided further, That except for pay for superintendents and for transportation of goods and supplies and transportation of pupils, not more than $200 shall be expended from appropriations made in this act for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any Indian school, unless the attendance in any school shall be less than 100 pupils, in which case the Secretary of the Interior may authorize a per capita expenditure not to exceed $225: Provided, That the total amount appropriated for the support of such school shall not be exceeded: Provided further, That the number of pupils in any school entitled to the per capita allowance hereby provided for shall be determined by taking the average attendance for the entire fiscal year and not any fractional part thereof.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, with particular reference to the amendment of the committee commencing in line 21, on page 78, and extending down to and including line 17, on page 79, I wish to make a brief statement, and will premise the statement by saying that no one could appreciate more than I the necessity for haste with reference to the passage of this bill——

Mr. MARTIN. If the Senator from Arizona will excuse me for interrupting him, if he will charge himself with seeing that the item goes out in the Indian appropriation bill, I shall consent that the committee amendment be disagreed to. The committee reported to leave the item out of this bill because it was contained in the Indian appropriation bill, and we did not like to carry the same item in two bills, both being on the Calendar of the Senate at the same time. However as there seems to be some urgency about this matter, and there may be some evil consequences if what is provided for in the item is not done directly, I have no objection to the provision staying in the bill, with the assurance of the Senator from Arizona that it will go out of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr ASHURST. Mr. President, first I thank the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the committee, and wish to assure him that, of course, the similar item which is carried in the Indian appropriation bill will most certainly be stricken from that bill. I wish to give the most positive assurance that that will not escape the attention of myself or of the Senate when the Indian appropriation bill comes before the Senate. Again thanking the Senator from Virginia, I ask that the amendment of the committee be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 79, after line 17, to strike out:

Not to exceed $50,000 of the funds derived from the sale of timber from the Red Lake Indian Forest, Minn., under authority of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat., p. 137), may be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in the logging, booming, towing, and manufacturing of timber from burned-over areas at the Red Lake Agency sawmill and in the reimbursement from the said timber receipts of the amounts expended from other Indian tribal funds in the prosecution of such work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Geological Survey," on page 80, line 21, after the word "laws," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the examination and classification of lands requisite to the determination of their suitability for enlarged homesteads, stock-raising homesteads, public watering places, and stock driveways, as required by the public land laws, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 14, to insert:

ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL.

The annual compensation of the employees holding the following positions shall be increased as follows: Head baker, from $780 to $924; assistant baker, from $420 to $660; first assistant baker, from $420 to $660; 5 special attendants, from $360 to $726 each; foreman of laundry, from $920 to $1,200; 6 launderers, from $300 to $480 each; 3 cooks, from $300 to $600 each; 8 kitchen helpers, from $168 to $300 each; electrical engineer, from $1,200 to $1,600; and foreman of electrical construction, from $1,100 to $1,400, and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall credit the disbursing agent for payments made, or which shall be made to employees filling the positions named at the annual compensation above stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

For vehicle allowance, the hiring of drivers, the rental of vehicles, and the purchase and exchange and maintenance, including stable and garage facilities, of wagons or automobiles, for and the operation of, screen-wagon and city delivery and collection services, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 9, after the word "service," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$400,000," so as to make the clause read:

For mail messenger service, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 11, to insert:

OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For manufacture of adhesive postage stamps, special-delivery stamps, books of stamps, and for coiling of stamps, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 15, to insert:

For manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 17, to insert:

For payment of limited indemnity for the injury or loss of pieces of domestic registered matter, insured, and collect-on-delivery mail, $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General," on page 84, after line 22, to insert:

For stationery for the Postal Service, including blanks, books, printed and engraved matter, binding and carbon paper, and other miscellaneous items for the money-order and registry systems; also the preparation, publication, and free distribution by postmasters to the public of pamphlet containing general postal information; and also pay of one envelope inspector at $1,800 per annum, and one assistant at $900 per annum, $160,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85 after line 6, to insert:

For postmarking, rating, money-order stamps, and electrotype plates, and repairs to same, metal, rubber, and combination type, dates and figures, type holders, ink and pads for canceling and stamping purposes, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 10, to insert:

For defraying expenses incident to the shipment of supplies, including hardware, boxing, packing, cartage, freight, and the pay of one carpenter at $1,200 per annum, and nine requisition filers, at $900 each per annum, for assignment in connection therewith, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 15, to insert:

For equipment for City Delivery Service, including letter boxes, letter-box fasteners, package boxes, posts, furniture, and the erecting and painting of same, also trucks, baskets, satchels, straps, time cards, and time-card frames, and the repairing of such equipment, and for the purchase and repair of presses and dies and manufacture of letter boxes, $40,000

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 22, to insert:

For mail bags and equipment, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," subhead "Contingent expenses," on page 86, after line 7, to insert:

For furniture and repairs, including carpets, file holders and cases, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 9, to insert:

For stationery for department and its several bureaus, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 11, to insert:

For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of buildings, care of grounds, books of reference, periodicals, typewriters and adding machines and exchange of same, street car tickets not exceeding $200, and other necessaries, directly ordered by the Attorney General, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Commerce," subhead "Coast and Geodetic Survey," on page 93, line 7, before the word "not," to strike out "and" and insert "at"; in line 11, after the word "each," to strike out "in all, $3,600," and insert "3 dynamo tenders, $1,080 each; 3 laborers, $840; in all, $5,040," so as to make the clause read:

For additional employees from April 1 to June 30, 1918, inclusive, at not exceeding annual rates of compensation as follows: Six astronomical, geodetic, tidal, and miscellaneous computers, $1,200 each; 3 topographic and hydrographic draftsmen, $1,200 each; 3 clerks, $1,200 each; 3 dynamo tenders, $1,080 each; 3 laborers, $840; in all, $5,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 13, to insert:

For purchase of new instruments, including their exchange, materials and supplies required in the instrument shop, carpenter shop, and drawing division, books, scientific and technical books, journals, books of reference, charts, maps, and subscriptions; copper plates, chart paper, printer's ink, copper, zinc, and chemicals for electrotyping and photographing; engraving, printing, photographing, and electrotyping supplies; photolithographing charts and printing from stone and copper for immediate use; including the employment in the District of Columbia of such personal services, other than clerical, as may be necessary for the prompt preparation of charts, not to exceed $6,000; stationery for office and field parties; transportation of instruments and supplies when not charged to party expenses; office wagon and horses or automobile truck; heating, lighting, and power; telephones, including operation of switchboard; telegrams, ice, and washing; office furniture, repairs, traveling expenses of officers and others employed in the office sent on special duty in the service of the office; miscellaneous expenses, contingencies of all kinds, and not exceeding $3,400 for extra labor, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Lighthouse Service," on page 94, line 16, after the word "hurricane," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$150,000," so as to make the clause read:

For rebuilding, repairing, and reestablishing aids to navigation and structures connected therewith on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico which have been damaged or destroyed by hurricane, $150,000.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to; and I send to the desk an amendment which accomplishes the same result, but makes a transposition to correct an error.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 94, line 16.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now state the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The SECRETARY. On page 94, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$150,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 96, after line 1, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay Irene M. Brady, widow of Hon. James H. Brady, late a Senator from the State of Idaho, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 4, to insert:

To pay Margaret Hughes, widow of William Hughes, late a Senator from the State of New Jersey, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 6, to insert:

To pay Edith McAllister Newlands, widow of Hon. Francis G. Newlands, late a Senator from the State of Nevada, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 9, to insert:

To pay John P. Husting and Mary Husting, heirs at law of Hon. Paul O. Husting, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 12, to insert:

Office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper: For two additional telephone operators from April 1 to June 30, 1918, inclusive, at the rate of $900 per annum each, $450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 16, to insert:

Contingent expenses: For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 18, to insert:

For the Capitol: For repairs, improvements, and equipment for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, which I think the chairman of the committee will accept. It is in accordance with an estimate made by Mr. Woods, Superintendent of the Capitol Buildings and Grounds, and submitted to the Committee on Rules. It was passed upon favorably by the Committee on Rules, but for some reason, either through my mistake or that of some one else, it was not brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, although I thought it had been. It is, as I have stated, estimated for and has been passed upon by a standing committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 96 it is proposed to insert the following:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $8,500.

Mr. MARTIN. I am satisfied that that is correct; I think the appropriation is necessary, and I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, in the amendment of the committee which has been agreed to on page 96, line 21, I desire to move to strike out the words "and Senate Office Building." With that in view, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment beginning on line 19, on page 96, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment referred to was agreed to, will be reconsidered. The question is now on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Virginia if all the committee amendments have been acted on?

Mr. MARTIN. Not quite all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to offer an amendment, but I do not wish to interfere with action upon the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "House of Representatives," on page 97, after line 18 to insert:

Office of the Clerk: For two additional telephone operators from April 1 to June 30, 1918, inclusive, at the rate of $900 per annum each, $450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Government Printing Office," subhead "Printing and binding," on page 99, line 9, after the words "offices," to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,585,841.49," so as to read:

For printing and binding for the War Department and its bureaus and offices, $1,585,841.49.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that completes the committee amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTIN. If the Senator from New Hampshire will yield to me, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 99, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

For printing and binding for the Navy Department, $100,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will inquire of the Senator from Virginia had that not better come in under the Navy Department items? The Senator has put it under the Government Printing Office items.

Mr. MARTIN. I think it had better come in under "Printing and binding"; I think that is the logical place, although it is immaterial where it comes so that it is in the bill. I think it is more logical, however, to put it where I have requested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. After reading the amendment on page 96, beginning in line 19, I will say to the chairman that I think I was mistaken about striking out the words "and Senate Office Building."

Mr. MARTIN. I was sure the Senator was.

Mr. OVERMAN. I therefore ask to disagree to the amendment I offered in line 21.

Mr. WARREN. And leave the text as it originally stood?

Mr. OVERMAN. Leave it as the committee originally reported the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator had better move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment on page 96, beginning in line 19, as amended, was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on reconsidering the vote by which the amendment to the amendment, in line 21, striking out the words "and Senate Office Building" to the amendment reported by the committee, was adopted. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, and the amendment to the amendment is disagreed to. Now the question comes on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I have one more amendment to offer. It is not a committee amendment, but if the Senator from New Hampshire will excuse me I will offer it now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator, of course.

Mr. MARTIN. It is a matter which the Secretary had better read. I will say that it simply permits certain munitions and Army supplies to come in free of duty. It is taking money from one pocket and putting it into another; but the officers at the War Department tell me that it will save a great deal of time and some complications to permit these war supplies to come in free of duty.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

During the present emergency, upon request made by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, there may be imported into the United States, without payment of duty thereon, raw materials, parts or partly fabricated parts of equipment and finished equipment required to hasten the production of munitions or machinery of war, or other necessary war supplies, whenever such duty would otherwise be payable directly or indirectly, from appropriations for the support of the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator having the bill in charge a question. The wording of the amendment in part is this:

whenever such duty would otherwise be payable, directly or indirectly, from appropriations for the support of the Army.

Do I understand that to mean that upon request of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury shall allow everything to come into the United States free whenever such duty would otherwise be payable, directly or indirectly, from appropriations for the support of the Army?

Mr. MARTIN. That is the purpose—not to collect for Army supplies, although they would be dutiable, but whenever the Secretary requests otherwise, that they shall come in duty free.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that would be all right if it applied only to payments made directly from appropriations for the support of the Army.

Mr. MARTIN. That is what it does.

Mr. SMOOT. It says "indirectly," and it seems to me, Mr. President, that that would allow everything to come into the United States free of duty that may come indirectly to the Government, or, in other words, any institution in the United States——

Mr. MARTIN. Oh, no; it must be payable at the United States Treasury. The amendment only releases duties which are payable out of the United States Treasury. If the duties are not collected out of the United States Treasury, the amendment does not touch them at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. That completes all the amendments I have to offer on behalf of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there are two small parks running from Third Street to Sixth Street, bounded on the north by Missouri Avenue, which on two occasions the Committee on the Library has reported should be added to the Botanic Garden. They are separated from the Botanic Garden by Third Street at the present time. The Senate has passed the bill twice unanimously.

Mr. President, in this bill it is proposed to put temporary structures on those two small parks. In every other instance where temporary structures have been built, so far as I know, as a war emergency act, a provision has been made that they shall be removed within a certain definite time. I desire to offer an amendment touching those two parks, along the line that has been adopted in connection with other reservations, providing that they shall be removed within two years, and that those two parks shall be added to the Botanic Garden. I send the amendment to the desk, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, after line 26, at the bottom of the page, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That within two years after the conclusion of the existing war the buildings provided for in this paragraph shall be removed, and the parcels of land known as East Seaton Park and West Seaton Park, lying between Third Street on the east, Sixth Street on the west, Missouri Avenue on the north, and Maine Avenue on the south, shall be attached to and become a part of the United States Botanic Garden, and available for the purposes thereof: Provided further, That the location of conservatories and other improvements of a permanent character which may be built within said parcels shall be confined to areas not intended as the sites for future public buildings and driveways as provided in the plan for that vicinity prepared by the park commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I do not know that I understand it thoroughly; but I am willing to have it adopted and go to conference, when we will investigate it carefully. I am not prepared to express an opinion about it now.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all I could ask—that it be considered in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

For reimbursement to the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred in supplying State troops at the request of the United States marshal at Boston for guard and patrol duty at Boston Harbor in the interest of the Federal Government, $7,056.37.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, that seems to be an expenditure for war purposes made by the State of Massachusetts, and I am very willing to have it go in the bill. I think it ought to be provided for.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the Senator understands that it is an expenditure for war purposes.

Mr. MARTIN. As I understand, it is something that the United States ought to have paid for, and they made the State of Massachusetts pay for it.

Mr. WEEKS. The expenditure was made by the Commonwealth of Massachusets at the request of the United States marshal.

Mr. MARTIN. I think it ought to go in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 16, on page 94, it is proposed to insert:

For the installation of an electrically operated fog-signal whistle on the east breakwater, Nantucket Harbor, Mass., $15,000.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this amendment. It was suggested that possibly there was a contingent fund which would provide for this purpose. I made inquiry of the Department of Commerce, and I find that there is no fund provided for such purposes as this; and it will be necessary, therefore, to make an appropriation. At present there is no signal of any kind at the entrance to Nantucket Harbor, and I do not think that condition ought to be allowed to continue.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to say that the committee has not had a chance to investigate this item. It clearly is not a deficiency, and it has not been estimated for; but if the Senator is willing to allow it to go to conference, with the understanding that the conference committee may have a full opportunity to hear the matter and exercise its judgment in conference, I see no objection.

Mr. WEEKS. I expect that that will be done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think there is no objection, then.

Mr. WEEKS. It is not unlike the proposition of appropriating $100,000 or so for repairs due to the hurricane. This is due to the breaking up of the ice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I have one more amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, line 11, after the figures "$300,000," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended to pay the expense of censoring mail from the military forces connected with the American Expeditionary Force, which mail has been censored in Europe.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that no part of the appropriation would be used for that purpose under present conditions.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Utah is correctly informed on that subject.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah got his information from the Post Office Department.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, my purpose in introducing this amendment is to prevent the necessity of censoring mail twice. I have had brought to my attention several cases where the mail of soldiers who were on the fighting line in Europe which is censored by the military censor abroad is censored again when it reaches this country—mail that is written by the soldier to his wife, to his mother, and to his father. It seems to me that that is almost an outrage, and certainly it is a waste of public money that mail should be censored twice. I want to put a limitation on that kind of expenditure of money—heaping an insult on a soldier who is actually at the front by censoring his mail a second time when it reaches this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator refer to military censoring?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the Postmaster General stated to the committee positively that this duplication does not go on.

Mr. WEEKS. I can exhibit to the Senator from Virginia envelopes showing that mail is censored by the military censor in Europe and is censored again on this side.

Mr. MARTIN. I am willing to have it go into the bill, subject to a reexamination by the conferees.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to make this request of the Senator from Virginia. If that question arises, and the statement is made that mail is not censored twice, I want to be called before the conferees, so that I can demonstrate that it is censored twice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment that was not agreed to by the committee, but subsequently information came in which I think is convincing that the amendment ought to be agreed to. I ask the Secretary to state the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

War materials investigation: For inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances which are particularly needed for carrying on the war, in connection with military and manufacturing purposes, and which have heretofore been largely imported, with a view to developing domestic sources of supply and substitutes for such ores and mineral products as are particularly needed, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries; and including all equipment, supplies, expenses of travel, and subsistence; to continue available during the fiscal year 1919, $150,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to amend by striking from the bill all of lines 9 to 21, both inclusive, on page 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, it is proposed to strike out lines 9 to 21, both inclusive, in the following words:

UNITED STATES FOOD AND FUEL ADMINISTRATIONS.

For expenses of the United States Food and Fuel Administrations, created under authority contained in the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, including personal and other services and rent in the District of Columbia, and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, printing and binding, and necessary supplies and equipment, $1,750,000.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the language I propose to strike out carries as an emergency appropriation for the Food and Fuel Administrations $1,750,000. I am totally at a loss to understand how this item reaches the Senate with the approval of the House under the circumstances which appear to be disclosed by the hearing before the House committee. That hearing, at pages 1149 to 1152, shows that there is an unexpended balance on hand at the present time of $1,257,950.23. With an unexpended balance of that magnitude, it is difficult to understand why we are called upon to appropriate as an emergency matter an additional sum of $1,750,000.

My understanding of the purpose of an emergency appropriation is that it is to meet expenses which have been suddenly thrust upon a department or an officer which could not have been reasonably anticipated when the regular appropriation was asked. On the face of the showing made by the Food Control Department in the hearing before the committee of the House, $1,257,950.23 is still on hand unexpended, and until and unless this record shall show some necessity for more money, Congress, even at this time of wild and reckless extravagance, ought to hesitate to expend a million and three-quarters of money on a department that already has over a million and a quarter of money on hand unexpended.

If Senators will examine this report of Mr. Hoover I believe they will be startled, if, indeed, anything can now startle anybody. The Food Administration has had appropriated for its benefit $5,515,000. Its primary legal existence began August 10, 1917. In addition to that, it has received from the President, out of those moneys which we gave the President to employ for such purposes as the emergency seemed to him to demand, $340,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator repeat the first amount?

Mr. REED. The amount appropriated directly by Congress to the Food Administration is $5,515,000. In addition to that, it appears to have received from the President, out of the President's fund, $340,000, which, it is stated, were in the way of preliminary expenses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri further yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator from Missouri any way of ascertaining through what avenues the expenditure of about $6,000,000 has been made by the Food Administrator? Has it been largely for the payment of the help that he has employed throughout the country?

Mr. REED. There are two reports filed, which make up two large pamphlets. The one of them in my hands, which is principally an accounting, has aproximately 190 pages in it. They comprehend many items, some of which I will comment on.

On January 31 of this year it was stated before the committee of the House that of the $5,515,000 there had been disbursed $1,985,429.08, but that there were encumbrances of $2,272,383.22. Now, I pause to inquire if anybody in this Chamber ever heard of a public department of the Government being run in just that way?

Naturally, we expect bills to be paid with reasonable promptness. The Government is supposed to be a good paymaster, especially where moneys have been duly appropriated and some one has been authorized to pay the money down. Yet, on January 31, the day Mr. Hoover testified before the House committee, the amount of expenses actually paid was $1,985,429.08, while the encumbrances, whatever that may mean, were $2,272,383.22. I am curious to know why these bills have not been paid and reported to Congress. I want to know why they have been held back in this remarkable manner. I gather from the testimony that was given before the House committee that these encumbrances are for bills that have been incurred. I read from the testimony before the House committee:

The CHAIRMAN. From the statement you have just handed to me it appears that you had a total appropriation for the Food and Fuel Administrations of $5,515,000; that out of that there has been an actual expenditure of $1,985,429.08; that there are now obligations, or what are called here encumbrances, of $2,272,383.22, leaving what you designate as an available balance—and what we frequently speak of as a free balance—of $1,257,950.23.

Mr. HUTTERLY. Yes, sir.

I repeat, I am very curious to know—and the Senate has a right to be curious when it is asked to dip into the Treasury and take out a million and three-quarters of the taxpayers' money—why these bills have not been paid, why these encumbrances exist, and what they are for. I affirm that in the whole history of this Government there has never been such a saturnalia of wastefulness and of extravagance as I shall show you has gone on and is going on in the Food Administration. A drunken sailor landed in port for the first time in five years and filled up with a bad quality of New England rum never threw money around as the Food Administration is now doing.

The law under which this report is made reads as follows:

SEC. 21. The President shall cause a detailed report to be made to the Congress on the 1st day of January of each year of all proceedings had under this act during the year preceding. Such report shall, in addition to other matters, contain an account of all persons appointed or employed, the salary or compensation paid or allowed each, the aggregate amount of the different kinds of property purchased or requisitioned, the use and disposition made of such property, and a statement of all receipts, payments, and expenditures, together with a statement showing the general character, and estimated value of all property then on hand, and the aggregate amount and character of all claims against the United States growing out of this act.

A statement that there are encumbrances of over two and one-fourth million dollars does not comply with that act.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Food Administration in some of its forms or organizations has large sources of income, the collection and distribution of which the country is entitled to have information about. I hold in my hand what is called a Food Administration agreement. It is entitled "Food Administration Grain Corporation," and it would appear now that they have organized a corporation. Who it is, what it is, I do not know; but this agreement, which I place in the RECORD and ask to have incorporated as a part of my remarks without reading all of it, contains these provisions, speaking in a very condensed form:

That the Grain Corporation agrees with the miller by the terms of which the miller agrees in purchasing wheat that he will observe and respect all the rules and regulations of the Grain Corporation. The Grain Corporation then guarantees the miller against loss by a decline, and then the miller agrees to pay to the Grain Corporation 1 per cent on all wheat purchased by him at the price level fixed by the price commissioner.

I insert the agreement in full:

[Execute in duplicate and return both copies.]

FOOD ADMINISTRATION GRAIN CORPORATION.

AGREEMENT.

This agreement, made and entered into this —— day of ——— A. D. 1917, between the Food Administration Grain Corporation, of the one part, and the undersigned ——— ——— of ——— (hereinafter called the miller) of the other part,

Witnesseth whereas the said Food Administration Grain Corporation has been created pursuant to an act of Congress approved August 10, 1917, and known as the food-control act; and

Whereas the undersigned ——— ——— is a miller and is desirous of aiding and promoting the efficient administration of said act and of securing the purposes thereby to be accomplished,

Now therefore, in consideration of the premises it is mutually agreed as follows:

1. The miller hereby agrees that in purchasing wheat ——— shall observe and respect and be governed by all rules and regulations which said Food Administration Grain Corporation may from time to time enact and promulgate.

2. Said Food Administration Grain Corporation hereby expressly guarantees the miller against a loss by a decline in value on all accumulated surplus of unsold wheat bought in accordance with the grain corporation's regulations, and flour ground therefrom, in the event of a decline from the price at which said wheat was bought, which said guaranty shall be adjusted promptly after change of price. Said corporation further agrees to endeavor to maintain in available positions an adequate supply of suitable wheat to meet the milling demands of the miller at the general price level of wheat, as recommended by the Price Commission with such adjustments, by reason of freight, storage, insurance, interest or other causes as shall be deemed necessary by the grain corporation, it being the intent of the grain corporation to make no profit on sales of wheat to the miller.

3. In consideration of the assurance against a loss by a decline in price as described in paragraph 2, the miller hereby agrees to pay to the said Food Administration Grain Corporation a fee equal to 1 per cent on all wheat purchased by ——— at a price level based upon that fixed by the Price Commission established under the authority of the Food Administrator, or purchased under the direction of the Grain Corporation and used by the miller for milling purposes (exclusive of grain bought to fill existing contracts). This fee shall be accounted for and paid over to the grain corporation monthly on the basis of grain so bought and actually milled during said period. This charge is intended, so far as may be, to equalize storage charges and other expenses of holding and handling grain held by the said grain corporation, and it is the intent as above of said grain corporation to make no profit in the sales of wheat to the millers.

Effective September 10, 1917.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have subscribed this agreement by their duly authorized representatives the day and year first above written.

Without going into details it is enough to say that the scheme worked out absolutely compels every farmer in the United States to sell his wheat at the price fixed. It compels practically every bushel of it to go through the machinery of the boards of trade and ultimately through the Grain Corporation, and compels every miller to acquire substantially his entire stock from the Grain Corporation. Consequently every bushel of wheat in the United States must pay its toll of 1 per cent to this corporation.

Mr. President, last year's wheat crop was 650,828,000 bushels. The price fixed for No. 1 northern was $2.20, but the farmer does not realize that price. I estimated the other day that the farmer receives $1.85, and hence I use that figure now. Six hundred and fifty million eight hundred and twenty-eight thousand bushels of wheat at $1.85 a bushel aggregates $1,204,031,800. One per cent upon that, which must go to this corporation organized by Mr. Hoover, brings the stupendous sum of $12,040,318.

I want to know what has become and what is becoming of that $12,000,000. I want to know it before Congress votes anymore money to this institution. It would seem that a partial statement is made, and it appears at page 44 of the report filed on January 19. I want to read it into the RECORD:

[Exhibit J.]

FOOD ADMINISTRATION GRAIN CORPORATION.

Statement of receipts and disbursements for period Aug. 10, 1917, to Nov. 30, 1917, inclusive.

RECEIPTS.

Capital stock subscriptions	$50,000,000.00
Grain and flour sales	119,779,196.12
Guarantee and operating expense fund	1,927,817.31
Reserve for marine insurance	80,629.25
Total receipts	171,787,642.68

DISBURSEMENTS.

Office furniture and fixtures		$70,376.76
Grain and flour purchases		142,311,047.85
Accounts receivable		1,121,141.97
Expense:
General office	$94,103.62
Agencies	211,081.37
		305,184.99
Total disbursements		143,807,751.57
Cash balance		27,979,891.11
		171,787,642.68

Notice the item "Office furniture and fixtures, $70,376.76."

Somebody suggests that it must be Louis XIV furniture.

Notice the item "Agencies, $211,081.37." Also notice the enormous cash balance of $27,979,891.11.

Mr. President, as nearly as I can decipher Mr. Hoover's accounts, he has cost the country in expense alone—

Paid out	$1,985,429.08
Obligations	2,272,383.22
Received from President's fund	340,000.00
Grain Corporation office and agency	305,184.99
Grain Corporation office fixtures	70,376.76
Grain Corporation accounts	1,121,141.97
Total	6,094,331.03
He has cash on hand	1,257,950.23
He demands	1,750,000.00
Total	3,007,950.23

This, he says, will only run him to June 1. In other words, he will cost, for expenses alone, for 10 months, $6,094,331.03 plus $3,007,950.23, or $9,102,281.26. To employ a slang phrase, "that is going some." Add to this the interest, at 4 per cent, on the fifty million he has used for six months and we have $1,000,000, bringing the total to $10,102,281.26. This much, if I can understand the Hoover report, we know. I would like to have further light on the Grain Corporation.

Mr. Hoover had not been appointed to the office. The bill was not passed until August 10. Every item of the expenditure that I now read to you was incurred and included in the account for June 30, over a month before the bill was passed, before it could be known by any person with certainty that Congress would pass a bill and, if so, in what form it would be passed. Yet we find this statement:

"Herbert Hoover. Expenses in preparatory work, $5,903.74."

No date.

Ditto, ditto again, $4,081.

Ditto and ditto again, without date, $5,427.51.

Total, $15,412.25.

Going over to the next page and carrying it along to the quarter ending September 30 you will find that the amount is increased to $22,681.08.

The expenses I have read are evidently Mr. Hoover's personal expenses. If they are anything else, he is to blame for not making it plainer in his report. But he also had a pay roll, as you will find on reading page 146 of this report, which shows a pay roll, before he was ever appointed to any office by authority of law, of $32,692.23.

That would hire a large number of dollar-a-year men, and the public has been pretty generally given to understand that Mr. Hoover's force is largely composed of patriots. Is it not a most remarkable thing that before the food bill was passed by Congress Mr. Hoover had set up an office and drawn from the Public Treasury for his own personal expenses something like $22,000 and for employees over $30,000?

Mr. GORE. Did these accounts pass the Comptroller of the Treasury?

Mr. REED. I do not think they go through the Comptroller. Here is a total of $55,373.31 expended before a bill is passed, before there is any authority of law to expend a penny, and by a gentleman who has no kind of official position.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I ask the Senator if he has taken occasion to run through the items of expenditure in this report?

Mr. REED. Some of them I have and some of them I am going to call attention to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I notice, for instance, one here—and there are several items covering the same project—carbon paper, $418.95, and a still more remarkable one, $58 spent for erasers. I think it would be well for the Senator if he would ask one of his secretaries to count up what is paid out for typewriters, as the Underwood Co. has evidently had a first-class customer. Let me call the Senator's attention to the item of pencils. On one page is $135.60, $97.90, and $143.84 for pencils. Then, turning over to page 2, there is another item——

Mr. REED. If the Senator wants to go to typewriters, I can tell him the page on which to find the item. On the bottom of page 158, the Senator will find these: Underwood typewriters, $25,717.50; the Remington, $13,510.04; the L. C. Smith, $8,540; the Royal $950; and the Oliver, $49.

Mr. GALLINGER. In addition to the items for pencils, I want to read two additional items: "Pencils, $98.90; pencils, $203.04." There must be $600 or thereabouts expended for pencils on these two pages. I have not had time to look up all of these expenditures.

Mr. REED. I can give the Senator some items which are even more startling than those. Let me start with the Hoover speeches.

Hoover's speeches cost the Government $16,000; I do not know what additional commitments are included in the two and a quarter million dollars encumbrances, but the speeches that are reported cost $16,000; and I think he also had the franking privilege; so that is $16,000 for printing alone. Again, dropping into the vernacular, that is "a whale of a bill" for speeches—$16,000! Of course, it is remarkable to me that they had to be circulated at all, for I can not understand why words falling from Mr. Hoover's lips would not be greedily sought after by the press of the country and circulated by the millions free through the columns of the public prints.

Again, Hoover buttons cost the Government $40,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Buttons?

Mr. REED. I will ask the Senator to look at pages 152 and 153. Let me read a few of these items. Whitehead & Hoge Co., metal and celluloid buttons, voucher No. 983, $3,367. The same company have the following other items under date of October 26—this is one day's order, one day's business—$3,083, $3,367, $3,700, $3,700, $3,700, $3,700, $3,700, and $2,479. The aggregate, as I run it up, is about $40,000. Now, I wonder how much of that would have been done if a man had been spending his own money. When we wrote the food-control bill the main purpose of which, as everybody knows, was to encourage production—it is so recited in the preamble of the bill and so recited in its body—who was it dreamed that we were going to expend $40,000 for buttons? How much more there has been spent since the account was filed I do not know. This is what is reported. How many buttons are to be included in this $1,750,000 that is now being asked. I inquire of the chairman, if he can tell me? Has any information been furnished to our committee upon this subject with reference to this remarkable request? But I proceed, for buttons are only one of the items.

Mr. GORE. Are they counted as encumbrances?

Mr. REED. I do not know how they are counted. Let us come to the matter of photographs. Let me read you the photograph bill: The Commercial Camera Co., $115.67; Harris & Ewing, $24.75; the National Photo Co., $92, $92.35, $31.75, $72.10; Harris & Ewing again, $16, $178.50, $47.50, $33; National Photo Co. again, $116.20; Clinedinst Studio, $614; Harris & Ewing again, $27.70 and $109.40; Harris & Ewing again, $40; National Photo Co. again, $206.40 and $178.20; Harris & Ewing again, $64.05 and $24.10; Elizabeth Watson, $13.80; Underwood & Underwood, $12; National Photo Co., $227.50 and again, $155.75.

I do not know whose pictures were taken; I do not know what graceful forms and classic features may have been thus produced and sent broadcast for the delectation of our country. There is only one item that is specific. It is one of the smallest items in the list. It is the bill of Underwood & Underwood; and it is recited that it is for Hoover's picture. I have not stopped to add how many hundreds of dollars we have expended in photographs; I do not know what these photographs are; I have tried to find out, and when you telephone one of the photographers down here and ask him what this bill is for he always has to refer you to his clerk, and the clerk is always out. They talk from the other end of the wire as though they are speaking in fear and trembling lest they shall not get any more of this work. Who was it conceived, when we were passing the food-control bill, that we were going to spend thousands of dollars for photographs.

This is a rare account. It ought to be read by everybody in the Senate. It will not be read by many, because Senators are too busy; but they ought to read it. Forty thousand dollars for buttons and thousands of dollars for photographs.

Here is another item—moving-picture slides. For the purpose of producing more wheat and more pork in this country and feeding our allies we have expended $7,811.76 on moving-picture slides. I have seen some slides that I suspected were being produced by the Food Administration, just as I have suspected some editorial comments that accompanied large-sized advertisements. I have seen those moving-picture slides. Generally they are very stupid reproductions of something that did nobody any good, but which always advertise the Food Administration. When you go to see them in the future and pay your 10 cents or 30 cents, or whatever it costs you to get into the particular moving-picture emporium that you patronize, you will have the sweet satisfaction of knowing that you have paid for those pictures twice—first, as a taxpayer and proprietor, and, second, as a patron of the theater.

Now, I come to another item; what it is "deponent saith not." I call attention to it as one of those mysteries that can only be understood when one has become one of the inner circle of a Federal bureau. Not having yet become an initiate, I can only read it, and out of the abundance of my ignorance submit it to you.

For medallions, $18,000. What is this medallion? Whose medallion is it? How much does it contribute toward food production? How many soldiers will it feed in France? How many ships will it man? What is it except a wild waste of money by a man who came here and has been able to thrust his arm into the National Treasury deeper than any other man in all the history of this country.

Over $27,000,000 on hand in one fund, over $2,000,000 on hand in another fund, and asking for $1,750,000 more!

But I read on. Here is the Capital Publishing Co., with an item of $10,500; there is no description; no information.

Observe the motor-car account. I think it is imperfect. Automobiles, one, $534.58. That must be a Ford. I do not see how they came to get a Ford car, unless it was to stand in with Henry; one, a touring car, $1,065; a runabout, $367; a nondescript, $421.88.

Then we come to the question of home cards, pledge cards, and so forth. I have only run over eight pages and find items aggregating over $33,000,000. I can not even make a wild guess as to what all these cards have cost, but there are over 20 pages of items in addition to the 8 pages I have gone over; they run into many, many thousands of dollars.

Now, Mr. President, I call attention to some other items, all of which may be susceptible of easy explanation; but if you will turn to page 112 of this book you will find this curious sort of item, "Mary J. Downey, rent, 1628 I. Street, $180." Without reading, I will put in a statement showing some of these rent items:

These items, with the Gordon Hotel item excepted, are not for office rent; they seem to be rent for individual residences.

There are a lot of scattered places. What they are I do not know. Now, here is another item, "Rent charge to Hugh J. Phillips for premises at the corner of Vermont Avenue and L Street, $800 a month." I do not pretend to say that I have found half of the rent items. This has been a very hasty examination on my part, but it seems that there are a number of places around town for which rent is being paid.

Here is an item that I can not pass over:

The Columbia Printing Company, Incorporated, applications for licenses, $204.07.

Then:

The Columbia Printing Company, Incorporated, the Prussian system, $551.50.

I do not know what the "Prussian system" is; I am in total ignorance on that question; but it seems to me that Congress ought to have some light on that important item.

Here are some other items:

Printing Hoover's supplement, $757.15.
Publicity work, to W. D. Sheehan, $160.
For writing manuscript, to Elizabeth Watson, $900.

Truly, we have some valuable literary assistants in this department. It would be interesting to know the character of this particular article, whether it is one of the numerous eulogies penned regarding Mr. Hoover, which constantly emanate from his headquarters, or whether it was a dissertation upon yoking, or—well, just what it might be—$900 for a manuscript!

Understand this is the people's money, and who cares how much of the people's money is spent? Have we not $27,000,000 and more on hand, and have we not in another account $2,000,000 on hand, and have we not a Congress that will give us $1,750,000 without asking questions? Why not spend $40,000 for buttons in one chunk? It is the people's money. Why not expend it, especially as the spender has probably never paid a dollar of taxes in the United States, and certainly has never voted here, for so he testified.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I recall, the Senator from Missouri and I occupied very much the same position on some of the details of the food-control bill when it was originally passed, and as passed the bill placed a certain work in Mr. Hoover's hands under rather limited powers. It placed him in a position where he was required to maintain a campaign of education. He was compelled to depend very largely on the voluntary cooperation of the American people, and went out in his work not only to educate the American people, but he went out for the purpose of arousing their interest and their cooperation. My observation in my own State has been that his agents have done this work in schools; they have done it by voluntary organizations, and have done it in such a way that the use of buttons such as are used in Red Cross work, the use of prizes, as in the case of the medallions, and the use of literature, such as that to which the Senator has referred, is really about the only purpose for which money could be expended to arouse public sentiment and toward crystallizing public sentiment. My observation has been that this campaign has been remarkably successful in securing the voluntary cooperation of the American people. Now, I should like to ask the Senator this question: Does he not think, under those circumstances, that to make a campaign and secure popular support of this work was rather better than to endow Mr. Hoover with power to enforce his views? He was compelled to arouse public cooperation, and how could he do it except by the methods which he has adopted?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, he was not compelled to do anything. That is the first answer that I make to the Senator. The next answer I make is that, if he saw fit to undertake to arouse public sentiment, that to arouse public sentiment by buying $70,000 worth of furniture, to arouse public sentiment by paying a thousand dollars for this manuscript and $900 for that manuscript, to arouse public sentiment by spending thousands of dollars for photographs, to arouse public sentiment by the reckless throwing away of the people's money is not justifiable, whether he had authority or did not have authority. Furthermore, as I have shown, through the corporation that he has organized he will take off in fees this year over $12,000,000—forced fees.

The Senator says Mr. Hoover has no authority. I grant you he has no legal and proper authority, but, by the exercise of the power that we did give him—the power of licensing—he has so employed it that he has compelled every bushel of wheat in the United States to go through his hopper, and, as it goes through, he takes off 1 per cent of its value; and that figures over $12,000,000. If he does not have power except to appeal to the consciences of the American people, then he is guilty of a usurpation to-day such as has never been witnessed in a free country since time was. He has undertaken to control the price of every farm product; and, if he has no authority, then by what right does he compel the millers of the country to engage themselves to pay to his corporation 1 per cent on all the wheat they handle? If he has no authority, then by what right does he send out to the grocers of this town the command that they can not sell the citizen wheat flour unless at the same time he shall buy an equal amount of some other kind of cereal, whether he wants it or not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator, if he will yield to me. I am interested in one statement the Senator has made, because I have had some correspondence in regard to it, and that is the power of Mr. Hoover to collect 1 cent a bushel on wheat that goes through his "hopper," as the Senator calls it. What becomes of that $12,000,000 he collects, and what does he collect it for?

Mr. REED. I have asked the question; I can not answer it. But I am being drawn away from these items. I will come back to this particular item in a moment and I intend to be rather brief.

Here is another item:

Preparing pamphlets for publicity, to Mr. Judd, $1,000.
Luncheons at the Lafayette Hotel, $82.25.

Now, here are some items that are interesting:

Teaspoons, $132.68.
Coffee urn and trays, $48.25.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will yield, may I inquire if Mr. Hoover is running an eating house?

Mr. REED. I do not know, but this item looks like a restaurant (reading):

Steam table, $488.38.
Electric range, $100.31.
Hudson bicycles, $60.
Car tickets, $5.
Gold Medal flour, $43.75.
Camera, $147.83.
Flour and sugar to Corby Baking Co., $44.49.

Now, let us see under what authority all this money was expended. I read the body of the act:

Be it enacted, etc., That by reason of the existence of a state of war, it is essential to the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, and for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, to assure an adequate supply and equitable distribution, and to facilitate the movement, of foods, feeds, fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas, and fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients, tools, utensils, implements, machinery and equipment required for the actual production of foods, feeds, and fuels, hereafter in this act called necessaries; to prevent, locally or generally, scarcity, monopolization—

And so forth. That is the authority. That was the business in which they were engaged. How do they, then, get this particular authority to use this money? Where do they find it?

I am going to read you from an address delivered by Julius H. Barnes, the president of this grain corporation, in a speech he made on January 17 at the La Salle Hotel, in Chicago.

Somebody sent me a manuscript of that speech. Mr. Barnes was a very large grain dealer, one of that class of men who were held up before the country when this bill was about to be passed as horrible examples of profiteers, of wicked men who gambled upon the boards of trade. I do not say Mr. Barnes was a gambler; but all men on boards of trade were classed together, and were held up before the country as objects of scorn, as wicked creatures who had to be controlled and put out of business; yet the Food Administrator's manly form had not settled securely in his chair of office until he called the biggest one of all these board of trade wheat dealers and put him at the head of the grain corporation. In every town that I know of he has selected the same class of men to be his representatives. In my own city the man who represents the Food Administration, who has been put in to boss the other members of the board of trade, is a man who would come within all of the denunciations that Mr. Hoover ever uttered except that of being a grain gambler. He belongs to that class of men whom Mr. Hoover denounced generally to the public. In the city of St. Louis Mr. Hoover is represented by a gentleman against whom I say nothing further than that he was "one of the chief of the sinners," if, indeed, they were sinners at all.

Mr. Barnes in the speech that he made on the food bill tells us where and how the Food Administration got its authority. I read:

And the food bill finally passed, declaring its purposes to be to prevent private control and establish public control of necessities—and then without a single effective weapon in it except an obscure clause which permitted voluntary agreements.

An obscure clause which permitted voluntary agreements:

And this bill, which came out of conference curtailed, robbed and shorn of its power, was the only bill on which we had to build, and almost in 48 hours a plan had to be constructed to take control of the wheat crop of America, and to so fairly control it that it could be apportioned not only to satisfy our needs but to discharge obligations to our allies which we were beginning to recognize as pressing and sacred. And it was only through the clause of voluntary agreements that any effective control was possible under the food bill as it passed; that we sought to create a price monopoly in this country by that weapon of voluntary agreements.

I am now answering the question of the Senator from Nebraska. Says Mr. Barnes, the president of this corporation, the right hand and sustainer and prop of Mr. Hoover: "It was only through voluntary agreements that they found the power to create a price monopoly."

When by enlisting so many of the mills with us, enlisting them to aid us by working under our direction, and, through the Grain Corporation securing in our hands the agreement of the allies that all of their needs should be provided through that channel—taking advantage of the fact that the embargo had shut the neutral from our market. It was on that basis that a public control was proposed of this most vital crop. And when we had established by voluntary agreements a practical monopoly the responsibility to make the price on the chief crop of America almost appalled us. Then a Price Commission was evolved and after considerable hesitation they recommended to the President of the United States that a fair price, all things considered, was $2.20 per bushel.

I am glad Mr. Barnes made that speech. I am glad that he made it in that frank manner. With a frankness that is brutal—and I do not use the word in any harsh way toward Mr. Barnes—he tells the American Congress that when it passed this bill, it passed shorn of the powers they had wanted; that Congress brought it out of conference in such shape that they could not control the price. The fair inference from his words is that Congress did not intend to give them any such power. Then they hunted for a power, and they found we had given the power to make voluntary agreements, and they employed that power to make voluntary agreements for the purpose of fixing prices, which Congress never gave them and never intended to give them, and which Mr. Hoover, before the passage of the bill, testified he did not expect or want.

Time and time again, when Mr. Hoover was testifying upon the passage of the food-control bill, he solemnly assured the Agricultural Committee, and through it the Congress, that it was not intended to affect in any way the prices of the producer; that it was intended to be limited in its operation to the middleman; that it was the profiteer—the middleman—that he was after, and repeatedly he said: "There is no price fixing in this bill," and there was none.

But when the bill came out, Mr. Barnes and these keen men that had been called together from the boards of trade, these gentlemen who knew all about the habits of the bulls and the haunts of the bears, because they made their habitat with them and were of them, said "Behold: There is the power for voluntary agreements. That power to make voluntary agreements will distort so that we will be able through it to fix these farmers so that they will have no market." Everybody knows that if it were not for the law against voluntary agreements a few men could get together in a room in a short time, make a combination by voluntary agreement, and control the price of any article.

I now read a portion of the testimony Mr. Hoover gave when this bill was being urged for passage.

Mr. Hoover was delivering a lecture to the Agricultural Committee:

There are a number of current illusions about the legislation proposed. The first is the illusion in some quarters that the bill is directed against the producer

Now, notice his language:

It would not be necessary to traverse this statement to anyone that had read the bill. It especially excepts the producer from every one of its provisions, with the exception of one section, and that is the provision for a guaranty; and this section is designed to entirely benefit and secure the producer.

That is the $2 minimum guaranty for wheat—

The savings of the American consumer ought not and should not be made by a sacrifice on the part of the producer—

In other words, the saving to the American consumer should not be made by regulating the farmer's prices. That is what Mr. Hoover was telling the American farmer and the American Congress.

I read on:

They should be made by the exclusion of speculative profits from the handling of our foodstuffs.

Again, he said:

The second illusion is that there is price fixing by this bill. There is no provision for price fixing—and no such thing can be carried out under the bill.

Now, notice—

Now, Mr. Hoover's chief apostle tells us that after this bill had been passed, its powers shorn and reduced, Mr. Hoover and his associates got together and they found that there was no price fixing in the bill; but he tells you in good, round terms that they discovered there was the power to make voluntary agreements and that these usurpers concluded they could employ the privilege of making voluntary agreements so as to establish monopoly prices, and that they set about doing it immediately. Within 48 hours before the ink of the President's signature was dry, before the country had finished congratulating itself upon the low prices that the consumer was going to get and the high prices that the farmer was to receive, before the people of the cities had time to quit complimenting themselves upon the fact that a great savior had come who was going to give them cheap bread and cheap meat and give the farmers high prices, their new guardians, the reformed bulls and bears and Mr. Hoover, had conceived a plan by which they could corner the grain, control the markets of America, and fix prices to suit themselves.

Mr. President, there is such a thing as good faith. No man can ever afford to lay it aside. There is such a thing as a pledge of honor, and no man can afford to disregard such a pledge. If the power to fix prices had been written in this bill after the statement Mr. Hoover made, it seems to me he would have declined to enforce such a power, for he would have said, "I told the American people and the American Congress that no such power was in the bill, and I will not exercise it." But instead of taking that position, we find the man who told us there was no price fixing in the bill seated around the table in consultation with a lot of board-of-trade sharps—notice I do not say "sharks"; I say "sharps"—devising a plan to do the very thing their leader assured the people and Congress could not be done, and they are now extending that on to other articles and are further employing it to levy toll upon all wheat bought or sold.

This much of a digression I make for the benefit of that Senator who asked where the authority came from to collect the money, the $12,000,000 that is coming out of the producer and the consumer alike in this country and that is going into the coffers of a corporation.

Now, notice another statement of Mr. Barnes. For its proper appreciation I beg to say by way of preliminary that the country was startled the other day when it was told by Mr. McAdoo that "Mr. Hoover was the sole purchasing agent for the allies." I stood on the floor of the Senate when this bill was being considered, and argued that a man who had recently come from England, where he had spent all of his grown-up life, ought not to be given this great power over our people, because he might have a natural bias and leaning and sympathy toward the country of his long-time adoption. Because I made that argument I was severely criticized, not only on the floor of the Senate but in the press of the country. It was said that I was appealing to prejudice. Let me at this point say that I never entertained prejudice against any man because he may have happened to be born in England, or because he happened to migrate to England, and lived there all of his grown-up life. I have no prejudice against any man because of that. But the point I sought to impress was this: When we were giving authority over our foodstuffs, that authority ought not to be vested in any man who might have a prejudice or might have a sympathy in favor of the country of his long-time residence.

But, Mr. President, many virtuous editors rose and denounced me for being personal. There was no personal feeling in it. I have no personal feeling now. Mr. Hoover means no more to me than a name and a principle that is involved and wrapped up in his present official conduct.

But now what are we told? We are told by the Secretary of the Treasury, the biggest man in the Cabinet, that Mr. Hoover is, in fact, the sole purchasing agent for the allies. Mr. Hoover does not deny the soft impeachment; and now comes his associate, Mr. Barnes, and tells us, in the language which I have just read, that—

Through the grain corporation we have secured into our hands the agreement of the allies that all of their needs shall be provided through that channel, taking advantage of the fact that the embargo had shut the neutral from our market. It was on that basis that a public control was proposed of this most vital crop.

So, Mr. President, you now have the fact admitted. I challenge the attention of every lawyer in the Senate, of every man who has ever sat upon a bench, and of every man who understands the rudiments of equity, to the fact that there is now established in this country an agency, a power, set up under our Government, which, by the distortion of the purpose of a law passed by Congress, has gained complete control of the farmer's market, and is able to fix the price upon every bushel of wheat that is raised in the United States—such being the declaration of Mr. Julius H. Barnes, such being the fact well known to those who have studied the case for a long time—and that that power which sets a price upon the wheat of the farmer in this country is at the same time the agent of foreign Governments and foreign persons that are to be the purchasers of large quantities of that wheat.

I do not care, sir, whether or not we are in alliance with Great Britain and with France and with Italy—God bless them all—their agents should not fix the price upon the products of American farms. Their representative should not be the master of the American farmer. They should not be the buyers and, through their agents, the sellers.

No man can serve two masters. Even if the American farmer is to have a price arbitrarily fixed upon his products; it ought to be fixed by a man who represents the American farmer alone, and he ought not to owe an allegiance, either by contract or otherwise, to foreign governments or to foreign merchants.

Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARREN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not a fact well known to the Senator from Missouri that the foreign Governments were required to accept Mr. Hoover as their agent? Their agent was appointed by the President of the United States for the purpose of carrying out functions which the necessities of war compel us to perform in provisioning our allies on the other side. Is it not a fact that Mr. Hoover is not their agent selected by them, but their agent named by us, whom they are required to accept, and does not that entirely alter the situation?

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Illinois desire to ask me a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, Mr. President. I desire to invite the Senator's attention to the statement he has made as to France and Britain being the allies of the United States, and to ask him if he does not understand that there is really no such relation between France and the United States and Britain and the United States; that there is no alliance between the United States and Britain of any nature that would give Mr. Hoover, or any other agency whatsoever, the position of agent for the United States upon the theory that he was the agent of any member of an alliance with which France or Britain was connected? I beg to say to the Senator that, as I understand it, and must insist in behalf of my Government, there is no alliance between this country and Great Britain or France.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course, I use the term "allies" in the sense in which we ordinarily use it. I do not know what our arrangements are with France and Great Britain technically; but I know that for all practical purposes we are at the present time fighting one war, and that in so far as that is concerned our interests are to a large extent the same. And so, without stopping to debate the technical phases of the question raised by the Senator from Illinois, and with that one word of explanation, I pass to the interrogatory of the Senator from Nebraska.

I do not know the facts to be as the interrogatory of the Senator from Nebraska appears to indicate. The statement made by Mr. McAdoo did not indicate that the President of the United States had said to Great Britain and our other allies that they must purchase their grain through Mr. Hoover's corporation. The statement contained in Mr. Barnes's speech, which I have just read, would not indicate that; and I question very seriously whether the President of the United States ever said to these foreign countries—our allies or our friends or our associates, by whatever name you may choose to call them—"You must buy through Mr. Hoover's corporation, and upon his terms."

On the contrary, I think Mr. Hoover's testimony which he gave before the Agricultural Committee before the bill was ever passed indicates that he was himself at that time most urgently insistent that the allies should have a single purchasing agent. I can quote the Senator that testimony or refer him to it as soon as I conclude. I do not have it on my desk at this moment.

It will be urged by some that we ought to furnish our grains to our allies as cheaply as they are furnished to our own people, the argument being that we are engaged in a common cause. But, Mr. President, if that is true, the obligation ought to be mutual.

If we are to furnish to our allies the things they need as cheaply as we furnish them to our own people, if we are to arbitrarily control the price of our products for their benefit, then there should be a reciprocal relation and the goods they produce and we need ought to be furnished to us at a regulated price, for if they be our allies then the relation is mutual. There is no more reason why we should sell our products at a controlled price and buy theirs at a war price than there is that they should buy ours at a war price and sell theirs at a controlled price. Examine the reports and find the enormous amount of goods we are buying from the allied countries every year and ask yourselves if we are buying at war prices and selling at controlled prices what the result must be.

Mr. President, at this point, although it is aside from the theme I am discussing, I want to put another matter before the country. A few days ago Mr. Hoover certified to us that the East was about to starve to death, and said it was because the railroads could not haul the grain. Mr. McAdoo said, "Tell me where your grain is and I will haul it." That ended the matter. Then a few days later the country was again told there was going to be an enormous wheat shortage; that we were confronting something like wheat starvation in this country. The impression was broadly given that so much of our wheat had been sent abroad that there was not enough left to feed our people, and the suggestion was made we would have to eat a great deal less than we ever had eaten.

I took occasion the other day to challenge those statements, although I had not had time then to examine the records. I now have the figures, and I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have more wheat in this country to-day than we had at this same period last year.

The wheat crop of 1916 was 636,318,000 bushels; of 1917, 650,828,000 bushels. That is to say, in 1917 we produced more wheat than we did in 1916 by 14,510,000 bushels. The wheat exported, both in the form of wheat and flour, from July 1, 1916, to March 1, 1917, was 135,000,000 bushels, and for the same period of time in 1917–18, 120,000,000 bushels. In other words, we shipped abroad 15,000,0000 bushels less in 1917 than we did for the same period of time in 1916, whereas our crop was 14,510,000 bushels greater, so that we have in round numbers 30,000,000 bushels more wheat in this country to-day than we had at this same period last year.

Why, then, should these alarming reports be sent out to the country? Why should the people be told they are about to starve to death? Why should they be told one day that they are going to starve to death because there are not any cars and then when that statement is refuted, why should a statement be made to the country that leads the people to understand that the wheat has been shipped out of the country when, as a matter of fact, we are 30,000,000 bushels better off to-day than we were during this period one year ago?

It is difficult to understand why statements of this kind are made. It is difficult to understand what motive can inspire any man to put forth declarations of this sort. If the railroads had been under private control and the statement had been made by Mr. Hoover that was made, all the railroad presidents in the world might have made solemn affidavits that they were ready to move the wheat, this country would have believed that Mr. Hoover was correct in his statement when he said that there were not any cars to move the wheat. But it happened that William G. McAdoo was in control of the railroads and he spoke as one having authority, not as these mere scribes, the former presidents of railroads, and when he said there were cars the people took his word for it.

Then we were told that for some mysterious reason we were going to starve to death any way. I have answered that from the figures.

Mr. President, I have only a word or two more to say. If you will look through these reports of the Food Administration you will find the most astounding salary list. When we examined Mr. Hoover before the sugar-investigating committee the question was asked about the salary of Mr. Allen, whom he brought here. Mr. Hoover stated that he was receiving $200 a month, my recollection is, for expenses, but I find in looking at this book that he is a $4,800 a year salaried man. I find there are men drawing salaries of $5,000 here and similar amounts in various cities and towns of the United States. Some of these men work for the corporation; some of them, perhaps, work for the general organizations; but it is in fact all one, and the expenses first or last come from the American public.

My attention has been called to a telegram from London. I want to read a little of it. It quotes from Edmund Burke, of Peek Bros. & Winch (Ltd.), of London, England.

> This food control is partly a folly, partly a sham, but it is altogether a crime against the public, and especially the poor. I say it has raised prices. I say it has hoarded stocks. I say it has created artificial as well as real scarcity. I say it has profiteered. In addition to the excessive food taxes so unwisely levied by Parliament, it has imposed charges on food which amount to illicit taxation. I say it has wasted public money. I affirm, and about this there will be no dispute, that it has been a blundering, ineffective, and costly administration.

Such is the result in England. We here pursue the same foolish way, but employ agents and methods much more foolish than any Englishman could produce if he tried. The English are lacking in the necessary imagination.

I desire to print the whole article in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I apply a part of it to this Food Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

BRITISH FOOD CONTROL DECLARED A FAILURE—LEADING WHOLESALER ATTACKS GOVERNMENT POLICY—EDMUND BURKE, OF PEEK BROS. & WINCH, CRITICIZES SYSTEM AS BEING "A CRIME AGAINST THE PUBLIC"—CLAIMS IT HAS HOARDED STOCKS AND ENCOURAGED PROFITEERING—CALLS ADMINISTRATION "BLUNDERING AND COSTLY."

LONDON, February 1.

Sharp criticism of the food-control system was made by Edmund Burke, of Peek Bros. & Winch (Ltd.), dealers in wholesale groceries, at the annual meeting of the company. He declared that the people were "all toads under the oppression of a well-meaning Government, and that food control was a crime against the public."

Mr. Burke said:

"This food control is partly a folly, partly a sham, but it is altogether a crime against the public and especially the poor. I say it has raised prices. I say it has hoarded stocks. I say it has created artificial as well as real scarcity. I say it has profiteered. In addition to the excessive food taxes so unwisely levied by Parliament it has imposed charges on food which amount to illicit taxation. I say it has wasted public money. I affirm, and about this there will be no dispute, that it has been a blundering, ineffective, and costly administration.

SAYS GOVERNMENT MEANS WELL.

"We are all toads under the oppression of a well-meaning Government. Some of the toads have expressed to me their doubts even of the alleged good intent, but there is no doubt about the oppression. In the midst of war abroad the Government is making war upon trade at home. It has restricted our imports and exports.

"That may be necessary. It does not apply to cement for Holland, but then we deal in foodstuffs—not in goods of the cement class. We don't even touch Government cheese. But they have gone further than this. They have curtailed and impeded the distribution of food to our people at home. They may not have intended it, but that is the effect of what they have done. Perhaps you have heard that there is a food controller. He appears to have a good press agent, who keeps him prominently in the limelight.

"Well, I am not going to utter one word against Lord Rhondda personally. He is a well-intentioned peer, who is trying to feed the people on printed forms. But he is struggling with an impossible task, and working with impossible tools. He is in the hands of officials picked up in the Temple, the clubs, and placed in control of great trades requiring technical knowledge and experience, of which they are utterly destitute. Lord Rhondda himself knows everything about coal and little or nothing about food. That is why they made him, not coal controller, but food controller.

INVITES OFFICIAL INVESTIGATION.

"Well, now, I am going to state some plain facts about his department. It is time that the public knew the whole truth about it, and if one of our M. P.'s will move for a committee of the House to investigate its working I will undertake to offer some very startling evidence. I am speaking with full deliberation, but with full knowledge and with a deep sense of responsibility which I do not even ask my colleagues to share. I am prepared to substantiate everything that I feel it my duty to say

"I could keep you here all day telling you funny stories—and tragic stories, too—of this control folly. But I will only mention as an instance one article in which we deal and with which you have probably had painful experience. You know something about the sugar-card fiasco and you have felt the pinch of the sugar famine. Perhaps you do not know that we are not allowed to import sugar, but we may bring in American chewing gum, and we do. You may have heard of sugar queues, of poor women waiting in the cold street while their unguarded children burned to death at home. But you may not know that during recent months this precious Government department was hoarding up sugar by thousands of tons and gorging the warehouses with twice the stocks they contained a year ago.

BLAMES CONDITIONS ON RED TAPE.

"I say nothing about tea except that want of shipping is not accountable for the shortage, and that the Government is compelling us to pay prices which are 25 to 50 per cent too high, and giving us insufficient quantity at that. Tea ought to be 4d. to 6d. per pound cheaper to-day. Remove their control, allow freedom of import and of sale, and tea will fall by that amount at least. Transfer the duty to some luxury which only the rich consume, and the retail price of tea will be cheapened by 50 per cent for the poor.

"Now, why have I troubled you with all these statements about food control? In the first place, because I want to take this opportunity of repudiating the calumnies that interested persons have set afloat as to traders generally and as to the small retail grocer in particular. I want to repudiate on his behalf the charges of unscrupulous profiteering and hoarding that have been brought against him. He forms one of the most honorable, industrious, and at the present time, as has been proven, indispensable classes of the community.

"All the queues are preventable. Most of the scarcity is preventable. The whole of the red tape—the whole of the army of officials—might be scrapped to-morrow with advantage to the State. But they will not be scrapped because they have all snug berths. The danger is they will go on interfering with the food supply until we have little left to sell and the people have little left to eat. In that case one more noble lord will get a step in the peerage. But then there will be placed upon the stage a new act in this tragedy of food control—the stagnation of trade and the discontent of a disillusioned people."

Mr. REED. I want at this point to read a telegram which I have received from one of the leading newspaper men of California. This applies to the tomato question I discussed a few days ago. I hope there are some Senators from tomato States present:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., March 9, 1918.

Senator JAMES A REED,
1956 Biltmore Street, Washington, D. C.:

Committee on coordination of purchases circulated order through Food Administration fixing basis of awards for tomato products for Army and Navy use at no higher than $21 per ton for Maryland, Delaware, and other States; $20 for New York and Michigan; $18 for Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois; and $15 for Western States. This order becomes maximum price for tomatoes for all uses and manifestly places growers in Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, California, Nevada, and Washington at mercy of California Packing Corporation, which alone packs 70 per cent of western pack. This corporation is represented by Charles Bentley on Hoover staff, who gets approximately $15,000 salary from that corporation; J. K. Armsby, president of the corporation, is the head of the California preserved-food committee of Food Administration; another Armsby on staff at Washington. This corporation works with Libby packers. Prior to Bentley's order California canners were offering tonnage contracts at $17.50 and $18 per ton. This order enables Bentley's concern to buy from producer $6 cheaper than Delaware canners. About two-thirds of entire western crop will be sold commercially and one-third to Government. See John Francis Neylan, of San Francisco, at Shoreham Hotel, representing California Tomato Growers' Association. He knows details regarding Bentley, Armsby, and prices.

F. W. KELLOGG.

This is the sort of thing that is going on, and the people are to pay for it. The price of California tomatoes is to be beaten down to $15, and men on Mr. Hoover's staff are engaged in the packing business in California. When they come to sell their tomatoes, they will sell tomatoes that they bought at $15 a ton as against tomatoes that the eastern canner bought at $21 a ton. There is $6 a ton difference in favor of the western packer who holds a job under Hoover. I can understand why men work at a dollar a year under those circumstances, and so can you understand it, and so the country is beginning to understand it.

There is another thing I am going to call attention to. The packers have been licensed. Senators, the food-control law would never have been passed if the country had understood that Mr. Hoover under this extraordinary grant of power was going to make the packers agree to not pay the farmer more than a certain specified price for their hogs and cattle and sheep. Never in the world would it have been passed.

How was it passed, I repeat? Mr. Hoover told us there was no price fixing in the bill. It was argued on the floor of the Senate that there was no price fixing in the bill. Those of us who declared that there were powers that might be employed for fixing prices were denounced, and yet I am about to submit to you that Mr. Hoover has fixed the prices upon the cattle and hogs of this country. He fixed the prices through the licensing clause. He fixed them through that distortion of the purpose of the bill which his agent boastfully stated was wrought out of an obscure clause not intended to give the power at all. It takes a highly educated board of trade conscience to state a thing of that kind boastfully. Here is a part of the letter that was produced in the Heney investigation. It seems that the packers have established a correspondence school. They have not learned the lesson of not committing too many things to paper. There is a Dr. Durand, of the Food Administration. Everybody who gets into one of these Government jobs down here immediately becomes a doctor. If a man would go out and catch a Kansas jack rabbit and bring it here and get it a job in any one of these administration bureaus, they would on the next day be addressing it as Dr. Jackabus. Doctors are more numerous in the Food Administration than colonels are in Kentucky. Dr. Durand has been the agent of the Food Administration in dealing with the packing-house situation. One of the letters that Mr. Heney produced is from Mr. White, of Armour & Co.

In part it reads as follows:

Under date of January 18, 1918, F. E. Wilhelm, of the Cudahy Co., was quoted as having written to the south side station of the Cudahy Packing Co., at Omaha, relative to a meeting of representatives of Armour, Swift, Morris, Wilson, and Cudahy companies; that Dr. Durand, of the Food Administration, wanted to know the actual stocks of frozen beef in the country. He found, the letter said, that the amount was about 20,000,000 pounds.

The doctor then said that the letter stated that they were going to buy big quantities of beef every month—

I suppose this is a corporation that is going to buy—and he was skeptical about our being able to take care of the orders. He thought the quantity would be a minimum of 6,000,000 pounds a week. He asked for suggestions on how to provide this quantity. His first thought was to have a meatless week—

Mark you, this meat is to be bought to be shipped abroad, and bought through this monopoly company that is controlled and run and has its habitat with the Food Administration, and in order to get 6,000,000 pounds of meat the first suggestion was that we should shut off the American people's meat for one week.

When Freedom from her mountain height
Unfurled her standard to the air.

I read on:

His first thought was to have a meatless day, but was shown instantly that was impracticable, as there was no chance of us freezing our entire week's kill, and the effect of such a measure would be as bad, probably, as the present embargo on fuel.

How did we escape this calamity? The only reason why we are allowed to have meat in our stomachs for a week, regardless of our color, race, or previous condition of servitude or health, was because the freezing plants of the packing houses would not quite take care of all the kill. I continue reading:

Mr. White, of Armour & Co., suggested that each packer freeze 10 per cent of his kill; and on this basis we should be able to secure 6,000,000 pounds of meat if the receipts ran as liberally as expected.

The letter said it was decided to try the plan.

Continuing the letter said:

"Dr. Durand said the situation would have to be handled in some way to avoid advancing the cattle market."

They were going to get this meat for shipment abroad, and they proposed to shut off all meat to the American consumer and have a meatless week; and, secondly, Dr. Durand rose up and said, in any event there should not be any advance to the farmers on this account. And so he continued:

"Dr. Durand said that the situation would have to be handled in some way to avoid advancing the cattle market; that that was the thing that absolutely must not come about; and if it did, he would take drastic measures to prevent it. He hinted that if it couldn't be worked out they would have to go into the question of closing up the branches—that where we had branches side by side that they would close at certain points.

"We are really on trial to see how we behave, and if we can take care of this export business without putting things out of condition in this country, all right."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED (continuing)—

"He hinted that if it could not be worked out they would have to go into the question of closing up the branches where we had branches side by side that they would close at certain points."

I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I wish to say to the Senator in this place that the Committee on Agriculture had before it this morning a farmer and a live-stock man from Illinois, and they submitted cost sheets showing the cattle bought by feeders last fall when the Food Administration was encouraging them to buy and feed and fatten cattle that were bought at 12 cents, then had been wintered and fattened on corn costing from $1.50 to $1.75 a bushel, and they have been sold at 12 cents, the feeders losing from $42 to $85 per head, making no allowance for labor or for overhead charges.

Mr. REED. Now, we have this situation: The open market for the sale of American cattle has been absolutely taken away—taken away by the Food Administration through the corporation it created. That corporation is at the same time the agent of European countries and merchants. It wants meat for its European clients and is willing to cut American citizens off from meat, but, above everything else, it is determined that the price shall not be advanced a single penny to its European clients. So these packing houses have at last found a master. They are told, "Advance the price at your peril." But unfortunately the man who is master of the packing houses is also master of 45,000,000 Americans engaged in agriculture, and he is likewise the master of all the consumers of this country, and he is the very efficient and effective agent of the English Government and of France and of Italy and of the neutral countries and of their merchants.

Mr. President, I repeat, one thing at least ought to be agreed upon, that if the price of the thing the American farmer raises is to be arbitrarily fixed, if he is to be denied access to the markets of the world, if the purposes of this bill are to be disregarded, and if new purposes and new powers are to be twisted and distorted out of an obscure passage—I quote the language of Mr. Barnes—if this is to be the way the American producer is to be treated, then, as a matter of common fairness, there ought to be the same kind of fixation of prices upon everything produced abroad. The producers of this country either ought to be allowed the markets of the world in which to sell, or those from whom we purchase ought to be compelled to sell in a controlled market.

If we do not produce an equality of market conditions the result will be that our allies will be trading us a small amount of goods for a large amount of goods; we will be worsted in every transaction, probably from 25 to 75 per cent; and when the war is over other countries will have all the money. I repeat—for I want it to be clearly understood—that the argument can not be made that because France and England and Italy with their soldiers are fighting on the same battle line as ourselves, therefore we must give them these trade advantages; because if they are our allies and we ought to give them trade advantages, then we are their allies and we are entitled to reciprocal advantages.

But we have no agent in France or in England or in Italy to fix the price upon the things they produce that are to be sent to America.

As is suggested to me by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], Mr. Hoover fixes the prices upon our exports, but nobody fixes the prices upon our imports. Ponder this question I am talking about; sit down and figure the amount of our exports; sit down and figure the amount of our imports and find out how much this country loses every year by regulating the price of all it ships abroad, and then buying in the open war market of the world all that it imports.

Speaking of the fact that Mr. Durand has had the packers on the carpet and has issued these orders, I apprehend the packers have not been greatly taken by surprise. I have an article here from the Chicago Daily Tribune of February 28. The article states that Mr. Heney put into the record figures from the packers' books which show that men on Mr. Hoover's food board have been, and are still being, paid by certain packers. More than this, he showed that some have collected their pay in advance—some of the Government's "dollar-a-year men." Under the headline "Who's who and how much?" appears this:

Some of the Government's "dollar-a-year men" and the pay these men get from packing houses was recorded as follows:

H. B. Collins, assistant chief of the Division of Coordination of Purchases for Hoover; salary from Swift & Co., $10,000 a year; pay collected to March 2, 1918; "special account," supposedly for expenses—

I am curious to know what farmer there is—what real, sure-enough farmer there is—down there in the Food Administration to watch Mr. Collins and see what Mr. Collins does. I should like to have a little coordination down there, in which the farmers of the country might be a part of the coordinators. I read on:

E. A. Heyl, member of Hoover board, on Libby, McNeil & Libby pay roll at $9,600 a year; pay collected to February 16, 1918.

F. S. Brooks, member of Hoover board, formerly in charge of stockyard interests of Swift & Co., on pay roll at $9,000 a year; credited on books for pay to March 2, 1918.

W. F. Priebe, head of the poultry and egg division, Hoover food board, on Priebe & Co. pay roll at $275 a month, plus 25 per cent of profits after 7 per cent is paid on capital invested.

It was explained that Libby, McNeil & Libby and W. F. Priebe & Co. are both Swift & Co. subsidiaries or "departments"; so all four, in effect, are on the Swift & Co. pay roll.

Mr. President, there are cords of facts like these. Let me tell you what has been done——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him what the men whose names he has just read receive from the Government of the United States?

Mr. REED. I do not know, but I have not the slightest doubt that they are "dollar-a-year" patriots, men who are literally pouring out their blood sitting down here on swivel chairs and fixing up jobs by which their present bosses get the best of every transaction between them and the American people.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Perhaps they are pouring out their breath.

Mr. REED. No; they are pouring out their blood. A "dollar-a-year" patriot never sheds anything but blood. He may not shed much of it, but he would not be content if not credited with the loss of a little blood.

For years we fought against combinations that sought to control the price of cattle and swine. We denounced packing houses because they sought to establish monopoly control. We have had the packers indicted and tried and have undertaken to send them to the penitentiary. The country stood on tiptoe wanting them sent to the penitentiary. Why? Because the country believed they were fixing prices upon the meat products of this country.

Now comes one Herbert C. Hoover and proceeds to order them to fix a price, and to fix it so low that the farmer can not live. But what is the difference whether Herbert C. Hoover fixes the price or whether the packing houses by an illegal combination fix the price? The question is whether the price has been fixed at a point that will injure the American producer. It does not make any difference whose hand holds the knife; if it is driven through your heart, you die. It does not make any difference who fixes the price, whether it is done by a voluntary agreement of the packers meeting with each other for the purpose of increasing their profits or whether it is done by a voluntary agreement of the packers meeting with Herbert C. Hoover for the purpose of decreasing the prices to European clients of Mr. Hoover, if the price fixed is too low it is in either case equally ruinous.

Whenever you find working in the boards that fix the price the agents of the packing houses—their great and their responsible agents, their $10,000 a year men—you may be very sure that the packing houses are not getting any of the worst of it. As the Senator from Oklahoma has very well said, so far as the farmer is concerned, they are ex parte prices.

But I go further. When we go to the grain business we find that the great grain dealers were brought in and that agreements were made with them that were satisfactory; at least they have been silenced, perhaps because they still get bigger commissions than they got before. The miller is called in; he is still permitted to grind the grain and is paid a bigger percentage than he got before. Who is it that the reduction comes from, then? The reduction, if it occurs at all, comes from the farmer, the very man whom Mr. Hoover said in his testimony he did not propose to touch; the very man he said it was not his purpose to molest. I am almost tempted to stop and read that testimony once more, but I shall not do it.

When the bill was before Congress there was a great hurrah through the country about the wicked board of trade men. As I heard them described here by Senators, I would almost imagine that the gates of perdition had been opened and that a column of choice imps, with horns and tails and scales and brimstone rolling from their mouths, were marching forth, that each one of the vast army was a board of trade man. And that, confronting the on-rolling host, our great protector, our dauntless champion, killer of dragons, Hoover, stood, his burnished shield upraised, his lance poised, ready to drive the vicious horde into the flaming vortex from which they had come forth. But, sir, I beheld a different scene. I saw him selecting their captains and their lieutenants and their sergeants, picking them out carefully one by one, their leaders, taking them down to the food headquarters, and putting them in charge of the food supply of the "dear people" that he so much doth love. And now all over this country, in every market of the land, you find those men placed in command.

I do not denounce them; I do not say the things we were told of them were true; my experience has been that some of the men engaged in the grain business, just as in other businesses, are speculators, some are gamblers, but the great majority of them are simply plain dealers who buy and sell for commission and who are thoroughly honorable men. When this crusade was being worked up the man who dared say as much as I have said now would have been denounced as an enemy of the people and a friend of profiteers.

Mr. President, let me go a little further. We were told that there would be no effort, as I have said repeatedly—and I intend to keep on saying it as long as I have the power of protest—that there would be no effort to take away the farmer's market.

Some of the men who were denounced as profiteers were the millers. They were brought in and were consulted, and an agreement was made with them, as I showed you awhile ago, to pay them 1 per cent on every bushel of grain they handled, and to guarantee them against any loss; and that guarantee to the miller against loss is met out of the $50,000,000 that the United States Government took of the people's money and turned over to capitalize this corporation. So wherever you go you find not only in this place, but you find in other boards in Washington, that the men whom the people believe have been mistreating them and profiteering are the men who are in charge and in control. We tried, as has been suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma, to put a provision in the bill to prohibit that sort of thing, but its teeth were drawn.

I heard one of these gentlemen before the Military Affairs Committee solemnly swear that shoddy was the proper material with which to clothe American soldiers; that it was a better material for overcoats than the pure wool taken from the sheep's back. If he had said we were out of wool and we had to use this material, and if that had been true, I would have made no complaint, but he undertook to claim it was a superior article.

I saw men appear and heard them undertake to justify the expenditure of money where individuals who have only drawn a salary in the past of a couple of hundred dollars a month suddenly, when the taxpayers are to foot the bill, blossom into $10,000 a year men. I see accounts where newspaper men, writers, who have been working for years at fifty or sixty dollars a week suddenly are worth $12,000 a year; and when you inquire why they are employed, no one can explain what useful purpose they serve in the building of ships.

Mr. VARDAMAN. One of the Hog Island men, Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, had his salary raised from $12,000 to $25,000. That is the usual way the Hog Island patriot for perquisites has of showing his consuming love of country.

Mr. REED. Let me tell you there is a bottom to every barrel; there is an end to every fortune; there is a limit to the wealth that any nation can produce. The American people in some respects are the most conceited people in the world. They have fed themselves on their own adulation until they are drunk, I sometimes think, with conceit—and I say this, of course, kindly. We have talked about our bravery until there was a great American statesman who actually thought that we could raise an army of a million men overnight; and he was in perfect good faith. I am not sure but that I have indulged in some of that kind of nonsense myself in the past, but generally I limited it to the Fourth of July or thereabouts. [Laughter.]

One of the things that we have been teaching ourselves for the past three years is that we are the richest nation on earth and that we have so much money that there is no end to it. My brother Senators, let me say to you, that before this war is ended it may be determined by a slight turn of the balance. Clemenceau, the French premier, said the other day that the nation won in a war that could make itself think it was not beaten for a quarter of an hour after the other side realized it was beaten. Before this war is over, it may be that the balance will be determined by a few billion dollars—a very few—and therefore we should not waste money to-day.

We must pay two or three prices often in order to get things quickly. There may be justification in instances of that kind, but not a single dollar of our money should be unnecessarily expended; we should hoard it, because, after all, in one sense money is the lifeblood of this enterprise. We must keep our men upon the field; our expenses will mount higher and higher; we must create armaments and still greater armaments, and the expenditures will mount and mount beyond calculation. We must build ships and still more ships, and we must literally pave the bottom of the ocean, if something can not be done to suppress the submarine, with vessels that have cost us millions and millions of money and with the precious cargoes that represent even more of our toil and our money. We must care for the widows and for the orphans that are being made; we must support the old fathers and the old mothers whose sons are beginning to die; we must be prepared to meet the awful accumulation of sorrow and woe, and, as far as money will go, we must be ready to assuage the grief of these people; but, above everything and beyond everything, we must keep our land prosperous; we must keep its industries humming; we must keep its energies alive; we must keep its industrial thews strong, its arteries of commerce open, its great enginery of production at its very highest point, so that as we expend we shall also produce; and in everything we do, while we should be spendthrifts for the purpose of carrying on this war, we should be misers in the wasting of a single dollar.

So I say, when the Food Administration comes here to-day, admitting that it has a million and a quarter of dollars on hand; that it has $29,000,000 in the treasury of its corporation; that it has a fund outside of that of an unknown amount; and that it has assets, that are supposed to be good, of almost $2,000,000, at this time there should be no further grant.

The committee—and I say it with the utmost respect—have accepted, I believe, the mere report of the House, and, being engaged in other things, did not investigate this item. I may have spoken to deaf ears, but I believe, whether I speak successfully to-day or not, the time is coming when an accounting must be had, and I ask that the item go out of the bill.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print as a part of my remarks, as an addendum, the rule that has been promulgated by the Federal Food Administration for the District of Columbia specifying the things that people are to be permitted to purchase at grocery stores, quantities, and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The following rules and regulations have been promulgated by the United States Food Administration and went into effect Monday, January 28, 1918:

Special rules 23 to 32, inclusive, are promulgated for the purpose of assuring an adequate supply and equitable distribution of wheat flour for purposes essential to the national security and defense and to the successful prosecution of the war. Under existing conditions, the present unrestricted distribution of flour is deemed to be clearly an unjust, unreasonable, and wasteful practice.

Rule 23. No licensee shall sell, use, or deliver to any person any flour other than the grade generally known as "second clear" or "low grade" for any purpose other than the manufacture of human food.

(A) MILLERS.

RULE 24. The licensee manufacturing wheat flour shall distribute his output, not sold to the Government of the United States, to the Food Administration, or for export through his customary markets and channels of distribution, in such manner that each of his customers receives his fair share thereof, and that during the three-months period from February 1, 1918, to April 30, 1918, and from May 1, 1918, to July 31, 1918, no town, city, State, or district receives from the licensee's mill more than 70 per cent of the amount it received in the corresponding quarter of the year 1917. He shall not seek new markets or channels of distribution, and sales of large quantities to new customers will be regarded, prima facie, as a violation of this rule.

RULE 25. The licensee manufacturing wheat flour shall not on and after February 24, 1918, sell or deliver to any person engaged in the business of baking bread or rolls any wheat flour, except whole-wheat flour, unless the buyer purchases at the same time, or the licensee satisfies himself that the buyer has purchased 1 pound of wheat-flour substitutes for every 4 pounds of wheat flour purchased.

Wheat flour substitutes for the purpose of this rule and of rule 30 shall include bran, shorts, and middlings, corn flour, corn meal, edible cornstarch, hominy, corn grits, barley flour, rolled oats, oatmeal, rice, rice flour, potato flour, sweet-potato flour, buckwheat flour, cottonseed flour, milo, kaffir, and feterita flours and meals, soya-bean flour, peanut flour, casava flour, taro flour, banana flour, and other products of a similar nature.

In making any combination sales under this rule, or rules 26, 29, 30, and 31, the licensee shall name a price for each of the articles so sold, which shall not represent more than a normal prewar profit on any one of such articles.

Rule 26. No licensee manufacturing wheat flour shall, without the permission of the United States Food Administrator, sell or deliver such wheat flour to any retailer or consumer thereof unless the buyer purchases at the same time or the licensee satisfies himself that the buyer has purchased 1 pound of wheat-flour substitutes for every pound of wheat flour purchased.

Wheat-flour substitutes for the purposes of this rule and of rules 29 and 31 shall include hominy, corn grits, corn meal, corn flour, edible cornstarch, barley flour, rolled oats, oatmeal, rice, rice flour, buckwheat flour, potato flour, sweet-potato flour, soya-bean flour, and feterita flour and meal, or in case of whole wheat or graham flour containing at least 95 per cent of the entire wheat, six-tenths of a pound of wheat flour substitutes for every pound of such whole wheat or graham flour purchased.

(B) WHOLESALERS AND JOBBERS.

RULE 27. The licensee dealing in wheat flour at wholesale shall not, without the written permission of the United States Food Administrator, purchase for delivery to him during the three months' periods from February 1 to April 30 and May 1 to July 31, in 1918, more than 70 per cent of his normal requirements of flour for such period. The amount of purchases made in the corresponding three months' periods in 1917 will be regarded as prima facie evidence of such normal requirements.

RULE 28. The licensee dealing in wheat flour at wholesale should distribute the 70 per cent of his requirements, purchased in accordance with rule 27, through his customary markets and channels of distribution in such manner that each of his customers receives his fair share thereof, and that during the three months' periods from February 1, 1918, to April 30, 1918, and from May 1, 1918, to July 31, 1918, no town, city, State, or district receives from the licensee more than 70 per cent of the amount it received in the corresponding three-months' period in the year 1917. He shall not seek new markets or channels of distribution, and sales of large quantities to new customers will be regarded prima facie as a violation of this rule.

RULE 29. The licensee dealing in wheat flour at wholesale shall not, without the written permission of the United States Food Administrator, sell or deliver such flour to any retailer or consumer unless the buyer purchases at the same time or the licensee satisfies himself that the buyer has purchased 1 pound of wheat-flour substitutes for every pound of wheat flour purchased, or, in case of whole wheat or graham flour containing at least 95 per cent of the entire wheat, six-tenths of a pound of wheat-flour substitutes for every pound of such whole wheat or graham flour purchased.

RULE 30. The licensee dealing in wheat flour at wholesale shall not, on and after February 24, 1918, sell to any person engaged in the business of baking bread or rolls any wheat flour, except whole wheat flour, unless the buyer purchases at the same time or the licensee satisfies himself that the buyer has purchased 1 pound of wheat flour substitutes for every 4 pounds of wheat flour purchased.

Note to rules 25, 26, 29, and 30.—A certificate from the buyer that he has purchased a given quantity and kind of wheat flour substitutes, not balanced by other purchases of wheat flour, may be accepted as satisfactory evidence of the facts stated.

(C) RETAILERS.

RULE 31. The licensee dealing in wheat flour at retail shall not without the written permission of the United States Food Administrator sell wheat flour to any person unless such person purchases from him at the same time 1 pound of wheat-flour substitutes for every pound of wheat flour purchased, or in case of whole wheat or graham flour, containing at least 95 per cent of the entire wheat, six-tenths of a pound of wheat-flour substitutes for every pound of such whole wheat or graham flour purchased.

RULE 32. The licensee dealing in wheat flour at retail should distribute the flour which he receives as equitably as possible among his customers in such manner that no one of such customers shall receive more than his fair share thereof. He shall not without the written permission of the United States Food Administrator sell to individual consumers residing in towns or cities in quantities in excess of one-eighth to one-quarter barrel, nor to any individual consumer in rural or farm communities in quantities in excess of one-quarter to one-half barrel.

NOTE.—All retailers, whether licensed or not, must, in selling wheat flour, and all consumers must, in buying wheat flour, conform to the foregoing regulations. That is, the retailer, whether licensed or not, shall not sell wheat flour to any person unless such person purchases from him at the same time one pound of wheat-flour substitute for every pound of wheat flour purchased, or in the case of whole wheat or graham flour containing at least 95 per cent of the entire wheat, six-tenths of a pound of wheat-flour substitutes for every pound of such whole wheat or graham flour purchased.

The substitutes for wheat flour are corn meal, cornstarch, corn flour, hominy, corn grits, barley flour, rice, rice flour, oat meal, rolled oats, buckwheat flour, potato flour, sweet-potato flour, soya-bean flour, and feterita flours and meals. Any substitute or combination of substitutes may be used.

CLARENCE R. WILSON,
Federal Food Administrator for the District of Columbia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will only detain the Senate a few moments in stating the position of the committee in reference to this item. In the first place, the Senate should bear in mind that the Appropriations Committee, except under extraordinary circumstances, and then without the rule, does not recommend creative legislation. Its purpose is to comply with the law, not to make the law. It is not the part of an appropriations committee to determine whether a law is good or bad or whether the authorizations made by law should be expended or not; but when it finds that the Congress has enacted laws that require the expenditure of money, it is its duty to recommend the appropriation of the money for that purpose.

Now, so far as the Committee on Appropriations in this instance is concerned, up to this hour it has had nothing whatever to do with the Food or Fuel Administration, either in the enactment of the law or in the appropriation of money for its carrying on. The money that was spent by Mr. Hoover before the food-control bill was passed came from funds that the Congress had placed in the hands of the President of the United States without limitation, and if the President saw fit, in his wisdom, to turn it over to Mr. Hoover for expenditure, it was a matter for the President to determine, and not for ourselves.

As to the appropriation of the money that has been spent since the enactment of the food and fuel control law, it came from other sources than the Committee on Appropriations, and is the law of the land. On the 10th day of August, 1917, the Congress passed and the President approved an act "to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel." It is under that law, and under that law alone, that Mr. Hoover has secured his rights and his powers and the money that has been expended up to this time.

In the first place, this bill of August 10, 1917, appropriated $150,000,000 to be turned over by the President to the head of the Food Administration for the purpose of conserving and controlling the wheat supply of the country. It also appropriated $10,000,000 to authorize the purchase of nitrogen for the benefit of the farmers of the country. Neither of these items had anything to do with the appropriation that is contained in this bill. But there was a third item that has all to do with the item now under consideration, and if you will refer to section 18 of that enactment you will find that it reads as follows:

That the sum of $2,500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available until June 30, 1918, for the payment of such rent, the expense, including postage, of such printing and publications, the purchase of such material and equipment, and the employment of such persons and means, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, as the President may deem essential.

It is under that clause in this bill that these powers were exercised. It is under that clause in this bill that this money has been expended. Now, I said some days ago that I recognized that in the first days of the war it was necessary for the Congress to pass speedy, sometimes ill-considered and unguarded legislation, and this bill was one of those measures. It came in the very inception of war, when Congress was under a strain to meet war conditions, and there may not have been the time at hand to carefully analyze, to point out the details, to put the safeguards in this measure to protect it; and the necessity for speed may have required the appropriation of money in the legislation itself instead of making the authorization and allowing the Appropriations Committee to handle the appropriation. But be that as it may, the Appropriations Committee of the Senate has nothing to do with the law. It has no power to change the law, except by unanimous consent of the Senate. It is not the tribunal or the forum in which that question is tried. All we have to do is to take the law as it is; and when the departments estimate what is necessary to be expended to carry on the work, if the estimate comes within the terms of the law, it is our duty to report the appropriation.

Now, what does this say? Mark you, in the legislation under which we must operate there is no limitation. It says that this money is appropriated and these powers are given—

For the purpose of such rent; the expense, including postage, of such printing and publications; the purchase of such material and equipment; and the employment of such persons and means, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, as the President may deem essential.

It does not say where the expenditure of money for postage and speeches and printing shall be made, nor is there any limitation fixed by law on that expenditure. The Congress has already granted this authority. It is an enactment of the law. The Congress makes no limitation on the number of persons employed. Under the terms of this act they can employ a million men.

Ordinarily I do not justify legislation of that kind. I say the time has come now, if Congress is going to legislate, when it should put in each bill the checks and balances necessary to protect the American people and to protect the Treasury of the United States. But you know and I know that this bill was passed under whip and spur. It was passed at a time when the Congress did not have the chance to pause and consider as it might do at this time; or, if it had the time to pause and consider, it did not pause and consider; and that is the law.

I shall not attempt to defend the expenditures to which the Senator from Missouri has referred. They were not authorized by the Appropriations Committee. They did not secure the money from that source. They were undoubtedly within the law, and their continuation is within the law if the Congress cares to keep the law on the statute books. Really, as a matter of fact, the principal work of the Food Administration, so far as the expenditure of money is concerned, is in a propaganda to encourage the American people to do certain things that the Food Administrator deems necessary in order to conserve food products. The only question involved here is the question as to whether you are going to allow the law to be operative, or whether you are going to strangle it in an appropriation bill.

That is the only issue. This is the law. No man can deny the law. The organization is already perfected and working, and no man can deny that money is being expended along the lines of this organization, and honestly expended; because, whether Mr. Hoover has spent his money wisely or unwisely, he has certainly given the Congress of the United States a full and complete and ample statement of every dollar that he has expended.

I am not here to defend Mr. Hoover's expenditures. He is amply able to defend himself; and, more than that, I am not provided with the information to answer in defense. I never met Mr. Hoover but once, and that was many, many months ago. He has not been before the committee, and I am not prepared to give his reasons for the necessity of expending this money. The sole question before the Senate to-day is as to whether you are going to indirectly throttle the Food Administration by cutting off this appropriation, or whether you are going to make an appropriation that is within the terms of the statute as it is now provided by law. As a matter of fact, this has been duly, properly estimated for.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did not the committee investigate and determine how the money was spent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The House committee went into a full investigation of the matter, and reduced the estimate from $2,000,000 to $1,750,000; and as the Senate committee were satisfied with their work on the subject, they did not open it or change the item at all, and therefore, of course, made no further investigation. It is usual, where the Senate Appropriations Committee is satisfied with an item that the House has already worked through, not to reopen it, because if we reopen every House item we would never get through with our work.

The only question before the Senate is this: If the majority of the Senate of the United States think these appropriations are unwise, then they are unwise because the law is unwise. The proper way to go at it is to repeal the law, not to stop the appropriations. If a majority of the Senate are now dissatisfied with the Food and Fuel Administration law, then there is the regular and proper way to get it off the statute books—namely, by introducing a bill for its repeal. But if the law is on the statute books, properly there, and the proposed expenditures are within the terms of the bill, there was nothing else to do but for the Appropriations Committee to propose the authorized appropriation and allow the Senate to determine the question for itself. I myself believe that if you are going to continue the law you ought not to continue it in a way that will only create a deficit that must be paid some day in the future, but you ought to appropriate the money as you go along. If you do not want to continue the law, then repeal the law, but do not strike down the appropriation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me just say this:

While the law authorizes certain things to be done and has not placed a limit, of course Congress always has the right, when it comes to an appropriation, to limit the appropriation. That right of control never leaves Congress; and it does not follow that the whole Food Administration law should be stricken out if you do not give this $1,750,000. It simply means that there would have to be some curtailment of expenses.

I am sure the Senator did not mean to state that so broadly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I was debating the matter from the standpoint of the Senator's motion. This is a deficit.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This money is appropriated for the expenditures that are needed between now and the 30th of June.

Mr. REED. I beg the Senator's pardon; the money, as I read it, is not a deficit at all. The Senator wants to get this right, as he does everything else, and I call his attention——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this money is appropriated for one year only, and that is the fiscal year 1918. That year ends on the 30th of June next, and that is the limitation on the item on page 4 relating to the Food Administration. So it is presented to us with an estimate, and the appropriation appropriates it, for the use of the Food and Fuel Administrators for the balance of this fiscal year.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President. Here is the table. I call attention to the summary appearing in the House hearings on page 1152. The total appropriations are $5,515,000. The disbursements are $1,985,429.08. The incumbrances—which, as I have stated, and which the evidence shows, are obligations that have been incurred there—are $2,272,383.22. The available balance is $1,257,950.23.

Now, they have that available balance, as I read this testimony, to run them until the next appropriation bill. They may think that they want more. They may think that they want to continue this extravagant and wasteful use of money; but it does not at all follow that the Congress is obliged because it has passed this law to continue to authorize these expenditures. I grant you that when the expenditures have been incurred, if this is to meet past bills, we will have to pay them. This is not, according to the statement that I have before me, to meet past bills at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I find that about the middle of page 1150 of the House hearings it seems to be made clear. The chairman said:

That evidently is without taking into the account the allotments that have been made by the President?

Mr. HOOVER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Because this would show a total of a little over $3,000,000;

Mr. HOOVER. The expenditures up to January 31 are $1,985,429.08 from all appropriations, in addition to which we have what we call incumbrances—that is, bills receivable, the continuation of our present rate of pay rolls, etc.—to carry us to the 30th of June on all appropriations, amounting to a further $2,272,383.22.

I suppose the word "sum" should be put in there, although it is not in the text.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that in addition to your $1,985,429.08?

Mr. HUTTERLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. That is the unexpended amount for the balance of the year?

Mr HOOVER That is based on the salary roll as at present, and on the present basis of all funds except the completion of buildings and foreign representation.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the $1,985,429.08 represents more than salary expenditures?

Mr. HUTTERLY. Oh, yes, sir; it represents purchase orders, traveling expenses, and all of our operations. It also includes $334,104.99 of the cost of the buildings so far completed, out of a total of $600,000 building allotment from the President—

Which clearly shows that there is a deficit——

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (continuing). That they are required to have additional money to run their establishment up to the 30th of June, and that this is not for additional money, but it is required to take care of the situation up to that time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator is too candid a man to want to have anything understood except absolutely what the facts are.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure; but I have read the facts.

Mr. REED. And the Senator has misapprehended this testimony, as I think I can show him. Now, I ask him kindly to go back to the middle of the page, a little further back than he did, beginning at the middle of the page. I read this simply for the context:

The CHAIRMAN. If you can, I wish you would give the committee a summary of the financial situation under these appropriations.

Mr. HOOVER. We had total disbursements as of January 31 amounting to $1,985,429.08.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that under both services?

Mr HOOVER. That is under all of our operations.

The CHAIRMAN. The operations of both the Food and Fuel Administrations or just one administration?

Mr. HOOVER. For both administrations—the Food and Fuel Administrations.

The CHAIRMAN. That leaves an available balance of how much?

Mr. HOOVER. That leaves us an available balance under all appropriations of $1,208,150.23.

To get the explanation of that will the Senator turn over the page to the bottom of page 1152? I call his attention to the summary of appropriations and allotments and to the next to the last item under the head of "Appropriations," which is $5,515,000. Under the head of disbursements the total is $1,985,429.08. That is what they have expended. Then comes the next item, which is incumbrances. That is $2,272,383.22. There is all that they have expended and all they have bound themselves to expend; and it leaves that available balance of $1,257,950.23 to run them to the end of the month of June, after taking care of all the expenses and of all of the incumbrances. Now, the question is, without any other evidence than that, Are we to give them a million and three-quarters more of money. I surely can not be mistaken in reading that. If I am, I want to be set right.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Senator is mistaken, although I may not thoroughly grasp the situation from the figures to which he has called my attention.

Mr. REED. Let me state it again.

We gave them $5,515,000. You will find that at the bottom of page 1152. They have disbursed $1,985,429.08. They have incumbrances—that is, they have incurred obligations—to the amount of $2,272,383.22. The aggregate of those two things taken together, subtracted from the $5,515,000, leaves on hand unexpended and unincumbered an available balance of $1,257,950.23; and in the testimony you will find that the chairman, at the bottom of page 1150, asked this question, which elucidates the matter:

From the statement you have just handed to me it appears that you had a total appropriation for the Food and Fuel Administration of $5,515,000; that out of that there has been an actual expenditure of $1,985,429.08; that there are now obligations, or what are called here incumbrances, of $2,272,383.22, leaving what you designate as an available balance—and what we frequently speak of as a free balance—of $1,257,950.23.

Mr. HUTTERLY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is predicated upon your existing organizations at the present time?

Mr. HUTTERLY. Yes, sir.

I think that makes it pretty plain that they have got that much money.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can very much better answer the Senator in Mr. Hoover's own words as to whether this money is called for as a deficiency under this bill; and, of course, it is a deficiency, because after the 30th of June they can not expend the money if we appropriate it in this bill. If it were a permanent appropriation that Mr. Hoover desires, he would have gone to the sundry civil bill, to carry it through next year. But he comes on this deficiency bill and the appropriation is limited. If he does not spend the money between now and the 30th of June, it goes back into the Treasury.

Mr. REED. I understand; but there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator means there will be no trouble about his spending it?

Mr. REED. Not at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, then, he needs it; at least, he thinks he needs it.

Mr. REED. That is a different question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On page 1168, here is what Mr. Hoover said about these expenditures:

The CHAIRMAN. So what you must contemplate, assuming that you will need all of your available balance and all of your estimate of $2,000,000, is an increase in expenditure of nearly 200 per cent?

Mr. HOOVER. We want to increase in the Food Administration our State expenditures about $200,000 per month—that is, nearly a million dollars. There is also an implied expenditure by our organization here of half a million dollars in five months. My own estimates were about $1,000,000 in five months in the States and an expenditure of about $500,000 over and above our present rate of expenditures here, if we have to take transportation and those other problems. Now, Dr. Garfield comes along with a desire for a large expansion in the Fuel Administration, which we are not answering for.

In addition to that, let me say to the Senator that my understanding is that although this sum is lumped—the item contained in this bill under the Food and Fuel Administration headline—one-third of this appropriation goes to the Fuel Administrator.

Mr. REED. No; not that much.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the understanding.

Mr. REED. Of this particular item?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of this particular item. Our understanding is that one-third goes to the Fuel Administration and the other two-thirds goes to the Food Administration. So that reduces the proportion that Mr. Hoover would get under this appropriation to a little less than $1,200,000.

Mr. REED. Now, coming back to that question we were discussing, since we are having this good-natured colloquy—as the Senator from Alabama and myself always can have—I think the Senator will now agree that the statement he has just made clearly shows that the money that is now asked is an additional appropriation in order to take care of a contemplated increase that Mr. Hoover proposes to make, because he says:

The CHAIRMAN. So what you must contemplate, assuming that you will need all of your available balance and all of your estimate of $2,000,000, is an increase in expenditure of nearly 200 per cent.

Mr. HOOVER. We want to increase in the Food Administration our State expenditures about $200,000 per month—that is, nearly a million dollars.

Then he goes on to state that there is also an implied expenditure, and so forth.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator about that. It is not all for an increase; but at least a part of the $1,200,000 is for an increase—an expansion—not of new work, but of the work that he is already engaged in in the State administration.

Mr. REED. It is for the expansion of the work in the States, he tells us, and then an expansion in Dr. Garfield's department; but in both cases it is new expansion work. Therefore, the question we now want to settle is this: On this sort of showing, are we satisfied to give him this $1,750,000 to be expended in extending and expanding the work that he has been doing in the past? If he has enough money now to conduct the part of the work that we think ought to be conducted, then we ought not to give him more money.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. REED. I am trying to answer the Senator's argument; that is all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The object of the committee was to report this appropriation when it came to us as a deficiency, and it was shown that the purpose of the deficiency was to carry out an authorization made by Congress.

Mr. REED. I will make just this one brief statement in reply: I am not criticizing this committee at all, and I have not criticized it in any way. I simply took this item. In the Senate committee it evidently had no investigation, and I do not criticize them for that, because I know the Senate committee can not go into every item that comes over from the House. But I have taken the trouble to look into these accounts and see the use to which our money has been put; and now the question is, Are we going to increase the million and a quarter that is already there and that they will have to run them until June, when the new appropriation will come, by $1,750,000 in order to expand their activities? I am willing to submit the question in that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARREN in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which is to strike out the language of the House text on page 4, from line 9 to line 21, inclusive.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill? Can the Senator state whether the committee has been informed how many persons are employed by the Food Administration?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; as I stated to the Senator from Missouri the Appropriations Committee of the Senate accepted the House item, as the investigation seemed to have been pretty thorough in the House on that subject. We merely accepted the House hearings and did not make an independent investigation of our own, as is done in many items. I do not think the House hearings disclosed the number of employees; at least I could not say with definiteness. It is long, and I could not run through it at this time, and I do not recall that it was given there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator know whether the employees are under the civil service, all of them?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding is that the employees under the Food Administration, most of them, at any rate, are not under the civil service. It is my understanding that they are not civil-service employees.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator know what this extension work in the States means? Apparently a million dollars of this appropriation is to be spent in that way. Does that mean more employees, or is it in printing and publicity work?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under the Food Administration act Mr. Hoover has or assumes that he has power to regulate prices to a certain extent and to control production, but he has no power to coerce saving, and under the law the only way he can accomplish that result is through a propaganda to encourage people from patriotic motives to save food supplies. My understanding is that the organizations in the States are largely along that line, although I think they operate to some extent along the other line. Mostly I think it is toward having public meetings, publications of information in the papers and pamphlets, and agents to go out and see the people to try and get them to put Food Administration cards in their windows, stating that they observe the recommendations of the Food Administration in reference to the conservation of food. I think it is along those lines that this money is being expended to a large extent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The information is rather indefinite. I suppose it can not be helped in these war times.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say candidly, although I did not rise for the purpose of defending Mr. Hoover, because I am not sufficiently informed to do so, I am not in touch with the administration and he has not seen fit to put before myself or the Senate committee any information on the subject; but so far as I am concerned I am not nearly as much opposed to the use of money to encourage people through patriotism to save and support the Government as I am to those laws which seek to use the strong arm and force the people of the United States to do things which may not be necessary.

When the people of the United States, in response to their patriotism, which has been aided by propaganda of Mr. Hoover, see fit to say we will have meatless days and wheatless days, that is only a response to patriotism, no one forces it upon them, and I think that is really good work. I do not know but it is the best work that is being done in the war. It certainly does not curtail the liberty of any citizen of the United States. When a man does without his food in order to encourage the soldiers on the battle line it seems to me that more soldiers are likely to go to the front.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not out of sympathy with one of the purposes just referred to by the Senator from Alabama, namely, the encouragement of the citizens of this country to bring about saving in order that more wheat or flour may be sent across the ocean. I can not agree, however, as to meatless days, for they have done a very grave injury to the production of live stock in the United States and we are not saving any meat for our allies.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the question asked by the Senator as to the number of employees in the Food Administration, I will state that the only testimony that was given was given by Mr. Hoover before the House committee. He does not give the number of employees, but states the amount that was paid monthly for salaries in Washington, and that amounts to $185,000 per month, roughly speaking, as testified to by Mr. Hoover.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is in Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. In Washington.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator know approximately the average salary?

Mr. SMOOT. No; if I did, I could tell the number of employees.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will wait until next year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have not recklessly criticized the Food Administration, because I have known very little about it and have wished for it success. I have had, however, very many complaints both against the food department and the fuel department. All Senators have had the same experience, and it seems to me that these complaints have been sufficient to have induced the Committee on Appropriations to scrutinize very carefully this particular appropriation. Such scrutiny was due to both the Government and the administrations.

I do not wish to pose as a critic, and yet when the committee itself says it did not look into the matter at all, but accepted the work of the House committee, which it appears did not investigate the matter very extensively, either, I feel as though I am justified in stating that the Senate has not been furnished with the information it ought to have on this important question.

I am convinced by the colloquy between the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that this is not in the proper sense a deficiency need. The appropriation is not necessary for the operation of food control. It does not affect the existence or the usefulness of the Food or Fuel Administration. Money sufficient has been appropriated to meet the demands that were estimated for at the time the original bill was passed. There is over a million dollars on hand now, and the testimony shows that amount to be quite enough to carry out the work of the administration as originally planned. Its obligations have been met. Its work is unimpeded by lack of funds.

I would not vote at this time to interfere with the efficiency of the Food Administration, many as have been the complaints made against it, because I feel that there was need for something to be done, and I am not ready to condemn it unqualifiedly; but I do not think it is quite fair to present at this time a proposition in the nature of a deficiency appropriation which is not such in fact.

There is no deficiency in the Food and Fuel Departments today, and there will be none by June 30 next unless enlarged plans are adopted before the end of the year, and unless I know more than the committee seems to know about those plans I can not vote this nearly $2,000,000.

I rose simply to say that I do not wish to be understood as voting against the Food Administration, and in voting against this appropriation I do not regard myself as voting against the proper administration of that department. I can not, however, force myself to vote for an appropriation under the guise of an emergency or deficiency which is not that. Before Congress enlarges its plans for food and fuel control we should be quite sure that what has been done has been beneficial and that the additional millions of appropriations are to be used for the good of our country and its cause. The committee should have obtained and presented information to the Senate before it asked for this misnamed deficiency appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to strike out the paragraph of the bill on page 4 from line 9 to line 21, inclusive.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which has come since the bill was reported to the Senate and which was not before the committee, but I have consulted the chairman about it and it is of such importance that I think it ought to be called to the attention of the Senate. On page 21 there is an item carried which reads:

> For the control of malaria, cerebrospinal meningitis, and other communicable diseases in the areas adjoining military and naval reservations, and for the control of venereal infections, in order properly to safeguard the health of the military forces, including personal services, $500,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1919.

That was placed in the bill by the House, but since the committee reported the bill I have been informed by the Public Health Service that some of the main trouble in reference to this health situation is not around the camps and cantonments but is at Government reservations and Government works where the laborers are living, because of the congested condition of the population and the health conditions surrounding them that need this work to be done, if anything more so, around the public works, shipbuilding, and nitrate plants, and other plants of that kind, than even at the cantonments.

Therefore I move to amend the section by inserting the following amendments, which I send to the desk. I ask the Secretary to read the first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 21, after the word "reservations," insert "and on or adjoining other Government reservations or works for the protection of the civil population," so as to read:

> For the control of malaria, cerebrospinal meningitis, and other communicable diseases in the areas adjoining military and naval reservations and on or adjoining other Government reservations or works for the protection of the civil population—

And so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will inquire of the Senator from Alabama whether this is to be followed by an amendment increasing the appropriation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. I intend to ask, at the suggestion of the bureau, for an additional appropriation of $25,000. It does not largely increase it, nevertheless they say that it will be necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not very large. I am astonished that they were so modest, because I have never found a department or bureau of the Government that thought money enough was appropriated to do anything. My own judgment is that there is money enough appropriated in the bill to accomplish the result, but, as the addition is so slight, I am not going to object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They stated that $25,000 was the minimum sum that they could get along with, and I accepted the minimum sum instead of the maximum.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is absolutely impossible for them to know that fact. They can not know it. The Senator will agree with me on that point. It is a guess at best.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator, but I realize that in the great shipbuilding and nitrate plants and other public works it is just as necessary, and more so, to protect the health of the community and keep the workmen there as it is in the cantonments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I agree with the Senator on that point; but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who keeps better informed than I possibly can do on the matter of appropriations, says that $500,000 is appropriated in the bill already for that purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is $500,000 appropriated, but they think it requires an additional amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. Twenty-five thousand dollars, of course, is negligible; and yet I think it is an absurd addition to a $500,000 appropriation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am inclined to agree with the Senator about that. I think it is important for $25,000 to protect the health of the civil population that must be around the work that must go on at the shipbuilding and nitrate plants and the other great industries. If the Government is going to prepare for war, I do not think we can hesitate on an appropriation of $25,000 when it looks like we are going to spend $25,000,000,000 before we get through.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I think most of the money appropriated ought to be spent other than the places enumerated in the bill, for which $500,000 is appropriated. In my opinion, the most of the money should be spent for preventing diseases at the places enumerated in the Senator's amendment, rather than those that are enumerated in the bill.

It does seem to me that an outrageously large amount was appropriated in the House; perhaps it is now intended to take half the money appropriated by the House and use it for the purposes specified in this amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not say as to that; but they do say that $25,000 is the minimum they can get along with, and it is very small in comparison with the balance. I think it is the part of wisdom to let them have it.

Mr. SMOOT. They could get along with $500,000 by just adopting the amendment already offered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Possibly that is true, but I do not think we ought to take chances on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have another amendment to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 15, on the same page, strike out "$500,000" and insert "$528,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Since the bill was reported to the Senate I have had a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury asking for an increase in the appropriation for the Public Health Service. On page 20, line 22, I move to strike out "$20,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000." The Secretary of the Treasury has explained it by saying it has become necessary to open additional wards in many hospitals in order to take care of men at the military posts of the United States. I present it from that point of view. It is not perhaps very regular, but I think we ought to give this additional amount. I move to amend by increasing it to $30,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear where the Senator wanted to insert the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. The Secretary will state it.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 22, strike out "$20,000" and insert "$30,000," so as to read:

For fuel, light and water, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 96, after line 12, insert:

Assistance to Senators: For an additional clerk for each Senator for the period of the war and six months thereafter, which is hereby authorized, at the rate of $1,500 per annum, from April 1 to June 30, 1918, $36,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I think an arrangement will be made for all necessary clerks. Surely this is not the proper place for it, and I am surprised that the Senator should offer it. The chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses sent to me to-day an amendment to increase the contingent fund in order to provide for increased expenditures; but surely we ought not to be expected to take up the matter of additional clerks to Senators on this bill. It is not a deficiency in any sense.

Mr. CALDER. I regret that the Senator is surprised at my offering the amendment. I have looked carefully through the pending bill and I find that appropriations are authorized aggregating over $5,000,000 for additional clerk hire and other employees in the different departments of the Government. Mr. President, I pay out of my own pocket for the services of two clerks, and a number of other Senators also employ such additional clerks. Not only that, Mr. President, but some Senators are permitted to pay their clerks higher salaries than are others. I am allowed $2,000 a year for my first clerk, while most Senators—two-thirds of them, in fact—are allowed $2,200 for their first clerks. I am allowed $1,200 for my second clerk, while some other Senators are allowed $1,440. So it seems to me that when department heads can come here and ask and Congress authorizes additional funds to pay for their necessary clerks Senators have a perfect right to do likewise.

The work in my office has doubled. It is impossible for me to keep abreast of it without this additional help. I do not know how many other Senators are in the same position, but I know many are. If the Senate is not disposed to appropriate for clerks for all Senators, at least some provision should be made for help for those Senators who need it. I know that it is unusual to offer an amendment of this kind to this bill, but it seems to me the situation is unusual. I hope that the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], will not object to the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I have not the slightest idea that if this amendment is adopted by the Senate it can be maintained in conference. I am satisfied the Senator is injuring the very object which he has in view. I told him there was a plan on foot—that the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses has a resolution attempting to provide for this matter. Whether or not he can do it I do not know, but it is certainly more appropriate to be provided for in that way than on this bill. The Senate may make any disposition of this matter that it sees fit. I do not desire to combat the amendment; on the contrary, I am anxious to meet the views of Senators like the Senator from New York in a fair, equitable way and in the proper place, but if he wants to inject it here in a way which I think is improper he can do it, and the Senate can do as it sees fit.

Mr. CALDER. Do I understand the Senator from Virginia to say that a movement is in contemplation to provide for the clerks for Senators who need them?

Mr. MARTIN. The chairman of the Committee on Contingent expenses has a plan to increase the contingent fund of the Senate in order to enable this difficulty to be bridged over. He showed me a resolution which he was going to offer. Whether he will succeed in it, of course, I can not guarantee, but I believe there is a general disposition to give relief where it is really necessary. If, however, the Senator from New York wants to put it on this bill it is up to the Senate; I have nothing to say about it one way or the other. I have no idea, however, of being able to sustain it in conference.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question before he sits down.

Mr. CALDER. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to ask what number of clerks the Senator from New York now has?

Mr. CALDER. I have five.

Mr. THOMAS. That is two more than I have.

Mr. CALDER. I am allowed but three clerks, I will say to the Senator from Colorado, and I am paying for two others out of my own pocket.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, my inquiry had reference to the Senator's official force.

Mr. CALDER. I am allowed three clerks, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this question must be met before very long, and I think that it ought to be met by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. There has been trouble in the past when we legislated to authorize a new clerk for any particular committee, that perhaps in three months the Senator holding that committee chairmanship would be given another committee, a change would be made in the chairmanship, and some other Senator who would not require the number of clerks that the former Senator required would succeed him and have more clerks provided than he needed, while a Senator who really did need the clerks could not have them. I know the Senator from New York represents a constituency of nearly 10,000,000 people.

Mr. CALDER. Eleven million, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New York says his constituency consists of 11,000,000 people. His mail must necessarily be larger than that of Senators from most of the other States. Another thing, he lives close to Washington, and he has naturally numerous calls from his constituents, where other Senators have but few. The Senator from New York has discussed this matter with me several times as a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

I will say to the Senator that the reason there has been no action taken in his case is that up to about three weeks ago it was understood that there was to be some policy adopted in reference to this matter, but evidently that has been abandoned. I now suggest to the Senator from New York that he introduce a resolution and have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, asking for an additional clerk, or for two additional clerks, if they are absolutely necessary. That committee will meet and will agree upon some policy which is to be hereafter pursued.

I myself think that almost all Senators, when it is understood that we are going to grant additional clerks other than those provided for in the legislative appropriation bill, will ask for additional assistance.
